When life is tedious and unhappy, it means that one is dangerously idle mentally and spiritually. Physical energy is not sufficient. Man is the incarnation of a spiritual power beyond human conception to understand. The lives of great men and women illustrate the working of this spiritual force. Like a living medium, man is the actual presence of God's spiritual power. Not alone in the formal duties of religious profession, but in every noble, God-like act; in every virtue of valor, wisdom, and the finer nature of man does this spirit express itself. For every one's duty there is the grandeur of divine presence, and for ever man's vision of the ever-distant ideal there is meaning of life to satisfy the soul. One is as immortal as one's spiritual treasures, though death overtake the ship in mid-ocean of human frailty.

"Those Gadarenes."

Were they, or were they not, so bad? Is it not strange that in reading our Bible sometimes, the words we have read all our lives suddenly seem to stand out in a new light, and open up before our eyes, a new vista? Take the Eighth Chapter of St. Luke. For fifty years I have closed my Bible after reading that chapter, thinking what a hard, sordid, mercenary people were those Gadarenes, shutting their doors against the Saviour, and asking Him to depart out of their courts, because He, in curing the maniac, had permitted the devil to go into the herd of swine causing them to run violently into the sea. Was not this instead of sordidness, a superstitious fear of a prophet who could perform such miracles? This being a very long chapter, the eighth chapter is usually divided at exactly the thirty-eighth verse.

Now, if you read through the thirty-eighth, thirty-ninth and fortieth verses you find a wonderful new meaning in this chapter.

The poor maniac, who had been cured, now clothed and in his right mind, was filled with loving gratitude, and begged to follow Jesus, but was told to return to his own home, and tell what God had done for him. "He obeyed the Master, and published abroad through the whole city, what Jesus had done unto him".

What was the result?

We are told that when Jesus returned, as He always does come back, and gives us another chance, the same people received Him gladly, for they were all waiting for Him.

What a wonderful lesson in personal Evangelism, and the wonderful work that can be accomplished by one man, who is filled with gratitude to God, and the desire to obey Christ's command to "tell others".

Can we not all learn something from this incident? And in humble obedience to Christ's command, help towards making Him better known, so that all around us will be "ready and waiting for Him".—Maria G. Neville.

THE RISEN LIFE IN JESUS.

TH ERISEN LIFE IN JESUS.

F. B. Stone.

Triumphant over all His foes,
The Saviour of the world arose;
No taint of death clung to that tomb
From which there sprang "Immortal Bloom";
The Lord and Giver of all life,
Had war with death the mighty strife.
Alleluia!

Dear Saviour, those who sleep in Thee,
Shall like Thy risen body be,
All glorious without, within,
No more to suffer as to sin;
And this Thy wondrous face shall see,
And evermore shall be with Thee.
Alleluia!

We, too, eternal life may share,
Nor need we wait till "over there";
If we will make Thee now our choice,
And follow now Thy Gospel's voice,
Thy blessed life can we know here,
Till we meet those whom we hold dear.
Alleluia!

Life here can very blessed be,
As more and more we rise in Thee;
The greater love we spread around,
The greater joy in Thee is found;
Life there and here become one life,
As Thou in us doth win the strife.
Alleluia!

"We Shall Not Turn Back."

The rediscovery of the Eskimo of the neighborhood of Coronation Gulf is now an old story; and so, to many, is the story of the band of Christian Eskimo who, at their own charges, volunteered to accompany Mr. Fry on his hazardous expedition, but Bishop Stringer's description of the event is more than worth repeating. He depicts the manner in which the facts were set before the Christian Eskimo, and continues:

"It was accordingly arranged that Mr. Fry should go to the East. But he could not go alone, and yet who was to go with him? We thought a few of the more earnest Christian Eskimos might be willing and so we asked for volunteers. We reminded them of the example of the Disciples, who were sent out here and there to the regions beyond. We told them, 'Now you are Christians and your first duty is to teach others those truths that have made such a difference in your lives. If it has helped you it will help others'.

"Then we told them of the conditions and difficulties. The new field was one thousand miles east of Herschel Island. The people were strange and might be troublesome, like they themselves were a few years ago. The country would be new to them, and they would have to trap and hunt for their living. We had no funds for their outfit. They would have to go at their own expense, and on a two years' expedition. It was a severe test, and yet we felt a few might be willing. The Church was packed when volunteers were asked for, and it was at first a little disappointing, as no one responded at once. Then a leading Eskimo said: 'Tell us who is to go? We are all willing, but if we volunteered some of us might not be suitable for the work. Name the persons you think best fitted.' It was a challenge and we wondered mow much it really implied, but we answered, 'Very well, tomorrow morning we shall tell you the names'. That night we prayerfully considered the question, and selected ten, five couples. The next morning all assembled in big tent eager and expectant. As I read out the names I noticed how pleased were those who were selected, while others who were not chosen showed their disappointment on their faces. I am sure we could have had scores of suitable volunteers for the work, but we added only two more to the number; two young fellows who were relatives of some of the others already selected. After the names were chosen I asked the question: 'Now are you willing to go?' They seemed surprised at the question, and replied: 'We asked you to tell us who was to go. You have told us and we are going.' But I said: 'It may be inconvenient for some. If so, tell us now. We do not want any one to turn back later'. The brief answer was: 'But we shall not turn back.' And the answer was characteristic and I believe prophetic. I have never felt to such an extent the presence of the Holy Spirit as during those last days together.

"We met in Church for our last service, soon to separate for our different fields of work. More baptisms, more marriages, and then the words of admonition and counsel and prayer joined in so heartily by all—prayer especially for those going to the regions beyond. There was no apparent excitement, but a tense earnestness, and a quiet determination to carry out the work allotted to each. As Mr. Whitaker and I stood together in the chancel the same thought came to each of us, and was whispered one to the other: 'This is a modern miracle.' 'Yes, think of a few years ago.' 'And these are the same people.' Laus deo."

"Shall he who sows dream of the ears already,
Or grasp at once his summer's fruitful prime?
God's harvest waits for those of purpose steady,
All in His own good time."
—Canadian Churchman.

The Habit of Thankfulness.

Whoever is habitually thankful has a keen insight into the marvels of this beautiful world and the joys within the reach of all God's children. His eyes have been anointed with true vision. In the merry faces of children, in the aspect of familiar fields and woods, in the songs of birds, in the daily routine of home and office, he perceives so much beauty and such glorious tokens of God's providence that his heart beats high with rapture. He opens his eyes upon wonderland as he wakes up in the morning. He closes his eyes every night like a millionaire lying down in a palace. He has so many delights that he does not know which to regard next. He would be overwhelmed with it all, if he were not profoundly at peace. In short, the thankful man sees the world and human life just as they are, just as every one may see them if he will allow gratitude to quicken his mind and his senses.

"FORWARD, MARCH!"

Tune—Hold the Fort.

W. F. Long.

Forward march, the call is sounding.
Shall we heed the call?
Dare we face the foe opposing? You or I may fall.

Forward march, our Leader calleth. Joyfully we go,
Down the Line the call is sounding; hear the bugles blow.

Forward march. Though danger threatens, fight, and do not fear, Saints of God have gone before us, Christ Himself is near.

Forward march, our Leader calleth. Joyfully we go,
Down the Line the call is sounding; hear the bugles blow.

Forward march. When all is over, joyfully we'll sing,
Glory be to God our Father. Praise to Christ our King.

Forward March, our Leader calleth. Joyfully we go,
Down the Line the call is sounding; hear the bugles blow.

Note: The hymn above, composed by the teacher of a Sunday-school class, was sent to The Southern Churchman with the suggestion that other teachers or pupils see what they can do in the way of hymn-writing. We shall be glad to have original hymns, with suggested tunes. submitted for these columns.

CARPENTER SHOP.

Edith Mirick.

There is a charm about a quaint,
Old-fashioned carpenter shop; a fragrant
Odor like incense in sweet, new-cut wood;
A fresh, delicious charm in vagrant,
Curled shavings drifted on a floor.
There is a virility
To the sound of hammer in combat with nail;
A mesmeristic tranquility
In the buzz of saw, eating its predestined route
Through unprotesting wood. I like to watch the fine
Precision of the sharp-edeged chisel
Chipping away impediments to a design.
Wandering so, in this activity, I feel a thrilled
And breathless sense of a creative impulse,
Primitively astir and so vicariously fulfilled.
Sometimes I like to stop
There in its cluttered, noisy peace
And think about a Boy in such another shop
Who, perhaps, stood so—
Thinking big thoughts, dreaming high dreams
So long—so long ago.

HYMN.

Spirt of God! descend upon my heart,
Wean it from earth, through all its pulses move.
Stoop to my weakness, mighty as Thou art,
And make me love Thee, as I ought to love.

Hast Thou not bid us love Thee, God and King?
All, all Thine own, soul, heart and strength and mind.
I see Thy Cross—there teach my heart to cling,
O let me seek Thee, and O let me find.

Teach me to feel that Thou art alway nigh;
Teach me the struggles of the soul to bear;
To check the rising doubt, the rebel sigh;
Teach me the patience of unanswered prayer.

Teach me to love Thee, as Thine angels love,
One Holy passion filling all my frame;
The baptism of the heaven-descended Dove,
My hart, an altar, and Thy love the flame.

Whitetail.

Tad stood on the depot platform of the little mountain town. Down the track he could see the smoke of the great mountain climber as it topped the range. A lump rose in his throat, and for a moment he felt that he could not go. But before he could speak to back out daddy was helping him on the train, his sister Adaline was waving to him and the train was off.

It was Tad's first trip to the city alone. He had been to Aunt Ellen's with mother, but daddy had said that he was big enough to go alone now. He was glad that he had not backed out, for it would not do to be less of a man than daddy thought he was.

In his pocket was a check which he would have cashed in the city. It was all of the money that he had earned in the last year. He was going to buy something for mother, daddy, Adaline and little Buddy. Then the rest he would spend for the things that he needed himself.

As the train pulled in to the big depot he felt a thrill of mingled joy and fear. "But daddy says I'm big enough," he said to himself, and a feeling of self-confidence came to him.

The week that followed was spent in sightseeing and buying the presents for the others. All of the money that he had left he meant to spend for his own things.

He stood on a corner waiting for a car, the car that would take him up town to spend the money.

Around the corner, with a weary, dragging, limping clatter came an old sorrel horse; that is, it appeared old. The driver stopped, climbed down and went into the house. He did not tie the horse; it was needless, that horse would never take an unnecessary step. The drooping head went lower and the dim eyes almost closed. Not the speediest auto or noisiest trolley could kindle a spark of interest in the weary animal.

Tad glanced from the odd mark on the forehead and the white forelock to the white tail, now yellow from neglect.

For a moment a queer feeling made him unsteady. The city and its crowded thoroughfare vanished and he was again back in the mountains. He saw a happy, carefree colt galloping about the barnyard. His long white tail sailed gracefully behind him. An animal, vibrant with life, loving the world and all of the inhabitants that he had encountered in his young life.

"It is yours," Tad seemed to hear daddy say to him. "You must feed it and care for it and it will take you to school and be your companion for many years."

Then he remembered the morning when he was cross and irritable and would not bother to pack up the sorrel's noon feed. With his own lunch strapped to the saddle he rode off.

At noon he ate his lunch, but the correl whinnied and neighed in vain. He pawed the earth with impatience. Then the afternoon bell rang and all was quiet on the school grounds, and he began tugging at the rope.

After school there was no sorrel pony in the shed, only a broken rope and a broken barbed-wire fence.

That was the last they ever saw or heard of him except that a passing stranger had answered that he did see such a pony being led across country by a band gypsies. He said that the pony had a bad barbed-wire cut.

With something that sounded like a sob Tad again became conscious of his surroundings and the sorrel pony before him.

"Whitetail!" he cried, tears springing to his eyes. His arms went about his neck and his face against the white star on the drooping head. "You are Whitetail, I know you are. But why do you look so old? You've been foundered and abused and starved."

The owner of the horse returned. He climbed into the rickety wagon and gathered up the lines and whip.

Tad stepped aside. His heart was thumping. He didn't know what to do.

"Giddap," said the man, but not depending upon this verbal command, he gave the sorrel a smart crack with the whip.

The very idea of striking that half-dead horse sent Tad's blood surging through his veins and an involuntary cry rose to his lips. His whole physical being was in revolt.

"Stop that!" he cried. "Wait."

The man stopped. "Well," he growled, "what do you want?"

Tad didn't know just what he did want or what he wanted to say. "You stop licking that horse," he said. "Can't you see that he is half dead?"

"Half dead?" chuckled the man. "Say, sonny, if that thar horse ain't nine-tenths dead, I'll eat my hat," and he raised the whip again.

However, he did not move. He was eyeing Tad curiously.

Tad thought of the remaining money in his pocket and of the things he meant to buy. Then his memory flashed back to the day when Whitetail neighed in vain. "It's your own fault; it's your own fault," a voice kept saying. "Now what are you are going to do?"

"Will you sell him?' he asked.

"Sure," answered the man, "providin', of course, I can get my price for him. I got a lot of use for him and I'd have to buy another.

Tad's heart sank. He had expected the man to be eager to sell.

The man gave him a searching look. "Looking for a good horse?" he said.

"I would like to buy that horse," Tad said. "How much do you want for him?"

"How much do you figure you'd be willing to pay?" asked the man.

Now Tad was not a good bargainer. He could not conceal his anxiety to buy the horse, nor could he hide his reason.

"I will give you ten dollars for him," he said.

The man chuckled. "I ain't givin' him away." And he raised his whip again.

Well," Tad said timidly, "what will you take for him?"

"Well," drawled the man, "I ain't hankerin' to sell him, but seeing as you want him so badly I'll let him go for twenty-five dollars. That's a bargain price. He's better than he looks."

Tad was on the point of turning away.

"But it's your fault," said the voice again.

He hesitated. In his pocket his hand gripped the purse in which was thirty-five dollars. He was on his way to town to spend it. It meant books, clothes and many little things dear to the heart of the wide-awake boy.

"Twenty-five dollars," repeated the man impatiently.

Tad drew out the purse and counted out the money.

The owner of the horse counted it carefully before pocketing it.

The following day, Tad, with his remaining ten dollars in his pocket, started on his homeward journey, not on a speeding train, as he had come, but on the back of dear old Whitetail, already looking better from his day of feasting and rest.

For days they plodded on, up the winding narrow road into the mountain country. There was no hurry so long as there was money for food. Tad knew how to get the best out of a horse.

Some nights found them far from any kind of shelter, and these nights they slept side by side on the mossy ground. Tad always had matches and a bit of pitchy kindling to start a fire.

But all journeys come to an end and at last they reached Tad's own gate.

There were Buddy and Adaline running to meet him. Mother was standing in the doorway and daddy was leaving his team in the field and coming toward him. How glad he was to see them all.

"Wasn't it lucky," he thought to himself, "that I bought all their presents first?"—Junior World.

The Captured Mother.

"I wonder what those boys are making." Mrs. Hilton stopped to listen as she stepped back from the oven after putting in the potatoes to bake for dinner. "Ted has been at something all the morning. Before Dwight came over I heard him in the shed chamber using his grandfather's tools."

Through the open kitchen door the sound of hammering was distinctly heard.

"Whatever it is, it isn't mischief," smiled Ted's grandmother.

For a moment the noise of the hammering ceased.

"I wonder now if I have time to stir up a batch of biscuits." Mrs. Hilton glanced at the small clock ticking industriously on the mantel. "I guess so," was her hurried decision, "if I'm spry about it."

"I don't know of anything a hearty, hungry boy likes better than some piping hot biscuits, and so does everybody else, for that matter."

When everything was ready, Mrs. Hilton called the boys in to dinner.

"My! but don't they smell good!" exclaimed Ted, as he went to the sink to wash. "How did you know, grandmother, that I wanted some biscuits?"

"Boys always do," was the smilling reply. "You've been pretty busy this forenoon, haven't you?"

"Rather," replied Ted, as he dried his hands on the roller-towel. "But we've got our cage 'most done, and it's a big one. It will hold—I don't know how many birds."

"A good many," added Dwight.

"Birds?" There was a tone of inquiry in Mrs. Hilton's voice as well as a questioning look on her face.

"Yes; we thought we'd made a collection this summer," explained Ted, "and see how long we could keep them. And it won't be any trick at all to get them while they're on their nests."

"I think Bob Skillings got as many as ten kinds last year," said Dwight. "However, I guess they didn't live very long—many of them. Probably he didn't give them the right kind of food."

"I've got a book, which I'm going to loan Ted, which tells the kinds of food the different birds eat, so he'll know, better than Bob did, what to give them."

"I see," was Mrs. Hilton's quiet rejoinder. "Well, I think everything's on the table, and we'd better sit down. I don't imagine grandfather will be back from Yarmouth before one or two o'clock, so we won't wait for him. I know how hungry boys get between breakfast—if they have it early—and dinner-time."

After they had finished eating, Ted and Dwight hurried back to the shed chamber.

"So that's what Ted's been doing," was Mrs. Hilton's sober reflection as she carried the dinner dishes to the kitchen. "I think his grandfather will have to—"

Mrs. Hilton did not finish the sentence.

"No," she said a few moments later, "that isn't the wisest way. I think another plan will be better."

When the cage was finished, Ted called his grandmother out to the shed.

"It's done," he explained. "Isn't it a dandy?"

"'Twill hold a good many birds, surely," was Mrs. Hilton's exasive reply. "When do you expect to begin capturing them?"

"Oh, soon's they commence to hatch their young," replied Ted, as he proudly showed his grandmother how the door of the cage opened on its small brass hinges. "I couldn't get them before that time, I imagine.'

"No, probably not," said Mrs. Hilton, presently going back to her work.

"Grandmother doesn't seem to be as interested in my cage as I thought she'd be," remarked Ted, after Mrs. Hilton had returned to the kitchen.

"It's because she's a woman," ventured Dwight. "Women wouldn't see any fun in catching birds."

"No-o, I don't suppose they would," agreed Ted. He then carried the newly constructed cage over to the corner of the shed, near his grandfather's grain chest.

"Now, grandmother, a story!" demanded Ted that evening, after the supper was over and the dishes done up.

"A story? Why, let me see," said his grandmother.

"Please!"

"What kind of a story?"

"Just any kind," declared Ted; "those that begin with 'Once upon a time', though, I like them best."

"Very well," agreed Mrs. Hilton. "I'll tell you then about a captured mother."

"That will be dandy!" exclaimed Ted, enthusiastically.

"It was long ago," began Mrs. Hilton, "at a time when people lived in a place called 'Make Believe'."

She turned and laid her knitting on the table.

"Here once dwelt a mother and an only son. Her name was Mrs. Dear-to-Her-Boy. One day she was sitting in her snug little home crooning softly to her sleeping child in his cradle, when two monstrous birds opened the door. They didn't stop to knock. At once they pounced upon the helpless and terrified mother, Mrs. Dear-to-Her-Boy, and carried her away into the forest a prisoner.

"When the little boy awoke, hungry, and frightened, there was no mother in the house to feed him and quiet his fears."

"But wasn't his father—"

"His father was far away," interrupted Mrs. Hilton, "working to support his little family, which was left behind in the land of 'Make Believe'.

"One long day and night passed, and then another and another," continued Mrs. Hilton, "and still the giant birds kept Mrs. Dear-to-Her-Boy a pitiful captive. And her one wee son in the lonely little home woefully perished—all for lack of a mother's care."

"And did Mrs. Dear-to-Her-Boy never go back?" asked Ted soberly.

"How could she, made and kept prisoner as she was, by the cruel birds?"

"She—she couldn't," admitted Ted.

The next morning while Mrs. Hilton was getting breakfast, Ted opened the door to the kitchen.

"Do you suppose you could use my cage, grandmother, for a chicken-coop?" he asked.

"I judge so," replied Mrs. Hilton. "But I thought you made it for—"

"A bird-cage?" interrupted Ted. "I did, grandmother, but I'm not going to use it for that—not after your story about Mrs. Dear-to-Her-Boy. I've concluded, since I've been thinking about it, that to her young a captured mother means the same thing, whether it's a boy's, or a bird's."—The Baptist.

What Ailed a Pillow.

Annie was saying her prayers and Nell was playing with a shadow picture on the wall. She was not satisfied to play alone; she would talk to Annie, that mite of a picture in gold and white golden curls, snowy gown, by the bedside.

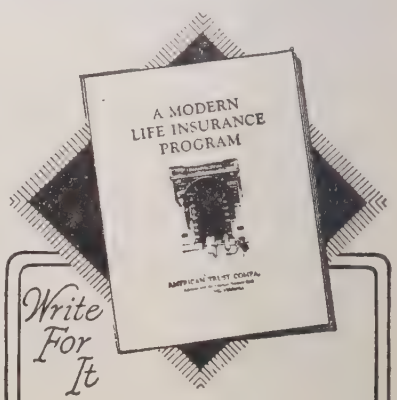
"Now, Annie, watch!" "Annie, just see!" "O Annie, do look!" she said over and over again.

Annie would not look up, but finished her prayer and crept into bed, to which her thoughtless sister followed, as the light must be put out in just so many minutes. Presently Nell took to tumbling, pushing and saying: "Oh, dear!" Then she lay quiet awhile only to begin again more restless than before.

"What's the matter?" asked Annie.

"My pillow," tossing, thumping, kneading; "it's as flat as a board and hard as a stone; I can't think what ails it."

"I know," answered Annie in her sweet, quiet way.



"What?"

"There's no prayer in it."

For a second or two Nell was as still as a mouse, then she scrambled out on the floor, with a shiver it's true, but she made up her mind never to sleep on a prayerless pillow again.

"That must have been what ailed it," she whispered soon after getting into bed again. "It's all right now."

I think that is what ails a great many pillows on which restless heads, both little and big, nightly toss and turn; there are no prayers in them. Nell's remedy was the best, the only one. Prayer made the pillow soft, and she sank to rest as under a sheltering wing. —Selected.

MRS. GEORGE THURSTON WILLIAMS.

At Rockhill, Casanova, Virginia, on Sunday, May 13, 1928, MRS. GEORGE THURSTON WILLIAMS (Sally Berkeley Nicolson). Of her life among us we can only say, "We thank Thee, O Lord".

Of her gracious spirit now we can still say we thank Thee, O Lord, that Thou hast taken Thy child from her long "ministry of suffering", that Thou wast with her unto the end, taking away all fear and dread; that now, in the "Green pastures beside the waters of comfort", no longer blinded by her eyes, and with undimmed hearing

'She may spend in pure converse her eternal day, with Those she has loved long since and lost awhile.'

We thank Thee, O Lord, for all Thy children departed this life in Thy faith and love.

book of remembrance was written for them that feared the Lord and that thought upon His name." Thus far thirteen volumes have been prepared, the names representing every State of the Union and twenty-two territories, possessions abroad and foreign countries. The gifts have extinguished the mortgage on the original cathedral, added many acres of land, established two attached schools and started a theological library.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.

Valuable Service.

The Church Club of the diocese did a valuable service to the large group of clergymen and laymen who attended its regular meeting on May 7. Four speakers discussed topics of importance that are to be brought before the Diocesan Convention when it meets May 22 and 23. The Rev. Robert Rogers, Ph. D., who served for twenty-five years as Secretary of the Convention, spoke of the organization and work of that body, and dwelt upon the importance of its work in the spiritual, legislative and social aspects. The Rev. Richard D. Pope, chairman of the Committee on Canons, rehearsed some alterations in the Constitution that were passed last year and will come up for final approval this year. He also outlined some important changes in the canons which had already been submitted to the committee and would be reported to the Convention. Mr. Raymond F. Barnes, Treasurer of the Diocese, spoke of the budget of diocesan expense, which has already been published and which will be formally presented at the Convention. There are several important changes suggested as to the financial methods of the diocese. Mr. Origin S. Seymour, a lay deputy to the last General Convention, spoke of some matters relating to the General Convention. The Church Club and its new president, Mr. Wm. M. S. Edlin of St. Mary's, Brooklyn, are to be congratulated upon this program, which cannot but result in more intelligent action being taken in Convention.

Visitation Evangelism in Astoria.

The rector of St. George's, Astoria, the Rev. Aubrey P. Nelson, reports most satisfactory results from cooperation with neighboring denominational churches in a campaign of "visitation evangelism". Twenty-three parishioners of St. George's, and the rector, went out every night for a week, simultaneously with workers of thirteen other congregations. St. George's workers made one hundred and seventy-five calls at homes of newcomers or of inactive members; secured seventy-five signed pledges of re-enlistment; gathered ten candidates for baptism and fifteen for confirmation; and the attendance at church on Palm Sunday and Easter was the best for several years. It is further said that the spiritual enrichment of the participants was the most valuable result of the campaign. The Rev. J. I. B. Larned of the National Council is quoted as being greatly impressed with the success of this particular campaign.

Diocesan G. F. S. at St. Bartholomew's.

The annual service of the Girls' Friendly Society in this diocese was held in St. Bartholomew's Church, Brooklyn, May 6. The rector, the Rev. Frank M. Townley, D. D., officiated. A good number of the clergy were present. The preacher was the Rev. Samuel M. Dorrance, of St. Ann's. About four hundred members of the Society, from a large number of the parishes of the diocese, were present, and marched with their banners in the procession. This is always an impressive sight, and nowhere more so than at beautiful St. Bartholomew's.

Tablet to the Rev. Dr. Swentzel.

A handsome tablet commemorating the late Rev. Henry Christian Swentzel, rector of St. Luke's Church, Brooklyn, from 1892 to his death in 1926, was unveiled in that church Sunday morning, May 6. The tablet is of white marble, with incised and guilded letters, and is affixed to the wall of the sanctuary on the gospel side. The officiant was the present rector, the Rev. Rush R. Sloane, and the preacher was the Rev. J. Clarence Jones, S. T. D., rector of St. Mary's, Brooklyn. A large congregation was present.

Other News.

Five times filled to overflowing is the report of St. Stephen's Church, Port Washington, for Easter Day.

The Church Schools of the Diocese will present their birthday thank offering on Whitsunday. The total of the offering will be sent to Hooker School, Mexico City.

New York University at its coming commencement will confer the degree of Doctor of Divinity upon the Rev. Duncan M. Gemns, rector of St. Thomas' Church, Brooklyn.

HARRISBURG.

Rt. Rev. J. H. Darlington, D. D. Bishop.

Offering of the Church Schools.

The Tenth Annual Service for the Presentation of the Lenten Offering of the Church Schools in York and Lancaster Counties, in the Diocese of Harrisburg, was held in St. John's Church, York, the Ven. Paul S. Atkins, rector, on Sunday afternoon, May 6. The principal speakers were the Rev. W. Joselyn Reed, of Bendu, Liberia, and Bishop Darlington, who also awarded the banners to the schools with the highest per capita offering. The Rev. Harry G. Hartman, of Lancaster, acted as master of ceremonies. For schools with an enrollment of more than one hundred pupils, St. John's School, York, was awarded the banner for the highest per capita offering, $4.30, their total offering amounting to $1,011.23. The banner for Schools having an enrollment under one hundred, with the highest per capita offering was awarded to All Saints' School, Paradise, which had a per capita offering of $3.81, and a total offering of $49.48. The presentation service was very impressive. Vested choirs from the participating schools marched in a procession around the church carrying crosses, flags and banners.

Shortly after he became rector of St. John's Parish, York, the Rev. Paul S. Atkins suggested to the late Rev. G. F. Gladding Hoyt, then rector of St. Paul's Parish, Columbia, the holding of an annual service for the presentation of the Lenten offerings after the manner followed in the Diocese of Pennsylvania. Mr. Hoyt, who was then Chairman of the Department of Religious Education in the Diocese of Harrisburg, and deeply interested in everything pertaining to the welfare of the Church's children, heartily endorsed the suggestion and plans were formed immediately to carry it out. At first it was intended to emrace the entire Archdeaconry, but owing to the distances involved and the fact that no church edifice would be large enough to hold the congregations, it was decided to limit the territory to the Church Schools of York and Lancaster Counties.

Because of its central location, the first service was held in St. Paul's Church, Columbia, on the Third Sunday after Easter, May 11, 1919. At the first service the total offering was $1,366.41. In 1927 it reached $2,765.55. This year it exceeded $3,000. The continued success of the services has been due to the loyal cooperation given by the clergy, choirs, and Church Schools. It has also been a source of satisfaction that Bishop Darlington has been able to attend nearly all the services.

A. A. H.

In the deepest night of trouble and sorrow God gives us so much to be thankful for that we need never cease our singing. With all our wisdom and foresight we can take a lesson in gladness and gratitude from the happy bird that sings all night, as if the day were not long enough to tell its joy.—S. T. Coleridge.

Personal Notes

After June 1, 1928, the address of the Rev. M. L. Tate, rector of Holy Trinity Church, Memphis, Tenn., will be 1062 Tally Place, which is the address of the new rectory built by the people of Holy Trinity.

The Bishop of the Diocese of Bethlehem has appointed the Rev. B. H. Crewe, assistant in St. Stephen's Church in Olean, N. Y., to take charge of Christ Church, Forest City, and St. James' Church, Dundaff, the beginning of June. The Rev. H. W. Stowell has been looking after these missions since January 1, 1928.

The Rev. Wallace Goodfellow of St. Andrew's Church, New Orleans, will take charge of St. Paul's Church, Montrose, and the missions of St. Matthew's, Stevensville, and St. Andrew's, Springville, in June. The Rev. C. J. Wagner, lately returned from the missionary district of Haiti, has served as locum tenens in St. Paul's since the resignation of the Rev. Mr. Weatherly.

The Rev. George Benson Cox, lately curate of St. Clement's Church, New York, has become curate at Trinity Church, Hewlett, Long Island, and vicar of Trinity Chapel, Valley Stream, Long Island. He will live in Valley Stream and have charge of the work there, but will minister in the mother parish as well.

Bishop James R. Winchester has been permitted to return to the Diocese of Arkansas, after spending the winter in El Paso, Texas. He is at home in Little Rock; but is not allowed to do any of the work of the diocese. His general health is splendid, but he is forbidden to use his voice until his throat regains its strength.

The Rev. John Ridout, Jr., has resigned the rectorship of the Church in Fayetteville, Ark., and has taken residence at the DuBose School, Monteagle, where he is one of the professors.

The Rev. Joseph K. Clair, who has been in charge of All Saints', Williamsport, Pa., has been elected rector by the vestry, effective June 1.

The Rev. R. A. Hatch, of St. Luke's, Altoona, Pa., has had a physical breakdown and has, with his wife, gone to a hospital in St. Louis, Mo., where both of them may have to undergo surgical operations. Archdeacon Eastment, of Philipsburg, is officiating in the rector's absence.

THE LIVING PAGE.

F. B. Stone.

As God doth daily turn each page of life,
We may not alter what is written there,
Each thought, each word, each deed has its own place,
And may we see each page indeed is fair.

But Christ will be the Judge of its true worth,
His eyes are clear, His love one cannot doubt,
And if He finds there any evil thing,
And we repent, He will blot the record out.

Though Jesus will blot out each sin-stained page,
When it's repented of confessed, shall we Rejoice to see no written pages there,
Of things we've done or borne for Him, to see?

His Hand alone will open that sealed book,
Of deeds done in the flesh, with wills quite free,
Against them there will stand His sacrifice,
"I died for you, what have you done for Me"?

MAGNA CHARTER

A PETITION,

To the Right Reverend John Gardner Murray, D. D., Presiding Bishop of the Triennial Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church in America:

This petition respectfully asks that you give consideration to official action by the Convention over which you preside, designating some Sunday of each year on which special services and observance be held and sermons or addresses, delivered in all Protestant Episcopal churches in commemoration of the signing of Magna Charta, at Runnymede, June 15, 1215.

The vast and enduring importance of the event are familiar to all. The innumerable blessings it has brought to the world, and especially the English-speaking peoples, seem to your petitioners to call for formal, public, regularly ordained manifestation and expressions of our gratitude to God for directing and permitting it.

We further submit that it would be especially appropriate that the Protestant Episcopal Church as daughter and representative in the New World of the Church of England, take the lead in keeping fresh in the minds of the people and the children who are to come after us this foundation on which two great Christian governments and the liberties of more than three hundred million Christian people are established and the thanks for it we owe to God.

Your petitioners are humble and loving members of the Church and loyal citizens of the United States, and a number of them are members of an organization of citizens of this country and Great Britain formed and maintained to perpetuate the grateful memory of Magna Charta and the significance and effects of that great document that brought to the history of mankind a new epoch.

All persons interested in above will please sign this page and mail same to J. W. HAMILTON, 740 Fuller Avenue, St. Paul, Minn.

TRINITY

Holy, Holy, Holy! Lord God Almighty!
Early in the morning our song shall rise to Thee:
Holy, Holy, Holy! merciful and mighty!
God in Three Persons, blessed Trinity!

Holy, Holy, Holy! All the saints adore Thee,
Casting down their golden crowns around the glassy sea;
Cherubim and seraphim falling down before Thee,
Which wert, and art, and evermore shalt be.

Holy, Holy, Holy! though the darkness hide Thee,
Though the eye of sinful man Thy glory may not see,
Only Thou art holy; there is none beside Thee,
Perfect in power, in love, and purity.

Holy, Holy, Holy! Lord God Almighty!
All Thy works shall praise Thy Name, in earth, and sky,
and sea:
Holy, Holy, Holy! merciful and mighty!
God in Three Persons, blessed Trinity!

We ask not, O Father, for health or life. We make an offering to Thee of all our days. Thou hast counted them. We would know nothing more. All we ask is to die rather than live unfaithful to Thee, and, if it be Thy will, that we depart, let us die in patience and love. Almighty God, who holdest in Thy hand the keys of the grave to open and close it at Thy will, give us not life if we shall love it too well. Living, or dying, we would be Thine.—Fenelon.

VIRGINIA PRINCIPLES

By LYON G. TYLER, L.L. D.

This historical and illuminating address by Dr. Tyler, published serially in recent issues of SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN, has met with a most generous reception and approval by students of Virginia history and departments of research in all parts of the country. It is a fearless exposition of the fundamental principles upon which the Commonwealth of Virginia was founded, by which it grew, for which its people fought and to which we still adhere.

The complete address is now being put in pamphlet form and will be supplied at the price of 50 Cents a copy, postpaid.

RELICS

Recently the original manuscript of "Alice in Wonderland" was bought by a collector for $70,000. Doubtless there are copies of the story, some of them of editions that were cheap, cherished by mothers, so precious, bringing so many tender and beautiful memories, that their value and meaning could not be expressed in any quantity of money. Torn, soiled, marked with random pencil sketches, the pictures daubed with paints of colors chosen by childish whim and applied by uncertain, childish hands, "Alice" and Mother Goose, and the other books which pleased children, are kept in many homes. Taken sometimes from the places in which they are hidden, looked at through tears, soothing and gladdening to the heart as gentle rain to an arid and thirsty soil, or scorching and stinging, yet mingled with the mysterious luxury of glowing heart happiness, recalled through intervening darkness of bitterness. For the restless, eager hands by which the books were daubed and scratched and torn may have been last seen folded, pale and still, over tranquil breast; or they may have grown to strength of manhood and womanhood and be far away; or the clasping and caressing and loving patting of them, so delicious in bygone years, may be known no more because neglect or alienation have come. Even when the hands that tore and soiled the books are yet near and ready with token of abiding affection and loyalty, they are not the child-hands that by their helplessness drew from sweet depths the yearning and brooding maternal love and care and instinct of watchfulness and affection. The child hands take lasting hold on the woman and mother heart and cling there through all the varying changes and lights and shadows that time and circumstance may bring, until the heart ceases from throbbing.

It is the mothers who most faithfully care for and fondly remember the relics and reminders of babyhoods and childhoods—the torn books, broken toys, first little attempts at letters, the photographs, locks of hair, garments long out of fashion, scraps, fragments, valueless and meaningless to all but themselves, but to them dearer than life, essential, interwoven parts of their lives. These mothers know the history of each crack or scar, on wall, or furniture, or floor, telling the misadventures and heedlessness of growing boys and girls. Yet all of us, the busiest, the most stalwart, the weakest, the poorest and the richest, gather relics, good and bad, helpful or harmful, all through our lives. The most pitiful and contemptible of us are the cold, selfish, egotistical, vain people who remember and cherish nothing but the compliments they may have received—which they put away resentfully as inadequate to their merits—the fancied or real wrongs done them, instances they think they have known of the injustice of Heaven and the depravity of humanity. There are such. The great majority of us gather many kinds of relics, visible and tangible, or put away in our memories, good and bad, pleasant and ugly, like the conflicting impulses of our natures. The mother who gathers and garners the relics of the babyhood and childhood of her children, gives to the children relics of herself to go with them through life, as do the father, the teacher, all who reach the mind while it is freshly receptive, quick to seize and hold impressions. Through all the vicissitudes, the storms and calms, strifes and victories of life, these relics from the dawning live with us, in us, to the last setting of the sun and lighten and brighten or darken and embitter.

All life is thronged with mysteries, mysterious contradictions, bewilderments of large and long consequences from causes apparently small, of uttermost endeavor and great purposes fading to futility. The baby living but a few days may leave with its mother a passion of tenderness and longing to be helpful and kind which will be felt for the betterment of many people generations after her death and among those to whom her name is unknown. A man may live to be ninety years of age and so live and work as to give the world and the future no good and much evil. A fragment of song or hymn which nobody sings now, heard long ago from a voice long ago hushed, an old letter found, a scrawl or mark or word in a book made by a dead hand, a text, a prayer, a promise, a prophecy, a familiar object associated with past joys or sorrows, with friends or kin, gone beyond sight and hearing, any of these may bring to us on noiseless wings, across the chasm of years messages of comfort, of vain regret and aching pain, stirring and thrilling us to hope and high purpose, or chilling and depressing our best aspirations.

We have our relics as they have come to us and been given us. Those of us who are in old homes are surrounded by furniture, books, pictures, many things recalling to us the past, the people of the past, the children, the old, the love and peace, the jars and discords, the happy days and the troubled, the darkened and the sun-lit, we have known and felt. What relics, then, will we give and at our inevitable going hence leave behind us?

Shall the letter we write today be read years hence to tell of our vindictivness or ill temper, of spiteful and harmful gossip, or of gentleness and kindliness? Will we by written or spoken word, by act and look, plant in memories such records and relics of ourselves as will make shame for us, stir wrath, incite to evil, befoul and becloud minds, cause pangs to sting and burn after we may no more express penitence or attempt alleviation or consolation? Or will we so order our lives and direct thoughts and words that our influence may live after us, pure and sweet as the fragrance of rose and lavender, clinging and lingering through long years after the leaves and hands that gathered them are forgotten dust?

SHORT FAMILY PRAYERS

Reverend Joseph Peterkin, D. D.

SUNDAY MORNING.

ALMIGHTY GOD, who hast promised to hear the petitions of those who ask in Thy Son's name, we beseech Thee mercifully to incline Thine ear to us, who now kneel before Thee.

On this sacred morning we desire to approach Thy mercy seat. Thou, Lord, knowest our necessities before we ask, and our ignorance in asking. Thou knowest the wants of each one of us better than we know them ourselves. And yet Thou dost invite us to tell out our requests unto Thee. Teach us then to ask faithfully, that we may obtain effectually whatever we really need.

Make this, O Lord, a day of blessing to us all. Solemnize our feelings. May we spend much of the day with Thee. Cleanse the thoughts of our hearts by the inspiration of Thy Holy Spirit, that we may perfectly love Thee, and worthily magnify Thy holy name.

Go with us to Thy house of prayer. Keep the world and Satan out of our hearts. Give us, we beseech Thee, a devout and prayerful spirit. And do Thou, who art always more ready to hear than we to pray, and art willing to give more than either we desire or deserve, pour down upon us the abundance of Thy mercy. Forgive us those things whereof our conscience is afraid, and give us those good things which we are not worthy to ask but through the merits of our Saviour.

Grant Thy heavenly grace to all ministers of the Gospel; and that they may truly please Thee, pour upon them the continual dew of Thy blessing.

Bless the preaching of Thy Gospel in this place and throughout the world. Be pleased to awaken all those who are dead in trespass and sins. Make the light of Thy Holy Spirit to shine upon their souls. Take from them all ignorance, hardness of heart, and contempt of Thy word; and fetch them home, blessed Lord, to Thy flock. And do Thou feed all our souls with sound and wholesome nourishment, and lead us safely on our way to Heaven.

O gracious Father, we beseech Thee mercifully to incline Thine ear to us, who have now made our prayers and supplications unto Thee. Send us not away from Thy throne without a blessing, but now and ever vouchsafe to hear us, not for our own righteousness, but for the worthiness of Thy Son, Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

Our Father, who art in Heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth, as it is in Heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation; but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever and ever. Amen.

The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the fellowship of the Holy Ghost, be with us all evermore. Amen.

SUNDAY EVENING.

Almighty God, Father of all mercies, be with us on this the evening of Thine own day. We, Thine unworthy servants, do give Thee most humble and hearty thanks for all Thy goodness and loving kindness to us and to all men. We bless Thee for our creation, preservation, and all the blessings of this life; but above all for Thine inestimable love in the redemption of the world by our Lord Jesus Christ, for the means of grace which we have this day enjoyed, and for the hope of glory hereafter.

O Lord, remove our ignorance and dullness of heart. Show us our exceeding sinfulness, and convince us of our need of a Saviour. Lead us to Christ. Grant us perfectly to know Him to be the way, the truth and the life, that, following His steps, we may walk in the way that leadeth to Heaven. May the Gospel of Christ prove to be the power of God unto the salvation of our souls. Grant that the words which we have heard with our outward ears may, through Thy grace, be so grafted inwardly in our hearts, that they may bring forth in us the fruit of good living, to the honour and praise of Thy name.

May it please Thee to bring into the way of truth all such as have erred and are deceived; to strengthen such as do stand; to comfort and help the weak-hearted; to raise up those who fall; and finally to beat down Satan under our feet. May it please Thee to have mercy upon all men; to give us true repentance; to forgive us all our sins, negligences and ignorances; and to endue us with the grace of Thy Holy Spirit, to amend our lives according to Thy Holy Word.

We commend unto Thee, O God, all who are dear to us, and also those who are at this time afflicted or distressed in mind, body or estate. May it please Thee to relieve them according to their several necessities, giving them patience under their sufferings, and a happy issue out of their afflictions.

And now, O Heavenly Father, we desire to put ourselves under Thy protection and care for the coming night. We will lay us down to sleep and take our rest, for Thou only makest us to dwell in safety. Defend us from all harm. Let Thine angels encamp round about us, and keep us in all our ways.

Accept, we beseech Thee, our imperfect petitions, and all our services, for the sake of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Our Father, &c.

The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, &c.

THE MINISTER'S PART IN PUBLIC HEALTH

Dr. Ennion G. Williams

The following is the address delivered by Dr. Ennion G. Williams, State Health Commissioner, before the Social Service Section of Council of the Diocese of Virginia in Grace and Holy Trinity Church, Richmond, Va., on May 22,1928.

I WISH to begin this talk by quoting from Christ Himself. He said: "A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me, the works that I do, shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do."

Recently I talked with a missionary who had returned from China. We have a rather vague idea of the fatalism of the East and of Eastern creeds; and we vaguely appreciate the difference between our attitude toward our fellow men at large and the attitude of the Oriental; but this man gave me two concrete illustrations, clearly illustrating this difference and so shocking to our Western ideas that I am sure they will make on you as they did on me a lasting impression.

The first instance. A river boat was loaded with Chinese passengers. They carried with them a lot of household goods, clothing, furniture and boxes. The boat's boiler exploded; and the people and freight were blown overboard. In the vicinity were a number of boats that could have rushed to the rescue and could probably have saved most of the people; but there was no haste. The boats in a leisurely way made for the wreck; but the anxiety of the men in the boats was not about the people whose lives were in jeopardy; these boatmen were far more interested in rescuing goods that would have a cash value. The idea of the Chinese seemed to be that if there were none to dispute the ownership of the salvaged goods, so much the better.

The other incident concerns a tragedy at a fire-cracker plant. The workers were in a large shop. When handling powder, it is natural that occasionally some must drop to the floor, and in the course of time these droppings will amount to a dangerous total. That is what happened. A careless cigarette smoker dropped a match and the powder on the floor ignited. For a short time thereafter there was a hot fire and many of the workers were seriously burned. The 'ricksha men, those human horses of China, hurried to the factory but instead of rushing the sufferers to a local hospital for speedy treatment, they dickered with the victims in efforts to secure the best possible payment for transportation. They exacted undue prices from the men and women who were in agony.

These incidents must arouse your horrified indignation, that human beings could be so callous to human suffering. Yet they represent the attitude of the non-Christian or heathen to his neighbor. I asked the missionary whether the Chinese after they became Christians exhibited a different spirit. He said they did, that when they became Christians they changed their attitude toward their neighbors.

This text and these illustrations naturally set me to thinking to what extent this command applies in our country and in our experience. Certainly it appears that the great philanthropies that minister to the welfare of mankind have their origin in Christian countries.

I can give you some outstanding instances of Christians who are performing most valiantly and devotedly, and of Christians, now dead, who gave their all to help humanity: there are many such.

I may call attention to possibly the richest man in the world today and certainly the world's greatest philanthropist, John D. Rockefeller. Always himself a sincere Christian, he works now mainly through his son, who would have a high place in church and Bible class work, if he were poor instead of being fabulously rich. True religion seems to have guided these men in their benefactions. Religious themselves, they have called as advisers, other exemplars of Christian standards, men who have been leaders in church work.

I might dwell on the father of preventive medicine, Louis Pasteur, the man who stands at the head of those scientists who have benefited humanity. When reading the story of his life and his achievements one is equally impressed with the value of his services and the depth of his piety. I might speak to you of our Dr. Walter Reed, born in Gloucester County, Virginia, the son of a Methodist minister. His letters show the great pleasure he took out of his contributions for human welfare, how he gloried in being able to contribute to the safety and the happiness of his fellow man. These instances could be multiplied indefinitely. Ina letter to his wife, December 31, 1899, he wrote. "The prayer that has been mine for twenty years that I might be permitted in some way or at some time to do something to alleviate human suffering has been granted".

In looking over our field in Virginia there are a number of notable instances where ministers and Christian laymen have taken leading parts in promoting public health work.

There are two things necessary for the promotion of public health in a community; one is the desire and the other is the knowledge. The desire for the relief and prevention of sickness and suffering in a community is born of brotherly love, love of mankind or one's neighbor. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love, one to another." When you are preaching the gospel of brotherly love, you are preparing the way for public health.

Furthermore, Christ says: "Verily, verily, I say unto you: He that believeth on Me, the works that I do, shall he do also, and greater works than these shall he do." What are the works that He did? You know the answer He gave to the messenger from John: "The blind receive their sight, the lame walk, and the lepers are cleansed and the deaf hear, and to the poor the gospel is preached." These are the things that He did and what He said His disciples should do. His disciples are doing those miracles or wonderful things daily in our hospitals, all over the country. The blind are made to see by the removal of cataracts and the use of proper glasses; the orthopedic surgeons are making those walk who never walked before; lately a cure of leprosy has been found.

But Christ said: "And greater things than these shall he (His disciple) do." It is for this generation to know the causes of disease and its prevention. There is one thing greater than cure and that is Prevention.

Smallpox used to be as common as measles and it was the rule, rather than the exception, for an adult to have a pock-marked face. Now smallpox is limited to those who are too ignorant or careless to be vaccinated.

Within the memory of men still in middle life yellow fever was mentioned with dread. Within the memory of older men, yellow fever sometimes took its toll not in decimals of population, but in halves. Only seventy years ago, this awful disease claimed as victims virtually the entire population of Norfolk, half the people died and few of the other half escaped sickness. Less than thirty years ago almost as great a tragedy occurred in a Florida city. We now prevent yellow fever.

During the nineteenth century Asiatic cholera killed thousands of people throughout this country. Our Virginia vital statistics record many deaths from this cause. Now it has disappeared in North America.

Only a few years ago there were lepers in Virginia. Today it is unknown in our state and is steadily disappearing from the civilized world.

As a result of the discoveries in our time it is possible to extend the average length of human life to the Biblical three score and ten. Already it has been extended fifteen years in this generation.

The knowledge regarding the prevention of disease is so simple that it does not require four years in a medical school to master its principles. These principles may be taught understandingly to the children in the grammar grades of our schools. Some of the rules were given by Moses in Deuteronomy. Christ voices the principle when He said, "That which cometh out of the man, that defileth the man . . . " Germs, or poisonous microscopic plants, are the causes of communicable diseases. They are evil spirits. They are invisible to the unaided eye and are enemies to human kind. The disease germs grow practically only in the human body; consequently, the source of the disease germs is the human body and the knowledge of how they leave and enter the body teaches us how to prevent the diseases.

In view of the fact that some of you went to school before these simple principles were taught in the grammar grades, the State Health Department will gladly give any of you the benefit of a correspondence course such as it conducts for teachers and mothers. This information will make any citizen a better and more useful one to his community.

To those familiar with the principles of preventive medicine, no wonder attaches to the decline in preventable disease. To the contrary, it is most disappointing that the decline has not been greater and more rapid. Forty years ago diphtheria killed more people than tuberculosis kills today, yet last year we had only one hundred and forty-two diphtheria deaths in Virginia, and that was just one hundred and forty-two more than we should have had; for diphtheria can absolutely be wiped out. Diphtheria can be prevented by the use of toxin-antitoxin just as smallpox can be prevented by vaccination.

We had in Virginia last year one hundred and seventy-five deaths from typhoid fever. If we were only to consider the reduction during the last fifteen years, this would seem to be a matter for congratulation. The 1927 total was just about one-fifth of the total in 1913; but typhoid fever may virtually be wiped out whenever the people of a state wish to do so. Sanitation prevents the spread of typhoid fever; and, if we sanitate the state, we need only concern ourselves about the carriers and be sure that the disease would be on its way toward ending. Typhoid fever has no place in a civilized community. To show how thoroughly it can be controlled, look at the figures for the army during the Spanish American War and the figures for our encampment along the Mexican border in 1916. There were about 214,000 soldiers in the American army in 1898. More than 22,000 of these had typhoid fever and there were 2,150 deaths. There were 220,000 soldiers on the Mexican border in 1916, and there was one death. Sanitation, plus occasional vaccination, can accomplish the same for the country as a whole.

Tuberculosis, once the "captain of the men of death", is now in fifth place; and, if the present rate of decline continues, it should cease to be a menace in about twenty years. This does not mean that we may anticipate the end of tuberculosis in the near future; but it does mean that its death totals will be almost negligible compared with all figures up to the present time.

I could continue almost indefinitely reciting accomplishments in the field of prevention, but you asked me to tell you what the ministers can do. You can by preaching the Gospel put into the hearts of people the brotherly love by which they will want to protect their neighbor.

The next basis of public health is education. You ministers of the Gospel, can resent and should resent attributing typhoid deaths, or diphtheria deaths, or smallpox deaths or, in fact, any death from a preventable disease to the Father of Mercy. He has given us the knowledge which, properly utilized, would prevent those deaths; and it is blasphemy to hold Him responsible for our own ignorance or inattention.

You, especially those of you who live in rural sections and preach to country congregations, can urge sanitation. This is a fundamental of prevention. The decline in the terrible death rates of the middle years of the last century began when cities started to install public water supplies and general sewerage systems. Even before we understood what we now know about the purification of water, these improvements cut the death rate. The modern city could not endure without its water supply and its sewers. Farm homes can be made as safe as city homes by a little knowledge and slight expense.

How better can man show his love for his family than by protecting them against harm? How better can he show his love for his neighbor than by affording him a like protection? Ho wbetter can he show his love for God than by obeying God's mandate—"Love thy neighbor"?

Men are working zealously and unselfishly in laboratories and in fields studying ways and means for combatting epidemics, for destroying sources of diseases, for providing agencies of prevention. You leaders of thought can more than any other class of men make people realize that health work is no fad or fancy, that it is a fact—that science has given us the means of protection and that it is our duty to God and to ourselves to utilize this knowledge.

Preach this doctrine occasionally to the people. It is good religion because it is in accord with what Christ taught and did. He has given you the opportunity of doing even greater works than He did. "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free"—free to enjoy life and to help others.

NOTES ON THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

The Reverend W. F. Bumsted

IT is purposed in these notes to touch upon the historical aspect as well as the contents of the Prayer Book as they are today.

As the question of the Thirty-nine Articles is a pertinent one at the moment, let us look at this instead of beginning in the usual way with the Preface.

In one of the Church papers lately published, an article on the rejection or retaining of the Articles, on being read, left somewhat of this impression, "That the Articles were made by sixteenth century ecclesiastics to cope with sixteenth century errors, and as we are now living in a different century and the errors are no longer present then reject the Articles as of no further use".

If such is the case, then carefully remove the said Articles—bind them in calf or morocco, and put them on the library shelf, and forget them—but if such is not the case, then retain them and use them.

Historical.

Our Articles, as we have them now, owe much directly or indirectly to the Continental Formularies. Up to the Reformation there were only the three Creeds—as formularies of the Faith of the Church. In the sixteenth century when so many different countries were endeavoring to get back to a primitive faith, our Reformers felt that it was necessary to define their position by:

(a) Positively establishing their Catholicity.

(b) Formally rejecting the Errors of Rome.

(c) Repudiating the errors of other Reformers who in the revulsion from superstition were disposed to abuse the right of Private Judgment and rush into dangerous extremes of these Formularies.

The Schwabach Articles are the first. They were drawn up in 1529 under the auspices of the Elector John of Saxony at the Convent of Schwabach. Their purpose was to reconcile Lutherans and Zwinglians.

These articles in turn became the base for the Confession of Augsburg—a collection of twenty-eight articles—twenty-one doctrinal and seven dealing with ecclesiastical abuses.

These articles influenced the thirteen articles of 1538.

English Formularies.

Ten Articles of 1536.

They were transitional to a certain extent in tone. They avoided and qualified Lutheranism, excluded Anabaptist Teaching. They were as sympathetic as possible with the old order. Five of them were doctrinal, dealing with grounds of Faith: the sacrament of Baptism, Penance and the Altar, and the doctrine of Justification. Five dealt with "laudable" ceremonies used in the churches—images, the honoring of saints, prayers to saints and purgatory.

These articles are characteristic—they partly cling to the old position and partly draw away from it.

Although these articles were virtually superseded within a year by the Bishops' Book, yet much of their contents was contained in that Book, and as that book never received formal sanction, the ten articles remained legally in force until the publication of the King's Book.

The Bishops' Book, 1537.

The Bishops' Book, 1537, so-called because it never received royal authority, was drawn up by the Bishops, Cranmer presiding. It contains exposition of the Apostles' Creed, Seven Sacraments, Ten Commandments, Paternoster and Ave Maria, one article on Purgatory and one article on Justification.

Thirteen Articles of 1538.

These were the result of the Lutheran Embassy to England. The Confession of Augsburg was the basis of this Formulary. They were never published, but were found among Cranmer's papers. They are the connecting link between our Thirty-nine Articles and the Confession of Augsburg.

Six Articles of 1538.

This collection drawn up when Gardiner was in power, was so hostile to the Reformation that it was called "the Bloody Statute of the Six Articles", or "the Whip with the Six Strings". Their object was: 1. The enforcing of Transubstantiation. 2. Communion in one kind. 3. Celibacy of the Clergy. 4. Obligation of Vows of Chastity. 5. Use of Private Masses. 6. Auricular Confession.

Forty-two Articles, 1553.

These are the basis of our present articles. They were drawn up by Cranmer "for the preserving and maintaining peace and unity in this Church". They were published by the king's command in 1553 and all beneficed clergy were ordered to sign them under penalty of deprivation.

Eleven Articles, 1559.

Archbishop Parker drew these up as a reply to the six articles of Queen Mary's reign, 1539. They were to be accepted by the clergy upon admission to their benefices and to be publicly professed twice a year.

Thirty-eight Articles, 1563.

The forty-two articles of 1553, having been revised by Archbishop Parker, Bishop Cox of Ely, Bishop Guest of Rochester, were presented to Convocation in 1562. They struck out four articles and added four new ones and revised seventeen.

The Convocation struck out three more and then sent the remaining thirty-nine to the Queen for her approval. They were returned with one more article removed, leaving thirty-eight, but they were never enforced as the Queen's authority was not forthcoming.

Thirty-nine Articles.

These thirty-eight articles were finally revised in 1571, and the article struck out in 1563 added, the Queen's authority granted, and the articles thus sanctioned have been in use ever since in the Church of England and in the Protestant Episcopal Church, with the necessary alterations made and added as the Church saw fit to do in Convention assembled twelfth day of September, 1801.

Subscription to the articles was intended in 1553, but was not enforced. In 1571 an act requiring subscription was enforced and was in use up to 1865, when the one at present in use in Church of England was compiled. It had first been introduced at Oxford by a Puritan Chancellor at Matriculation to exclude Roman Catholic students.

Thirty-Nine Articles—Exposition.

Articles I to V.

The Holy Trinity. Condemning the errors of Atheism, Tritheism, Pantheism, Apollinarianism, Nestorianism.

Articles VI to VIII.

The Rule of Faith.

Article VI very definitely states that the "Word of God" is first and last the rule of Faith. If in this case this article is removed, it seems almost to follow the Collect for Second Sunday in Advent should also be eliminated.

The Reformers said the Bible, with the Canon of the Old and New Testament was sufficient for our needs of Faith and contained all that was needful for us to know to enable us to fulfill the Christian covenant into which we had been admitted. The article also differentiates between the Canonical and the non-Canonical books, showing the difference between us and the Roman Catholic Church inasmuch as the Council of Trent declared the Apocrypha to be of equal authority with the Hebrew Canon.

The Church of Rome holds that the Holy Scriptures do not contain all that is necessary to salvation, but that the traditions passed down orally are of equal value and must be used with equal veneration.

Our Church places its authority on the Holy Scriptures only.

The fathers appealed to the Bible alone or to the creeds as embodying the teachings of the Bible.

St. Athanasius says: "In these alone (Books of the Old and New Testament) is the doctrine of our religion set forth. Let no one add thereto or take therefrom."

Article VIII deals with the Creeds, put in the articles by the Reformers, so as to state very definitely that the Creeds are to be believed, as being capable of unanswerable proofs from Holy Scriptures, which in Article VI are the Church's Rule of Faith.

Articles IX and X.

The Articles now take up various other doctrines of Faith, relating more to men as individuals. Article IX deals with original Sin and must be combined with Article X. These two together show us that the undeserved favor of God towards us, as seen in the Incarnation, conveyed to us through the Holy Spirit, Christ Himself preventing us (or going before us, as it means), turns us ever to God. Thus our better self is brought into being and we are enabled to cooperate with God.

Article XI.

Justification by Faith only in Jesus Christ.

Article XII.

Good Works. They are the fruit of Faith. They follow after Justification.

Articles XIII to XVIII.

Still continue to take up and consider man individually and refer specially to Lutheran and Calvinistic doctrines.

Article XIX.

Condemns the doctrine of Infallibility of a Church, referring to Rome, and upholds the doctrine that "a Church is a congregation of believers in our Lord Jesus Christ", characterized by Preaching the Pure Word of God and Administration of the Sacraments, according to Christ's Institution.

Article XX.

The object of this article was twofold: (1) To check undue depreciation of the authority of the Church in matters ceremonial and doctrinal. (2) To indicate the limits of such authority. In brief, the Church has no authority beyond and apart from the Standard of Holy Scripture.

Article XXI.

Omitted from our book because of a "local and civil" nature.

Article XXII.

Composed by the Reformers. The object of this article is to show very definitely "certain matters" repudiated by the Church of England at the Reformation, because these: Purgatory Pardons, Worship and Adoration of Images and Relics and Invocation of Saints, (1) rest upon no authority of Scripture, (2) contrary to God's Word.

The Doctrine.

Purgatory propounded at Council of Florence in 1439 and the Council of Trent decreed that "Souls in Purgatory" may be relieved by the Sacrifice at the Altar. They were originated in a misinterpretation of 1 Cor. 3:2-15.

Pardons, one of the thing that precipitated the Reformation. The Popes found that a lucrative business might be built up by preying on men's hopes and fears and so a wholesale traffic in indulgences spread over Europe. The Reformers' reply is Article XXII.

Worship of Images. This was condemned at Council of Constantinople, 754, but was sanctioned at second Council of Nicea, 787, when it decreed that images might be honored, but not worshipped with the honor due to God alone.

Invocation of Saints. This practice was mentioned in the Litany of 1544, but was struck out in the First Prayer Book, 1549, as being repugnant to the Word of God.

A REMARKABLE SUNDAY SCHOOL CLASS

By the Right Reverend James R. Winchester, D. D.

WE hear much in these days of Christian Nurture and Modern Methods in Church Schools and the thought comes, What good did the old-time Sunday School accomplish in the Parish Church? I may be pardoned for stating an example in my boyhood experience: Shortly after the War Between the States I went to the Episcopal High School in Virginia. I was permitted to attend the Sunday School held at the Seminary, which was virtually the parish church of the neighborhood.

The good women of "the Hill" had classes. I was put in Miss Julia Johns' class and there I received the best lessons of my life up to that time, next to those my dear mother gave me. To this day, when I visit the Seminary Hill I go to the grave of Miss Julia Johns, rather than to my devoted professors, and falling on my knees I thank God for her wonderful life and beautiful influence upon my whole course at college and subsequent career.

In that class were nine boys, namely: Cazenove G. Lee, Frank Dupont Lee, Edmund Jennings Lee, Thomas J. Packard, Louis Cazenove, Robert Emmett Funsten, John J. Lloyd (an irregular attendant, because living far away), Henry Peyton and the writer of this sketch. The nine boys loved their teacher. Why? Because she took a personal interest in every one of her boys. We all learned the Church Catechism and then Miss Julia carried us over "The Thirty-nine Articles of Religion". She left an impression upon my mind and heart of vital truth that time has never erased. Four of that class entered the ministry—Frank Dupont Lee (a magnificent student, whose untimely death left a void in my life), John J. Lloyd, whose influence in Virginia was unsurpassed by any one of his day, and whom we thought would have been Bishop of Virginia. As much as I love Arthur Lloyd, one of God's best servants, John was his peer, in no respect an inferior, and in some respects his superior. Thomas J. Packard, the able linguist, on the Revised Bible Committee, and Assistant Secretary to the House of Bishops, my classmate in the Classics at the High School, always at the head of his classes, was one of that body along with me to enter the ministry. Four clergymen from one Sunday-school class, and two doctors. Edmund Jennings Lee, my beloved roommate at Washington and Lee, for two years, to whom I am indebted for the help-mate of my life, was a physician. "Ned" Lee has left us "The Lees of Virginia", an invaluable book of history. In addition he wrote for the Medical Journals and stands out in my memory as a marked man. Louis Cazenove also became a physician and had a brilliant outlook; but the death of his wife seemed to take away the mainspring of his life. He made a record as student and baseball player at the University of Virginia, and perhaps was the most brilliant boy in the class. Cazenove G. Lee entered the legal profession and spent his life in Washington, D. C. He was one of the most courtly of gentlemen, and during my Seminary course, gave me a comradeship, as I went over to the Grace Chapel in Georgetown for weekly services. "Emmett" Funsten, whose father died of his wounds on the Seminary Hill, just after the war, was left in dire poverty, as the main stay of his family. Emmett became a most successful merchant. He was my Senior Warden when I was rector of the Ascension Church in St. Louis. On our Iceland and North Cape cruise together he was picked out by some expert as the most successful banker of all the tourists (nearly five hundred). He was one of my best friends until the day of his death, having traveled with me through Palestine and Egypt, as well as Scandinavia. His gift of over $20,000 for the Funsten Memorial Building at the Seminary but expresses the appreciation he had of what the Seminary Hill did for him and his family. Henry Peyton? Was his life a failure? He died of lock-jaw during our vacation, a life apparently cut off. He was dear to me and all the boys. His death brought us all more closely to the Cross, where his faith had been placed, through Miss Julia Johns (his devoted Aunt). His death was the secret of much good in the life of all the boys. Miss Julia used his example with me in her private talks and letters. There is to this day a vivid recollection of those impressions. All the boys were confirmed as boys and Miss Julia, I presume, followed each one up, as she certainly followed me with sympathy and congratulations at every step.

That class was composed of ordinary boys, but we all caught beautiful visions of our vocations in life. Through her I got in closest touch with her saintly father, Bishop Johns, who aided me in my theological course at the Seminary. One of the high honors of my life was to be a "pallbearer" at the funeral of Bishop Johns, and I value the Life of Bishop Meade that Bishop Johns wrote, which was presented me as a memorial of that sad occasion by Miss Julia. I then had the privilege of living at her home, with C. Braxton Bryan, as protectors and members of Miss Julia's household.

What did she teach? She taught us first of all to love the Saviour, and this she did by her beautifully consecrated life. Her sympathy helped us at every step. She was interested in all we did and had us in her home for a saucer of ice cream occasionally. Her smile never failed and she found no fault with us if we could not answer the questions of the class. She was devoted to the Church as based upon "The Thirty-nine Articles" in her teaching. The Church to her was the Body of Christ and He was a personal Saviour to her own soul. I think of her as "constrained by the love of Christ". When I went to Bishop Johns with my perplexities regarding the Holy Ministry, I said: "Bishop, I do not feel that personal interest in the souls of men that I ought to have." I had seen it so splendidly brought out in my teacher's work. He said: "Do not let that trouble you. It will come as you go on with your work." I have found his wise words so true in my entire ministry. Real pastoral visits develop interest in the souls of our fellow men. If I have done anything worth-while in a long ministry it has been from the lessons of that consecrated teacher supplemented by the godly counsel of my beloved Bishop. I am the sole survivor of that Sunday-school class. I can see the faces through the dim vista of years and I look forward to the reunion, when my own work is done. With such recollections of Sunday School I must not be censured for lack of enthusiasm over some present methods, which neglect "The Catechism" and do not stress the personal merits of our Lord Jesus for our salvation.

Boyhood treasures of memory, affection and spirit are many. Adelaide A. Proctor said among her last words:

"Thy treasures wait thee in the far-off skies,
And Death, thy friend, will give them all to thee."

PLAIN BIBLE STUDIES

Prepared by J. T. Bougher. Reading Terminal, Philadelphia, Pa.

Note: In this new series of studies effort will be made to set forth in brief form wondrous things that God would have us know as told in His own eternal words.

LESSON—No. 37.
TOPIC—The Greatness of God.
(Read Psalm 19.)

The greatness and majesty of God, is so far beyond the possibility of human conception that even though we spent a goodly portion of our natural lives in the study of His Being, His Attributes, and His Manifestation in Creation and Nature, we would still be far from a full understanding of His marvelous wisdom and power (Rom. 11:33-36; Isa. 40:26).

It is our privilege and duty to learn what we can, however, from the revelation the Heavenly Father had seen fit to give us in the written Word, and in this Lesson we will therefore dwell upon some of the deeper truths concerning the greatness of our God.

1. God is a Spirit, and can only be worshipped in spirit and in truth.—John 4:24.
2. God is eternal; immortal; invisible.—1 Tim. 1:17.
3. God is the Creator of all things.—Neh. 9;6; Jer. 32:17.
4. God's manifestations of personality are many; created; made; called; said; saw; blessed; rested—Gen. 1:1-31; loves; sees; hears; acts. (See manifold references throughout the Scriptures.)
5. While there is but one God, yet God is in three persons; a Trinity, and here we are at once into the presence of what is to man, the mystery of the God-head; i. e., God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Spirit—Gen. 11:7; John 17:22; 2 Cor. 13:15. Perhaps the nearest human conception of this mystery is in the knowledge that in Christ the Son rests all the fullness of the God-head bodily—Col. 2:9; while in the Holy Spirit, there is invested the Divine power. See 1 Peter 1:21 and numerous passages concerning the acts of the Holy Spirit. (See Lessons 14 and 15.)
6. God is Immutable (unchanging).—Mal. 3:6; Heb. 6:17.
7. God is Omnipotent (can do everything).—Job 42:2; Jer. 32:17.
8. God is Omnipresent (everywhere).—Psalm 139:7-12. The presence of the Father God is specially manifested in Heaven as it is the Habitation of God, and where the glory and the throne of God is revealed, and with Christ at His right hand (Acts 7:56; Rev. 4). God the Son was specially manifested on earth—Matthew, Mark, Luke, John.
   The Holy Spirit is everywhere and through the Spirit the Father, and Son also dwell within the believer (1 Cor. 6:19).
9. God is Omnipresent (perfect in knowledge).—Ps. 147:5; Job 37:16. He knows our ways and our thoughts.—Ps. 139:1-6; Job 42:2. His eyes are in every place.—Prov. 15:3; 2 Chron. 16:9. His knowledge includes all nature.—Ps. 147:4; Matt. 10:29. His marvelous fore-knowledge.—Acts 15:18; Isa. 46:9.
10. God is Holy.—Isa. 6:3; 57:15. His holiness is manifested in His abhorrence of sin.—Prov. 15:9, 26, and in the separation of sinners from Himself.—Isa. 59:1-2, and in the punishment of sinners.—Gen. 6 and 7.
11. God is Merciful.—Ps. 145:8. To all that call upon Him.—Rom. 10:9-13. Hence His great love has provided a wonderful plan of salvation, cleansing, and fellowship and to share in a glorious eternity.—John 3:16; 1 John 1:9; Eph. 1:4-7.

There is none like unto the Lord our God."—Ex. 8:10.

FAMINE IN CHINA.

H. J. Timperley, who, according to newspaper cablegrams, was caught in the clash between the Chinese and Japanese recently at Tsinan and escaped only after being shot at and arrested, is a British newspaper man, but he found his connection with China Famine Relief, 419 Fourth Avenue, New York City, a passport to safety.

Timperley represents the Manchester Guardian in China. Early in April, he was commissioned to investigate famine conditions in Shantung and neighboring territory for the China International Famine Relief and to send impartial reports to the China Famine Relief headquarters in New York City. It was this work which carried him to Tsinan where on May 1, he suddenly found himself between the rapidly shifting lines of the Nationalists and retreating Northerners.

On his way to his hotel, during the excitement following the arrival of the Nationalists, Mr. Timperley was arrested by the Chinese. He was released at once, when his identity was established, and he said he had soon found his American connection the "open sesame" to liberty.

Mr. Timperley returned to his hotel only to find that his room had been looted and his personal property stolen, including a set of photographs taken in connection with his famine investigation.

Mr. Timperley started his investigation of the famine-stricken district from Peking early in April and made his first report to the China Famine Relief on April 18 from Tehchow. In the latter city, on the parched plain of Shantung, where the Grand Canal meets the railroad, he encountered a small outpost of American philanthropy, the Williams-Porter Hospital. There, too, he met a stream of refugees plodding doggedly northward through China's great central corridor in search of food.

Not a day passed, he reported, without some emaciated sufferer creeping to the gates of that hospital where the doctors and nurses were facing a difficult problem in trying to care for the unfortunates.

Sometimes, he said, an undernourished mother with a starveling at her breast, would make an appeal for food, while one boy of ten, with his jaws set in a ghastly grin by tetanus, sought help. Often an infant, who had encumbered its parents in the long trek was found lying by the roadside—left there with the hope that some foreigner might find it and take it in.

From Tehchow, Mr. Timperley went to Tsinan to establish a base for his operations. On April 21 last, he reported that first-hand evidence of the condition of the people was gained when he saw old women climbing trees to gather leaves for food, while others scratched grass and roots from the ground upon which to sustain themselves.

He found the refugees miserably housed in straw coops and dugouts where they had lived for months, barely existing on what they could grub from the parched soil and a bowl of thin gruel furnished once daily by the government or the Swastika Society, an organization similar in character to the Red Cross and supported by the Chinese gentry and foreigners. Officers of this organization, he said, were of the opinion that the millions of starving must be further increased unless further immediate relief work was available.

Two days later, after trips into nearby villages, Mr. Timperley cabled that it was difficult to get precise facts and figures about the famine because of the immense territory affected and the present disturbed condition of communication. He also said it was quite evident that the situation, to be adequately handled, called for relief measures equivalent to those employed in dealing with post-war Europe.

Mr. Timperley stated that at least 10,000,000 Shantungese were destitute, which is nearly one-fourth of the provincial population. Of these stricken people, 3,000,000 were endeavoring to reach other provinces or roving Shantung in search of food, he said, while 2,000,000 were reported as starving in their homes, and 5,000,000 reduced to a diet of grass roots, chaff and bran. It was feared between 2,000,000 and 3,000,000 would die before grain was garnered, he asserted, unless relief is given at once.

Arriving at Tungchangfu, Timperley cabled that the 100,000 inhabitants of this walled-city gave heartfelt welcome to him as representative of the China Famine Relief. Approximately 10,000 destitute peasants from the surrounding country lined the streets, he stated, and kowtowed in mute appeal. On the ninety-mile journey from Tsinan, Timperley said he saw plenty of evidence of the desperate straits to which the people had been rduced. Everywhere hundreds of women and children were seen with baskets scouring the countryside for edible grass and leaves like a flock of grazing sheep. In a small village, three miles from Tungchangfu, Timperley declared he found eighty per cent of the people living on stewed weeds mixed with a little kaffir corn.

The day previous to his harrowing experience when he was under fire and arrested, Timperley cabled the New York headquarters of the China Famine Relief, that he had just returned to Tsinan after a three-day tour of investigation with the Rev. C. W. Troxel, an American missionary. They were furnished a motor car by the Civil Governor and escorted by a Chinese military officer through Western Shantung and into the province of Chihli—all famine territory.

"The main impression I brought back from the three hundred and fifty-mile trip," Timperley cabled, "is an unforgettable vision of thousands of honest, hard-working farmers struggling grimly to hang on to their little bits of holdings with no better outlook than a slow, painful death by inches for themselves and families.

"This is not a spectacular famine, except for the unending stream of fugitives wearily trundling their high-piled wheel-barrows along the main roads leading to the north. There was not a single stage of the whole journey when I did not find well over half the population living on leaves and weeds. The life of the Chinese peasant is a hard matter at the best of times, but previous reports, if anything, understate the terrible intensity of the struggle for existence which he is now facing with such fortitude. Every day the need becomes greater and the suffering more acute."

Timperley came out of the stricken district thoroughly convinced that the situation had been grossly underestimated. Many persons, who at first glance seemed to be getting on fairly well, he found, really have come to the end of their endurance in their efforts to await the next harvest.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSSE

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed—"Thy word have I hid in my heart" (Psalm 119:11).

This week the following verse was submitted by the Rev. Kenneth Mackenzie, of Westport, Conn.:

> "I know the thoughts that I think toward you, saith the Lord, thoughts of peace and not of evil to give you an end and expectation" (Jeremiah 29:11).

Who will send one from the far-away places, as well as very near us?

A COMING TREAT.

Readers of "The Southern Churchman" will be interested to learn that our columns will soon carry each week a series of Bible Studies prepared by Mr. W. W. Rugh, Associate Dean of the Bible Institute of Pennsylvania, located at 1418 North Sixteenth Street, Philadelphia. These studies will take the place of the Plain Bible Studies by J. T. Bougher, which with the fortieth article will have run their course, and which we hope to reproduce shortly in pamphlet form to meet the call.

The studies prepared by Mr. Rugh will be of special interest and meet a much-needed type of teaching, in the direction of revealing the Person and work of our Lord Jesus Christ, the beloved Son of God, throughout the Holy Book, and especially in the Old Testament where He is so little recognized, even by many of His own followers and redeemed ones.

Our readers will do well to closely follow these coming studies and thus come to a fuller knowledge of Him "in whom is hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge", and before whom some day "every knee shall bow". Kindly tell your friends about it.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letters to the Editor" will appear in our columns except those coming to us signed by writer.

REALITY IN RELIGION.

Mr. Editor:

It would seem sometimes that our religion were either materialized or spiritualized out of existence; and one fault is as great as the other, as each accomplishes the same terrible result. Do not extremes always lead to error? Do not some people really dread to feel that He is "closer to us than breathing, and nearer than hands and feet"? Is it not a fact that we often use words of great import, vital, dynamic; and yet in our minds we denature them until they become as tame and useless as cotton wool?

Sunday morning, after reading a certain article on the Lord's Supper, at breakfast, the following conversationette took place: "Do you think it possible for me to be Really Present somewhere else when my Body is right here?" Answer: "Yes, I know it."

"Then, you really believe that I could be Present Here, that you could Realize my presence here, even though my Body was somewhere else?" Answer: "Why, yes. Your affections and your will; your heart and your thought, your spirit could be Present here or elsewhere; and after all, your Spirit is You." But, of course, that is "up in the air"!

But suppose a beloved mother conscious, but knowing that the end is near, should say: "My children, whenever you gather here in this room for prayers in remembrance of me, I want you to know that I shall be Really present with you." Could it not be realized? And would not that presence be felt as Real in just that degree in which her children loved her, and believed? Ordinary far-fetched illustrations, we admit.

But when the Divine Saviour promised that He would be With them that believe, trust and love Him, surely it MEANS tremendously. And still more when He said: "Wherever two or three are gathered together in My Name, there am I!" He is present everywhere; and we want Him to be present Somwehere also. If He is present at all, He is REALLY present: and if He is NOT really present, then it is just as true that He is really Not present.

Now, one "Somewhere" we may feel Him present is in that wonderful service of Commemoration which He commanded. If we can forget all about Transubstantiation for a time, and also avoid the "mere symbolism" idea, we may really and truly feel and know Him to be present really in that sacrament of His Body and Blood. It would seem puerile for one to theorize as to just what moment He becomes present, or in just what manner He is present; but that He IS Present Really, we ought to have faith and love enough to know.

Plain every-day Christians know that if there is any Presence at all, it is a Real Presence, and that He is Really Present. There cannot be too much reverence, nor too much earnestness, nor too much feeling of awe in entering into that sacrament. Why should one desire to lessen such an attitude of approach? Here is the Sacrament, the "outward and visible sign" of the blessed Body and Blood of Him Whom we love, and Who loved us and gave Himself for us! It is a time for reverence and holy awe. And why should we seek to pry out of one another, or seek definitely to state ourselves just exactly the "what", the "how" and the "why" of the matter? Is it not enough that here we meet Him "face to face"?

On a winter Sunday in the cold at 7:30 in the morning five business men came to this simple service. No others were present. Why do you suppose they came? It is well that they know little of the controversies concerning the materialistic view, nor of theories that would make it of no value! It must be that they came in order that their "sinful bodies might be made clean by His Body, and their souls washed through His most precious blood that they may evermore dwell in Him, and He in them"!

Because the heating apparatus had not been installed, it so happened that the first service in the new Church was the simple Communion Service at seven-thirty on a February morning. Two-thirds of the membership came to the Communion. Who would desire that each should write down what was in his mind and heart that morning? One thing it was: the Holy Eucharist, a Great Thanksgiving!

In this same Church on Christmas Eve night at twelve o'clock, for the first time, we participated in such a service. ONE had been honored; the Church was decorated; again the glad welcome is to be shouted! Two-thirds of those on the register were present. The realistic hymns were sung. Was there ever such a Night? Was the announcement of the Angel ever so real? "Hark!" "Glory to God in the Highest!" And Hymn 228, "And now, O Father, mindful of the love that bought us once for all on Calvary's Tree, &c."

The Church was filled with His Presence! Why did these people come? The merchants had been in their stores until ten or eleven o'clock—some of them women. There are not many servants. The mothers had been cooking and arranging presents. The physicians had been visiting the sick. And the plumbers doing their work. Were they disappointed? or did they meet Him "face to face"? There might have been one there who did not so meet Him. But to them as a whole, the Lord and Master and Saviour was REALLY PRESENT, and they cared not for the moment, nor the method. To them there is NO presence save the REAL Presence. And this faith is endorsed by the writer, who is a plain Churchman, without frills, and as far from Romanism as the North Pole is from the South Pole; and as far from MERE symbolism as is the East from the West; and who feels that as the symbolism is wonderful and sacred and mysterious, SO THAT which it symbolizes must be far more wonderful and beautiful and meaningful!

ENCOURAGEMENT.

Mr. Editor:

. . . . . I cannot do without your paper. I glory in its stand for the Bible, the Prayer Book, and, above all, for our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ.

Book Reviews

SOME MINOR CHARACTERS IN THE NEW TESTAMENT: By A. T. Robertson, D. D., Litt. D. Cloth. Pp. 182. Sunday School Board of the Southern Baptist Convention, Nashville, Tenn. Price, $1.75.

So long has Dr. Robertson been before the Christian reading public, that any volume from his pen becomes at once the challenge to attention and interest. And this product, lacking in the scholarly penetration of some of his other books, is the more winsome, because it deals with so simple a matter as human life and Christian experience in folk of the humbler walks of life. Of course, the Herods, Caiaphas, Felix, Gamaliel and Pontius Pilate offer background of study on which the loftier virtues may contrastingly shine. We may believe that the Doctor has and yet uses that other long-ago issued volume, Obscure Characters and Minor Lights of Scripture. In the hands of a competent essayist, those lowly men and women, accessory to the greater lights with whom they mingled, can be made to shine with lustrous winsomeness. How we delight to follow Dr. Robertson in his delineation of "The Woman Who Started a Revival". Who is "The Open-Eyed Champion of Jesus" but that valiant born-blind man, whose testimony still rings out as the assurance of the completed work of the Lord?

But one chapter deserves a full notice and most hearty commendation. "The Misrepresented Woman" is none other than Mary Magdalene. Every time our eyes light upon a picture portraying her as art and misguided literature have made her, every time we see the sign of a Magdalene Home, our blood boils. How such a sweet, pure-minded young woman could ever have been thought a denizen of the streets, is beyond computation. Yet, there she has stood, maligned and shame-covered, for all the centuries. By all that is in us for vindication of right, let us redeem her from this disgrace. Dr. Robertson has done it; and we may well thank him.

THE ANGLICAN EPISCOPATE OF CANADA AND NEWFOUNDLAND: By Owsley Robert Rowley. Foreword by the Archbishop of Canterbury. Cloth. Pp. 280. The Morehouse Publishing Company, Milwaukee, Wis. Price $4. In paper, $3.

This exquisitely printed volume challenges admiration from the point of view of workmanship and detail. Its intrinsic worth, lies in the evident accuracy with which the author has compiled the Episcopal record, from the founding of the dioceses to the present. Copious illustrations on delightfully laid paper enhance the attractiveness of the product. Those of us who have come into touch with the Bishops listed, grow warm with affection, at the sight of their faces. Our loved Bishop William Stevens Perry, who felt he could not accept the election to the Episcopate of Nova Scotia; Bishop Courtney, who as the assistant at St. Thomas', New York, in the far-away days, gave wonderful Bible readings in that parish; grateful were we when, having served his diocese, as the Fifth Lord Bishop of Nova Scotia, he came back to the Metropolis as rector of St. James, where he won love and loyalty for the crowning of his last days. We cherish the memory of Bishop Hellmuth, conspicuously named as a converted Russian Jew, whose name and influence has done much to aid the cause of Jewish evangelism. And a few of us will recall with pleasure the face of Bishop Roper, who, while at the General Theological Seminary, as a teacher, gave himself cordially to the cause of parochial missions.

The apostolic diagram on page 5 is, of course, deeply interesting, reaching back, as it does, to Jerusalem, Ephesus and Rome. And American Churchmen will find with pleasure a table of consecrations disclosing the various occasions when the Episcopate of Canada interposed kindly hands at the consecration of a number of our American Bishops, fifty-two in all.

This delightful book should repose on the shelves of many of our American clergy, as a loving witness to the unity of our Church on this side of the Atlantic.

THE CATHOLIC CHURCH AND THE HOME: By Rev. James M. Gillis. The Macmillan Company, New York. Price $1.

The author gives us a clear picture of the forces that are at work to destroy marriage and the Christian home. He rightly traces the movement to its fountain head in the philosophy of revolution that would abolish all standards and set men adrift to follow the distates of their lusts. He offers convincing evidence of a widespread propaganda to overthrow the home and the moral standards that Christianity has set up for its protection. Like some Romanists he cannot refrain from attempting to put much of the blame for the breakdown on Protestants, ignoring his own Church's breaking down of standards by annulment that may in some cases mean nothing more than divorce under another name. He likewise is content to ignore the terrible conditions as to marriage that existed in South Amercan countries after generations of nearly unchallenged Roman influence.

Nor does he mention the New Birth from above, and the power of the Holy Spirit to enable men to keep to Christian standards of conduct, without which power no program of reform can hope to succeed.

AN ENGLISHMAN'S PRAYER.

(Found in Chester Cathedral.)

Give me a good digestion, Lord,
And also something to digest;
Give me a healthy body, Lord,
And sense to keep it at its best.
Give me a healthy mind, good Lord,
To keep the pure and good in sight,
Which, seeing sin, is not appalled,
But finds the way to set it right.
Give me a mind that is not bored,
That does not whimper, whine or sigh;
Don't let me worry overmuch,
About that fussy thing called "I".
Give me a sense of humor, Lord,
Give me the grace to see a joke,
To get some happiness in life
And pass it on to other folk.

DIOCESAN COUNCILS AND CONVENTIONS

DIOCESE OF VIRGINIA.

Discussion of problems of the development of the missionary work of the diocese took up the main portion of Bishop H. St. George Tucker's address at the opening of the one hundred and thirty-third annual Council of the Diocese of Virginia held in Grace and Holy Trinity Church, Richmond, the Rev. W. H. Burkhardt, D. D., rector, on May 23 and 24. The Bishop recommended that a strong commission be appointed to make a real survey of all the missionary work of the diocese, including the mountain work, the colored work and the rural work. This commission was later appointed by action of the Council.

The rural work was kept to the fore in the deliberations of the Council a splendid report being made by the Rev. F. D. Goodwin, rector of Cople Parish on salaries and salary needs of the forty-odd rural clergy in the diocese. The first result of this report was the establishment of a fund of $6,000 for the increase of such salaries to a point nearer a living wage.

The Council also made provision for the payment before the time of the General Convention of the remainder of the amount pledged by the diocese at New Orleans toward the deficit of the General Church.

The Historiographer's report called attention to the fact that the Diocesan Missionary Society which has been the backbone of the missionary work of the diocese was first established by the Convention of the Diocese in 1829 at a time when considerably more than one-half of the one hundred parishes in the original Diocese of Virginia were dormant. The first work of the Society was to send missionaries to revive the dormant parishes.

The Council appointed a committee to arrange for a celebration of the Centennial Anniversary of the Diocesan Missionary Society in 1929. The present Dioceses of Southern Virginia, Southwestern Virginia and West Virginia are the direct result of the work of the Diocesan Missionary Society and will be invited to take part in the Centennial Celebration.

The Council discussed the proposed changes in the Prayer Book and went on record as being strongly opposed to the removal of the Articles of Religion from the Prayer Book. Disapproval was also given to the proposed insertion of a Collect, Epistle and Gospel for the Communion Service in the burial service and to the changing of the first four petitions of the Litany.

Mr. E. Randolph Williams, of Richmond, was elected Chancellor of the Diocese.

The following were elected deputies to the General Convention:

Clerical Deputies—Rev. Berryman Green, D. D., Theological Seminary, Alexandria, Va.; Rev. Frederick D. Goodwin, Warsaw, Va.; Rev. B. D. Tucker, Jr., D. D., rector St. Paul's Church, Richmond; Rev. J. Y. Downman, D. D., rector All Saints' Church, Richmond.

Lay Deputies—Mr. John Stewart Bryan, Richmond; Mr. Rosewell Page, Beaver Dam, Va.; Mr. Robert Beverley, Caret, Va.; Mr. Lewis C. Williams, Richmond, Va.

Alternate Clerical Deputies—Rev. W. H. Burkhardt, D. D., Richmond, Va.; Rev. W. D. Smith, D. D., Richmond, Va.; Rev. W. Roy Mason, Charlottesville, Va.; Rev. G. M. Brydon, Richmond, Va.

Alternate Lay Deputies—Mr. Murray M. McGuire, Richmond, Va.; Mr. John M. Taylor, Richmond, Va.; Dr. James H. Dillard, Charlottesville, Va.; Mr. A. R. Hoxton, Alexandria, Va.

The election of other diocesan boards and officials resulted in the main in the reelection of those already holding office.

The Council accepted an invitation to hold its meeting in 1929 at St. Thomas' Church, Orange, Va.

DIOCESE OF WASHINGTON.

The thirty-third annual convention of the Diocese of Washington was held at St. Philip's Church, Laurel, Md., on Wednesday, May 25. Two unusual features of this convention were: the convention was held in a rural parish for the first time, and an originally planned two days' program was completed in one day.

The Bishop's Address, delivered Tuesday evening, in Epiphany Church, constituting a charge to both clergy and laity, held out in bold relief outstanding needs of the Church today, and may be best appreciated when read in its entirety.

The reports of committees showed encouraging progress in work done in the several fields. The report of the Department of Missions submitted by the Rev. Robert Johnston, Chairman, asked for adequate response to the "Ever changing and growing demands made on the Church by the movement and increase of the population, in and around the District of Columbia". In this report, congratulations were extended to Christ Church, Georgetown, for its request to undertake and care for a mission in the diocese. This requisition was for work over and above its over-subscribed missionary apportionment.

Elections resulted as follows:

Clerical Deputies—Very Rev. G. C. F. Bratenahl, Dean of Washington Cathedral; Rev. Robert Johnston, D. D., rector of St. John's Church, Sixteenth Street; Rev. Z. B. Phillips, D. D., rector of Epiphany Church; Rev. George F. Dudley, D. D., rector of St. Stephen's Church.

Lay Deputies—Mr. Hugh T. Nelson, Secretary of the General Convention Committee; Mr. Arthur S. Browne, Chancellor of the Diocese; Dr. W. Sinclair Bowen; Hr. H. L. Rust, Treasurer of the Diocese.

For Standing Committee—Rev. Geo. F. Dudley, D. D., Chairman; Rev. Joseph Fletcher, Rev. H. Allen Griffith, Rev. Herbert Scott Smith, D. D., Dr. William C. Rives, Dr. Marcus Benjamin, Dr. H. M. Bowen.

Members of the Diocesan Executive Council and other officers were elected also, and others appointed by the Bishop.

The Bishop of Washington presided throughout the convention session.

Tentative plans for the coming General Convention were submitted by Mr. Hugh T. Nelson, Secretary of the General Convention Committee, showing splendid preparation under way, for the General Convention of the Church and its many allied or affiliated organizations. Mr. Nelson gave some idea of the program of the Convention which holds in store great opportunities for the Church people of Washington.

The Diocesan Convention accepted the invitation of Dr. G. F. Dudley to hold its next convention at the Church of St. Stephen's and the Incarnation, of which Dr. Dudley is the rector. A new church building for this parish has lately been begun and is expected to be entirely completed before the next meeting of the Diocesan Convention.

EASTON.

The sixtieth annual convention of the Diocese of Easton was held at Christ Church, and Trinity Cathedral, Easton, Md., April 30 to May 2, with the Rt. Rev. George W. Davenport, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese, presiding.

The sessions began with a men's dinner, when the speakers were Bishop Davenport, the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop of Washington, and the Rev. Percy Silver, D. D., of the Church of the Incarnation, N. Y.

The Bishop delivered his annual address at the opening service of Holy Communion.

The following resolution was adopted:

Whereas at the last meeting of the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church held in New Orleans in 1925, a resolution was passed proposing the omission of the Thirty-nine Articles of Religion from the Prayer Book; and

Whereas, the proposal is to be submitted to all diocesan conventions; and

Whereas, the adoption or rejection of the aforesaid proposal comes up for final action at the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church to be held in Washington, D. C., in October, 1928; and

Whereas, the articles of religion are historically associated with the doctrines and practices of the whole Anglican Communion; and

Whereas, their omission would cause chaos and confusion in our Church and bring sorrow and grief to the great majority of our membership; therefore, be it

Resolved, That this the sixtieth convention of the Diocese of Easton hereby goes on record as being opposed to the omission of the Articles of Religion from the Prayer Book, and the said convention hereby requests the delegates from this Diocese to the approaching General Convention to use all honorable means to prevent the omission of the said articles of religion from the Prayer Book.

Elections were as follows:

Clerical Deputies to General Convention—Rev. W. D. Gould, Cambridge; Rev. Alward Chamberlaine, Centreville; Rev. C. L. Atwater, Chestertown; Rev. Wm. McClelland, East New Market.

Lay Deputies to General Convention—Col. W. Hopper Gibson, Centreville; Mr. Dudley G. Roe, Sudlersville; Mr. Cassius M. Dashiell, Princess Anne; Mr. E. Thos. Massey, Massey.

Executive Council—Rev. R. W. Lewis, Rev. R. R. Gibson, Rev. S. R. MacEwan, Rev. Wm. McClelland, Mr. Clayton Wright, Mr. J. T. C. Hopkins, Mr. C. M. Dashiell, Mr. Claude Bailey.

Standing Committee—Rev. Geo. C. Sutton, D. D., Rev. Wm. D. Gould, Rev. Chas. L. Atwater, the Hon. Wm. H. Adkins and Mr. Edwin Dashiell.

Chancellor—Col. H. J. Waters, Princess Anne, Md.

Treasurer of Convention—Mr. John C. McDaniel, Easton, Md.

Treasurer of Pension Fund—Mr. Harper Skillin, Easton, Md.

Examining Chaplains—Rev. C. L. Atwater, Rev. H. V. Saunders and Rev. Wm. McClelland.

Trustees of Episcopal Fund—Col. W. H. Gibson, Mr. Thomas Perkins, Mr. W. Earle Withgett.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Meeting at the Thompson Orphanage, Charlotte, which it has built up to the point where it is one of the best institutions of its kind in the South, the convention held its sessions on May 8 and 9. On Monday night there was a laymen's rally, which drew men from all parts of the state.

The Rt. Rev. J. B. Cheshire, D. D., presided over the convention, with Bishop E. A. Penick, the coadjutor, assisting him. The messages of the bishops, the reports of the various institutions in which the diocese is interested, and the findings of the committees were of uniform encouragement. An increase in confirmations and in the number of candidates for the ministry were items that were particularly gratifying.

A resolution, which would put the convention on record for the retention of the Thirty-nine Articles in the Prayer Book was tabled. A resolution asking that women be allowed to serve on vestries received an adverse verdict.

The report of the Treasurer of the Diocese, H. M. London, revealed a one hundred per cent payment by the churches in 1927. The report of the Forward Movement Treasurer, J. R. Wilkes, showed all obligations met during 1927, including the full quota to the General Church. A Forward Movement budget of $74,200 was adopted for the year 1929.

Important elections at the convention included:

Deputies to General Convention—Rev. Messrs. M. A. Barber, H. G. Lane, J. L. Jackson and R. E. Gribbin; Messrs. J. H. Cutter, S. S. Nash, W. A. Erwin and A. H. London.

Alternate Deputies—Rev. Messrs. S. S. Bost, Morrison Bethea, I. W. Hughes and T. F. Opie, D. D.; Messrs. T. H. Battle, L. C. Burwell, J. R. Wilkes and Dr. W. H. Brown.

Members of Executive Council—Rev. Messrs. H. N. Bowne and W. H. Hardin; Messrs. J. S. Holes and M. H. Willis.

Standing Committee—Rev. Messrs. M. A. Barber, S. S. Bost and I. W. Hughes; Messrs,. J. B. Cheshire, Jr., and Samuel Lawrence.

SUMMER SCHOOLS AND CONFERFNCES

Virginia Summer School.

The thirteenth annual session of the Virginia Summer School of Religious Education, Sweet Briar College, Sweet Briar, Pa., will be held this year June 18 to 29.

This school is under the auspices of the Dioceses of the Episcopal Church in the State of Virginia. Courses are offered for Church School Teachers and Officers, Leaders of the Woman's Auxiliary, of Young People, of the Church School Service Program, and for Social Service workers. The clergy will find this school most helpful.

Sweet Briar College is easily accessible from both north and south, being on the main line of the Southern Railway.

We urge early registration. All pupils must be recommended by the rector or some parish or diocesan official. On arrival go at once to Gray Hall for assignment of rooms.

Registration Officer for Diocese of Virginia—the Rev. W. H. Burkhardt, D. D., 1502 Park Avenue, Richmond, Va.

For Southern Virginia—the Rev. E. R. Carter, D. D., Walnut Hill, Petersburg, Va.

For Southwestern Virginia—Mr. Thos. A. Scott, Box 1068, Roanoke, Va.

For all others—Mr. Thos. A. Scott, Box 1068, Roanoke, Va.

Persons desiring special consideration as to location of rooms, room mate desired, etc., are expected to have their request in the hands of their respective Registration Officer not later than June 10.

Interdenominational Summer Schools For Pastors in Town and Country Fields.

The Committee on Rural Work of the Home Missions Council, made up of representatives of constituent boards, realizes the great importance of a trained rural leadership which is able to efficiently meet the needs of a community and lead them forward into a fuller and richer life. The Summer School Committee (Dr. Malcolm Dana, Dr. H. Morse, Mr. R. S. Adams, Secretary), in cooperation with State and Church schools recommend each year a list of approved summer schools for pastors at work in town and country fields. It would require a large amount of money and a number of trained leaders for any one denomination to set up summer schools for rural pastors in various sections. These interdenominational summer schools make available to rural pastors of all denominations courses such as the following:

Rural Sociology; Agricultural Economics; Rural Church Methods and Program; Rural Leadership; Evangelism; Community Surveys and Organization; Religious Education; Cooperative Marketing; Religious Dramatics; Play and Games—Recreation.

Information and accommodations can be secured by communicating with the director of the school. Local expenses are for board and room only. Rooms are generally provided at a cost of about $7 for the entire term and board need not cost more than $1 to $1.25 per day. The fellowship at these summer schools is most inspiring and the courses instructive.

New England School for Town and Country Pastors will be held June 4-15 at Boston University, Boston, Mass. The Rev. K. C. MacArthur, Sterling, Mass., Director.

California Ministers' Summer Institute will be held June 4-16 at Pacific School of Religion, Berkeley, Cal. Dr. E. W. Blakeman, Director.

School of Community Leadership will be held June 11-28 at Kansas State Agricultural College, Manhattan, Kan. Prof. Walter Burr, Director.

Pastors' Summer School will be held June 18-29 at Ohio State University. Columbus, Ohio. Prof. C. E. Lively, Director.

Wisconsin Rural Church Summer School will be held June 25-July 6 at the University of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis. Dr. J. H. Kolb, Director.

Auburn Summer School of Theology will be held July 2-19 at Auburn Theological Seminary, Auburn, N. Y. Dr. Harry Lothrop Reed, Director.

Summer School for Rural Pastors will be held July 9-20 at Michigan Agricultural College, East Lansing, Mich. Dr. Eben Mumford, Director.

Summer School for Town and Country Ministers will be held July 9-21 at Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y. Prof. R. A. Felton, Director.

Estes Park Pastors' Fellowship School will be held July 18-August 1 at Estes Park Association of the Y. M. C. A., Estes Park, Col. Dr. W. H. Wilson, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York, Director.

Summer Conference for Town and Country Ministers will be held September 3-14, at Washington College, Chestertown, Md. Dr. P. E. Titsworth, Director.

A special feature of these sessions is the invitation extended to women church workers to participate in this summer school work.

William R. King,
Executive Secretary, Home Missions Council.

Cornerstone for College of Preachers.

Ascension Day, at Washington Cathedral this year, marked an important turn in the tide of its affairs, the special occasion being the laying of the cornerstone of the College of Preachers. Bishop Freeman, in his address at the time of the service, referred to it as "The beginning of a new work of incalculable importance in the fulfilment of the dream of the First Bishop of Washington, who planned that there should be at the Cathedral a 'School of the Prophets', to which clergymen might come to place fresh emphasis on their preaching office". The procession consisted of the Cathedral choir, with its attendant crucifer and flag beams, the Great Council of the Cathedral, the Cathedral Chapter, a large number of Diocesan and visiting clergy, the marshal of the day, Canon Anson Phelps Stokes, assisted by the Rev. E. Pinckney Wroth, and the Cathedral Staff, including the Bishop, the Dean, and the Bishop's Chaplain. The procession moved from the Cathedral to the site of the new building, which is just north of the apse of the great Cathedral building, forming an impressive and beautiful picture, with the flags and banners and vestments and robes in varying colors against the background of Cathedral Close.

After the processional, opening sentences and responses were said by the Rev. George F. Dudley, D. D., Chairman of the Standing Committee of the Diocese of Washington. The lesson was read by the Rev. J. McN. Waterman, rector of the Church of the Resurrection, Baltimore, representing past students of the College of Preachers, having been a student member of its first session. The Creed and Prayers were said by Dean G. C. F. Bratenahl, D. D., and the address and the laying of the cornerstone by the Bishop of Washington. Bishop Rhinelander, Warden of the College of Preachers, was unable to be present, on account of illness.

The trowel used at the laying of the cornerstone was one which was first used in 1899 at the laying of the cornerstone of the National Cathedral School for Girls, the first building to be erected in the Cathedral Close. It has since been used at many historic Cathedral functions. Alexander Mowett, a stonesetter, and member of St. John's Parish, assisted the Bishop in placing the stone. Articles placed by the Bishop in the stone, included:

The Bible, Book of Common Prayer and Hymnal, Revised Prayer Book, 1927; Constitution and Canons of the Protestant Episcopal Church, Living Church Annual for 1928, current numbers of representative Church papers, report of the World Conference on Faith and Order, Lausanne, 1927; Journal of the Diocese of Washington, 1927; constitution and by-laws of Washington Cathedral; Guide Book to Washington Cathedral, photograph showing Washington Cathedral in course of construction, 1928; a Washington Cathedral Pilgrim's token, copy of letter of anonymous donor to the bishop providing for the College of Preachers, copies of program of recent conferences of Preachers' College, copies of recent numbers of the Cathedral Age giving an account of the College of Preachers, article of Bishop Philip M. Rhinelander, warden of College of Preachers, in regard to its purpose and work; program for laying of cornerstone of College of Preachers, copy of Constitution of the United States, map of the city of Washington, a silver dollar, 1928; copies of Washington daily papers of Wednesday and Thursday.

The laying of the cornerstone was a part of the program of the day, which began with a celebration of the Holy Communion in Bethlehem Chapel for the National Cathedral Association, which in turn was followed by the annual meeting of the association in Whitby Hall. At this time there were reports from the Dean, officers and committees and addresses by the Bishop of Washington, Hon. William R. Castle, Jr., Assistant Secretary of State, and former U. S. Senator George Wharton Pepper.

The National Cathedral Association is an organization of contributors to the Cathedral project, which was founded more than twenty years ago, and is represented in nearly every State in the Union. It has more than 6,000 members, and active committees in sixty-two cities.

Peninsular Conference Arrangements.

The tenth annual session of the Peninsular Summer Conference will be held at Ocean City, Md., June 24-29, under the auspices of the Dioceses of Easton and Delaware.

The primary aim of this Conference is training of workers and development of potentialities of leadership in the various departments, and to this end courses are provided for Church School Workers, Young Ptople, Women, Laymen and Clergy.

Sessions are held at a delightful seaside resort on the season's eve so that there is advantage, with much reduced rates, of Boardwalk Hotel accommodations with their comforts, convenience, fare, and the broad Ocean's beach as playground.

Ocean City is easily reached by train or motor from Washington, Baltimore and Wilmington. Copies of the Conference Program will be sent to those desiring them upon application to the Diocesan Office, Easton, Md.

Daughters of the King.

The Daughters of the King will hold their triennial convention at Washington, D. C., prior to the opening of General Convention between the dates of October 5 and 9.

This will enable them to cooperate in many ways with the Brotherhood of St. Andrew and also leaves the members free to take part in the meetings of the Woman's Auxiliary and other organizations to which they belong and in which they are vitally interested.

Bishop Johnson Dies.

The Rt. Rev. Joseph Horsfall Johnson, first Bishop of the Diocese of Los Angeles, passed to life eternal on May 16, 1928. Funeral services were conducted by Bishop Stevens (former bishop coadjutor, who now succeeds Bishop Johnson) at St. Paul's Cathedral, Los Angeles, Cal., on May 19.

Bishop Johnson was born in Schenectady, N. Y., on June 7, 1847. He graduated from Williams College in 1870, the General Theological Seminary in 1873. Bishop Potter ordained him deacon in 1873 and priest in 1874. He served as rector at Trinity Church, Highland, N. Y., St. Peter's Church, Westville, N. Y., and Christ Church, Detroit, Mich., before he was called to head the newly-formed Diocese of Los Angeles. He was consecrated Bishop on February 24, 1896, in Christ Church, Detroit, by Bishops Davies, Worthington, Talbot, A. Leonard, W. Leonard, Nicholson and Capers. Bishop Johnson held the degree of Doctor of Divinity, conferred upon him by Nashotah in 1894, and the degree of S. T. D., conferred upon him in 1908 by the General Theological Seminary.

UPPER SOUTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. K. G. Finlay, D. D. Bishop.

The Rev. W. H. K. Pendleton, rector of the Church of the Advent, Spartanburg, S. C., has suffered a nervous breakdown, and has been granted a six months' leave of absence by his generous vestry. He was forced to give up work on March 13. After a period in a hospital he spent a month in Florida, but has now returned to his home where he is still confined to his bed and under physicians' care.

The congregation have showered upon him evidences of sympathy and affection. Much of the work of the parish has been satisfactorily carried on by members of the congregation. Mr. Pendleton hopes to be able to resume work about the middle of September.

ACCORDING TO JOHN.

Edith Mirick.

Years, John, have hemmed you in.
What golden memories to spin
Upon the hearthstone of your age!
What eyes have seen a Kingdom lost and won
As yours have done?
Those hands that, trembling, lag
Above a slowly growing page,
Too feeble now to drag
A laden net, shall day by day
From out the deeps of memory
Draw up their quivering load.
And they, who know you not, shall say
Passing this sun-lit strip of road:
"See where an aged fisherman wiles useless Hours with a pen". This shall they say
Of you, John, rapt—remembering—
And know you not as captain of a King.

The Slow-Growth of the Kingdom.

One point in the teaching of Jesus as to His kingdom which the disciples found it hard to bear was its slow growth, a hard thing for us to bear yet.

The expectations of the Jews on this point were that the kingdom was near and they were impatient for its speedy coming. Jesus began His ministry by announcing that "the kingdom of heaven is at hand", and the disciples along with the Jews always took such teaching in a literal sense. It was the current expectation among the Jews that the Messiah was to set up a material kingdom in Jerusalem and they were passionately eager for the fulfillment of this dream. It was part of the apocalyptic teaching of a cataclysm that would overthrow existing kingdoms and tyrannies and release the chosen people from any such Gentile rule and put them in power and on the throne. The Gentile yoke was especially tyrannical and exasperating in the days of Jesus and the Jews at times broke out against it in fanatical fury, and the cry was, "How long, O Lord, how long"? The disciples were brought up in this expectation and never wholly escaped from it. This is strikingly shown in the question they asked of Jesus just before the ascension, "Lord, dost thou at this time restore the kingdom of Israel"? They were still thinking in terms of Israel, Jewish hopes and dreams. Now that Jesus had triumphed over death, would He not quickly break the power of Rome and set up His own kingdom? Any thought of longer delay was trying to their faith.

And yet, if there was any point that Jesus made clear in His teaching about the kingdom, it was that it would take a long time to establish it in the world. Of the seven parables of Jesus recorded in Matthew 13, four compare the kingdom of heaven to processes of growth, and the principle of them is expressly stated to be, "first the blade, then the ear, then the full grain in the ear". The parable of the Sower illustrates how the seed springs up in a multiplied harvest, and that of the Mustard-seed pictures it growing from a small seed into a great tree. The parable of the Leaven also pictures its slow spread through the whole mass of the world. The point of all these parables is that the kingdom of heaven is a growth and not a cataclysm; it is a slow unfolding seed and not exploding dynamite. In the parable of the Talents we are told that "after a long time the lord of those servants cometh, and maketh reckoning with them"; and while this "long time" was within a human lifetime, yet it was a long time relatively to human life, and in the same way the delay of Christ's coming may be a relatively large part of the life of humanity, and therefore an immeasurably long time. And, most convincing of all, the great commission (Matt. 28:18-20) bids us make disciples of all nations and baptize them, and this will necessarily consume time that will be measured by millenniums. Already it has gone on nearly 2,000 years and yet it is scarcely started. Peter had some glimpse of the long duration of divine time when he declared that "one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day" (1 Peter 3:8). This world of ours appears to be only in its infancy and vast vistas of time stretch out before it in which the kingdom of God will develop its resources and come to its climax and triumph.

Are we impatient still with this long vista of time in which our faith is to be fulfilled? Undoubtedly we may and do grow impatient with this slow process and want to do something that will, if possible, cut it short or at least hurry it up. One way in which we may do this is to resort to worldly means to further the kingdom. Have we not been carrying our flag in front of the cross as we have gone out through heathen lands and have we not appealed to our government to protect our missionaries and our property? Have we not insisted on "extraterritoriality" by which we set up in these foreign lands our own courts and administer them with warships or soldiers' barracks near by? This question has become a sore and pressing one in our missionary enterprise and methods, and many of our missionaries declare that we must abandon such means and not give any color to the charge that we are enforcing the gospel at the point of the sword. The solution of this point is not an easy one and we do not press it further.

But there are other ways in which we express our impatience. Sometimes we fall out with the church and throw all the blame of slow progress on its methods or its doctrines. More generally still we grow pessimistic and bewail the impotence of the church and indulge in views that indicate a failing faith. Now not a word should be said that would abate our zeal and permit us to sink down into apathetic indifference and despair as to the progress of the kingdom. We ought to put urgency into every means we have and develop new and more effective means of spreading the kingdom. To this end we should close up our divided ranks and eliminate waste and friction and strife and marshal our Christian forces as we have not yet done in this world campaign. Nevertheless we should not shut our eyes to the immensity of the problem and the slowness of the process, but should open them wide and clear and see and seize the task in all its magnitude and gradual growth. Slow processes are often the surest, and quick growths may also quickly wither. Christianity at times has baptized tribes and nations wholesale and they were pagn still. It is not given unto us to know the whole calendar of God or to judge His plans and processes, but our duty is to press forward along the path of faith and faithfulness and leave times and seasons with them.—Presbyterian Banner.

Patience.

Part I.

The proclamation of the fact that God is love by the first generation of Christians brought a new breath of life to the peoples of the ancient world with whom they came into contact. Those who have dipped into Classical literature know what a dark picture it reflects of the cloud of fear which hung over the lives of the masses of the people. Men lived in a continual dread of offending some deity; and spiritual growth was hampered on every side. The Christian teaching was like a bright light bursting through the pall of darkness, bringing joy and freedom. Our Lord's words were literally fulfilled, "The truth shall make you free". So it has always been. Christianity is a powerful liberating force, delivering men from the empire of evil in all its forms.

This is especially clear in the moral sphere. The Christian learnt that he must not acquiesce in moral evil. The awful forces of evil which manifested themselves from generation to generation in the lives of men were not the result of some invincible Fate, to the ravages of which they must submit with such patience as they could command. Men learnt that behind it all was a God of love actively cooperating with them in overcoming evil. Through our Lord came the message of forgiveness, liberating from fear of the past and the promise of help in the future struggle against evil with the assurance of victory. Men began to learn the meaning of real patience; that it was not a dull, apathetic, unintelligent submission to a mysterious inevitable necessity which ruled life, but an attitude of trust in a loving personal power, with whom they in turn could cooperate in overcoming evil, with the quiet undismayed confidence of perfect faith in the issue.

This conception of patience is most easily held in the sphere of moral evil. But we have to face other evils, such as pain and sorrow and disease. And although a good deal of this may be explained as the result of the misuse of human freewill, there is a large remnant which cannot be explained in this way; and it is this which constitutes the touch-stone for such a command as that of St. James—"Let patience have her perfect work".

On the whole the human race has exhibited a remarkable capacity of being patient in face of evil. There is a touch of dignity even in the hopeless resignation of the ancient world; and there was something noble in the quiet unshaken determination of the Stoic to face undaunted whatever befell. But with Christianity patience rises to a higher level because its basis is trust in the love and goodness of God. But it may be questioned whether in much Christian patience there is not something akin to the old blind submission to the inevitable with its corollary of apathy in action. Patience under physical suffering or misfortune e. g., is often found to rest on the belief that these things are God's will. It is true that God permits these things. It is also true that these things, if rightly borne, play an important part in the building up of character. But can we really believe that God is love and also believe that He wills pain and suffering for us? Is it not rather that God wills for each one of us the joy and happiness of perfection both in body and soul? And surely the right attitude on our part is not to acquiesce in a spirit of inactive resignation either in moral or physical evil, but rather, because we believe in the goodness and love of God, to endeavor with quiet confidence to overcome them. The individual may not succeed in overcoming them fully, but at least his energies are being used in the right direction, i. e., not in a blind resignation which, like lack of faith, is a hindrance to the full working of God's loving power for Him and tends to perpetuate the evil condition, but in active cooperation with the will of God, which is working towards the redemption of man from every kind of evil and the perfecting of this finite world.

PRAYER AND GROWTH.

"Fall on your knees and grow there."
"The Still Hour"; Phelps.

If you would pray,
Then stay
Awhile upon your knees, lest your neglect
And haste show disrespect
Unto the 'Kings of kings and Lord of lords."
Sometimes no words
Are needed; but to wait
In silence, prospers most at Heav'n's gate.

Thus while you kneel,
Although you feel
No special kindlings of the soul
Upon the whole
Of spiritual thought and life will be
The dew of Heaven, falling tenderly;

So,
Watered by the Spirit, Faith will grow,
And Hope and Love, and every gracious bloom
Of the Christ-life. The New Birth will assume Vigour, and Strength, before unknown,
Now granted from the Throne.
No blight of sin, or weakness shall impair
The soul, which finds maturity through prayer.

The infancy of faith will thus be passed,
And its new strength will last
Until, within the Heavenly Mansions, there
Shall be displayed the fullest fruit of prayer:
And what we sought upon the bended knee,
Shall be matured in Glory endlessly.

THE SAMPLER.

Helen Bayley Davis.

I wonder if the little maid
Who fashioned it had twinkling feet
That longed to dance; the while she sat
And patterned stitches primly neat.

Demure, with hair like folded wings,
I'm sure she did not pause to lift
Her downcast shadowed eyes to watch
The flight of a skylark, silver-swift,

Nor did she see the dusty moth,
Hovering, drifting anywhere—
Like a petal sapphire blue,
Floating in the golden air.

But patiently and hour by hour
She plied her needle, I am told:
The tiny feathered stitches read—
"Arabella, eight years old".

The Story of Fleetfoot the Deer.

Once the Little Boy's father and mother let him go with the Woodman on one of his long trips into the big forest. They went in a canoe, which the Woodman paddled up a winding river. After a long time they came to a little lake, all set about with tall trees and swamps and thickets of underbrush. The hush of evening was over the lonely water as they came to a grassy place with a sandy beach, where they were to camp.

"What was that?" asked the Little Boy, in a startled whisper, as a sudden crashing was heard in a thicket near the water's edge.

With a few strong strokes the Woodman brought the canoe to land. As they clambered out he pointed to some heart-shaped tracks on the sand and said:

"A deer; that's what you heard, I reckon."

"Really?" cried the Little Boy excitedly. "Oh, I wish I could have seen him! If we'd had a gun you could have shot him—bang! Just like that."

The Woodman smiled at this outburst. As the Little Boy helped to pitch the tent and make a fire and fry the bacon, the Woodman cheered him by telling him that he would probably have other chances to see deer before they went back home, if he looked sharp.

When the frying pan and tin plates were washed up, and they were sitting about the camp-fire after supper, the Woodman said:

"Did you ever see a picture of a fawn—a little baby deer? I caught one once, and he was the prettiest and cutest thing you ever saw. He had a silky coat all covered with white spots about as big as five-cent pieces."

"Please tell me about him," said Little Boy, cuddling closer to his big friend.

"Well," said the Woodman, "it was a long way from here and a long time ago, when I was living on the edge of a little village at the foot of a mountain. One day on the mountain side I saw a mother deer with a tiny fawn only a few days old following her. From the way it limped I knew that it had hurt one of its feet. When the mother doe saw me coming she ran away. But the poor little fawn could not run, and I caught it as easy as anything.

"Sure enough, the little fellow's left hind foot had been broken—by getting caught in a crack in the rocks, or in a trap, I guess. Dogs from the village or a hungry wildcat would surely have killed him if I had let him go, so I carried him home with me.

"I put splints on his leg and kept him in a box where he could not jump about. Because he was such a young fawn I had to feed him milk from a baby's bottle. In a few days the broken bones had begun to knit together, and in a few weeks his leg was as strong as ever. I named him Fleetfoot, because he ran and capered so about the yard."

"Would he let you pet him?" asked the Little Boy, his eyes glistening in the firelight.

"I should say he would!" exclaimed the Woodman. "Why, he was the tamest thing you ever saw! He would come up to you and look at you with his big, soft eyes, and lick your hands if you'd let him. But I never cared for that, for it made them feel as if they were coated with glue. The way he used his ears you would think he could almost talk with them! They moved back and forth at every sound, showing pleasure, excitement, fear, and other emotions as plainly as your face does. He would stand and let you stroke his head and body as much as you wanted to. And pretty! Why, his spotted coat of reddish brown and white was as glossy as could be, and his slender legs were the most graceful you could imagine!

"You know, I never knew what those white spots on his brown coat were for until one day in July, when he was about three months old. I was playing with him in a field of daisies, when suddenly he was gone! I couldn't see him anywhere. Presently he made a movement, and there he was, among the daisies, not twenty feet away! You see, the white spots that covered his body looked so exactly like the daisy blossoms that you had to look twice to tell which was deer and which was the field.

"That's what they call 'protective coloration' in the books. The little deer is protected in this way during his first summer, while he is young and needs to lie hid from his enemies. In the autumn, when the flowers have ceased to bloom and the fields turn brown, the spots disappear. Fleetfoot's coat then became as brown as the withered grass, and it grew longer and thicker as winter approached."

"Did he drink milk from a bottle all this time?" asked the Little Boy, whose mind turned to practical details.

"We gave him some milk until along in the autumn," said the Woodman, "but he soon learned to eat grass and leaves and the tender twigs of bushes and trees. To tease him I would often hold the bottle up high so that he would have to stand on his hind legs to reach it. Sometimes he would walk after me as far as across the street in this way. When I didn't let him have the bottle right off, he would rise up and strike me sharply with his front hoofs. Lucky for me he was so little! That is one of the ways a grown deer fights. A stag can cut a dog to ribbons with his sharp hoofs.

"Fleetfoot loved the water," the Woodman continued, "and in summer nothing pleased him better than to race through the shallow river, splashing the water all over his head and body. Most of it rolled off his coat at once, and even when he lay down in the water he never got wet to the skin. Sometimes when I took him for a walk over the hills he would dash off and it would look as though we had seen the last of him. Then presently here he would come back again, with his ears laid back and his white tail in the air, and bounding over every rock and bush in his path.

"But it was most fun to see him that winter. Even when it was twenty degrees below zero, he would cuddle down in the deep snow, chewing his cud and sleeping in comfort. At first he was lonesome, and would walk 'round and 'round the house, stopping to look in at each window and begging us to come out.

"Then a man brought a tame black-bear cub and a young prairie wolf for me to take care of for him. After they got acquainted the three played together like children. Sometimes when Fleetfoot was eating a slice of bread I had given him, the bear would stand on his hind legs and take the bread from the deer's mouth. Then Fleetfoot would rise on his hind legs and with his sharp forefeet hammer the bear on his thick head. But the bear never seemed to mind it.

"Fleetfoot liked better to play with the young wolf. For hours at a time they would play tag about the house and yard. When the wolf tagged the deer, he would pull out a tuft of deer's hair with his teeth; when Fleetfoot tagged the wolf, he knocked Mr. Wolf over on his back with his sharp hoofs. Neither seemed to mind the rough play."

The Woodman laughed as he thought of the funny tricks of these pets. Then he added, soberly:

"When spring came I had to let Fleetfoot go. You see he was so active that he could easily jump a six-foot fence. That meant we could have no garden with him around. Anyway, he was full grown now, and was quite able to take care of himself in the forests."

The Woodman yawned, knocked the ashes from his pipe and prepared to go to bed. But the Little Boy was not satisfied.

"Did you ever see Fleetfoot after that?" he asked.

"Oh, yes!" said the Woodman. "All that spring and summer, and the next fall, I saw him occasionally in the woods or on the mountain-sides. And he remembered me, too. When I would call to him he would come trotting up and eat bread or apples out of my hand. His antlers had begun to grow, but they were still covered with the soft 'velvet', and he loved to have me rub them. By October they had become hard and sharp-pointed. When I would see him then, there were usually two or three soft-eyed does waiting for him, but not daring to approach us, as he did. You see, he was full grown now and had found his own people and was one of them again. But he did not forget the friend who had been good to him when he was a tiny, helpless fawn."

The Little Boy was already tucked in between the blankets of their comfortable spruce-bough bed. The Woodman was just taking off his shoes to follow his example.

"You know," he added, "before I turned Fleetfoot loose, I notched one of his ears the way we do with cattle, so that I could always know him again. After that autumn I was away from home for about five years. When I came back after such a long time you wouldn't think—"

The Woodman turned to see whether the Little Boy was still awake.

"What happened?" asked the Little Boy, drowsily.

I went out hunting one day, and in a runway in the forest, on the mountain-side, I saw the biggest deer, with the finest spread of antlers I ever saw in my life. He was only a hundred feet or so away, and I couldn't have missed him. But just as I was about to pull the trigger I saw something that made me lower my gun, and the deer bounded into the forest and was gone."

"What was it you saw?" asked the Little Boy, wide awake once more.

"Maybe I was mistaken," said the Woodman, blinking at the Little Boy. "But just as the old fellow pricked up his ears, I thought I saw a notch in his right ear just like the mark I had given Fleetfoot. Anyway I couldn't shoot him after that."

The Woodman blew out the lantern and got heavily into bed. The last thing he heard was the Little Boy saying sleepily:

"I'm glad we haven't got any gun. I don't think I'll ever want to kill a deer now."—Compton's Pictured Encyclopedia.

GRANDMA'S ROOM.

My grandma has the nicest room
Of any in our house,
But while I'm here I have to be
As still as any mouse.

There are queer pictures on the wall,
Of folks who've long been dead;
They're all ancestors of mine,
My dear old grandma said.

There are some boxes made of shells,
As cute as cute can be,
And when she's gone, my grandma said,
They'll all belong to me.

There is a fan of peacock tails,
To keep the flies away,
And a straw bonnet that she wore
When she went out to play.

Gay braided rugs are on the floor—
She made them all herself—
And shiny old brass candlesticks,
All standing on the shelf.

My grandma is just like her room,
As nice as nice can be,
And when she's feeling well and strong
She takes me on her knee,

And tells me of the long ago
When she was small like me;
She never dared to romp and run,
And never climbed a tree.

And every day she did her stint
Of funny patchwork blocks,
And then at night she had to knit
On heavy woolen socks.

I'm sorry for that grandma-child,
As sorry as can be,
I'd hate to be that little girl,
I'm glad that I am me.

—Storyland.

Her Best.

Anna and Bob walked home from Sunday School with serious faces.

A missionary from China had told them how God blessed the pennies, and how useful even Christmas cards are to the missionaries in their work. They talked the matter over earnestly, and going to their pretty rooms took out the cards they had been saving.

"I'm going to send the best cards that I have to those poor heathen children," said Anna.

"Pooh!" said Bob. "They don't know the difference. I am not going to send my best ones. Advertising cards are good enough for 'em."

"But I am sorry for them," said Anna. "I feel as if Jesus would be pleased to have me give my best ones. I love these beautiful kitties and cute dogs best of all, and I am going to send them."

"Why, Anna Turner, you said that you were going to keep those just as long as you lived!"

"I know that I did, but I'm so sorry for the poor heathen children," and here something glistened in Anna's eyes.

"Well, you may be a goose, but I shan't," said Bob.

So they made up their packages and gave them to the missionary.

Five months rolled by. The little girl and boy had almost forgotten their cards, when one day a missionary, opening her boxes in Peking, came across them again, and thought, "I must use them".

So she asked her teacher to write some verses in Chinese on the cards.

The old Chinaman put on his goggles, inked his brush, and prepared to write.

That very day old Mrs. Chang and her grandsons called at the mission. The missionary served tea and cakes, and won the heart of the old lady, and then told her of Jesus and His love for poor Chinese women. She showed the cards to the little boys, and when she told them to take their choice, Ting Lig quickly chose the kittens, and Cheng Fu the dogs. All went away pleased, and out into the heathen home went Anna's cards on their mission.

"See, Grandpa! Look, see my kittens!" "And my dogs!" said the boys.

Grandpa was old and feeble, but the Chinese are fond of pets and the old man lay a long time looking at the wonderful cards. The boys, seeing his interest, stole away to eat their rice. After a while grandpa discovered the verses. He read them over and over, and finally laid them down with a sigh.

He was an honest old Chinaman, and had tried to do right; but he had lost faith in his idols, and now, so near death, with no hope, his old heart was very troubled. He had heard of Jesus, but thought that He was a foreigner's God, and did not know that He died for Chinamen, and loved them.

Through the long hours of the night, when he coughed so that he could not sleep, the verses kept coming to his heart, especially the words, "God so loved the world"—"the world"—"Whosoever".

The next day he was so weak that he could hardly speak. They thought that he said "kittie", and they brought him the old yellow cat; then they thought he said "dog", and they brought him the "Peking pup", the pet of the household; but the old man sadly shut his eyes and turned his head away.

All at once the boys thought of their pretty cards, and when they were found the old man smiled and motioned to his son to read the Scripture verse.

The son read slowly the precious words, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

"Again," whispered the old man.

Gradually the look of eager interest changed to a peaceful smile. The old Chinaman folded his hands and passed away in peace, trusting in that Saviour who died for him.—Selected.

Stains.

One day Ruth came home from school with three stains on her pretty white dress. When mother saw them, she said:

"You may get them out yourself. I'll tell you how."

So Ruth rubbed the cocoa stain in cold water. That disappeared. Then she poured boiling water through the strawberry stain. The red turned to pink, then faded away. The ink stain was hardest of all. Mother gave her something in a bottle that banished the ugly black. Some drops from another bottle kept the acid from eating the cloth.

It is easy to take stains out of cloth, but do you know how to take stains out of thoughts?

There is a quarrel stain. Your playmate does something that you do not like. Soon there is an ugly, brown stain on your friendship. You can make it disappear by pouring on the water of remembrance. Think of all the fun you have had together and of all the kind things which your playmate has done. Away will go the quarrel stain.

Some stains are very hard to get out if you let them get old. There is the bad word stain. It is hard to get that out if you keep thinking about the words or even repeating them. Take them out at once. Think of last Sabbath's Golden Text or your favorite stories when evil words want to say themselves over.

Whenever you make a thought stain, see if you can remove it as quickly as the boiling water faded the strawberry stain.—Dew Drops.

The cry of defeat in the seventh chapter of Romans is occasioned by the inability of man to be right by his own efforts. The words "I" and "me" occur some forty times in the chapter. But the cry of victory in the eighth chapter is due to the absence of the "I" and the presence of the Holy Spirit who is mentioned a great many times.—Selected.

TO THE LAITY OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

There is in circulation among the laity of the Protestant Episcopal Church a petition, prepared by one of our Bishops, to the General Convention which will assemble in Washington next October, asking that body to refuse its assent to the proposal to eliminate the Thirty-nine Articles of Religion from the Book of Common Prayer, which would mean their abrogation.

"WHEREAS, the last General Convention adopted tentatively a resolution to revise the Book of Common Prayer by omitting the publication in connection therewith of the Articles of Religion; and

"WHEREAS, there is no provision for publishing elsewhere or for recognizing in any other way the Articles of Religion except in connection with the Book of Common Prayer; and

"WHEREAS, the Constitution of this Church has ever since 1801 recognized in this way the Articles of Religion; and

"WHEREAS, the Articles of Religion define the Church and state clearly the historic doctrinal differences between the Anglican Communion and the Roman Catholic Church;

"THEREFORE, we the undersigned adult communicants of the Protestant Episcopal Church do most earnestly memorialize our Right Reverend Fathers-in-God, our Reverend Clerical Deputies and Honorable Lay Deputies, in General Convention assembled in their respective Houses, to vote against the resolution to omit the Articles of Religion from publication in connection with the Book of Common Prayer and to vote against any proposed amendment to the Constitution that would omit reference to the Articles of Religion.

"AND we do further memorialize our Fathers-in-God, the Bishops, to send us a message of assurance that the name, the doctrine, the ceremonies and nomenclature of our Church and her missionary purpose and her fraternal love for all Christian people are and should be as expressed in the Book of Common Prayer.

"So we believe you will bring comfort and peace to the hearts of many, give confidence to those within our Communion and make clear to all men the true Catholic nature and Protestant heritage of our dear Church and revive zeal for the salvation of souls through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen."

We believe that a great majority of the communicants of the Church are opposed to the elimination of these Articles of Religion, established by the Church in 1801, and are likewise opposed to the introduction into the Church of the Mass, Reservation and Adoration of the Sacrament Prayers to the Virgin Mary, Invocation of Saints, Worship of Images and Relics, Auricular Confession, Penance, use of the Rosary, Holy Water and other doctrines and ceremonies peculiar to the Church of Rome.

We therefore heartily endorse this petition and express the hope that all Protestant Episcopalians will signify their approval of it by their signatures and by aiding in the widest possible circulation of it.

Copies of this petition may be procured without cost from Latsch & Arnold, 97 N. Second Street, Memphis, Tenn.

The BEAUTIFUL ROSE WINDOW of NOTRE DAME

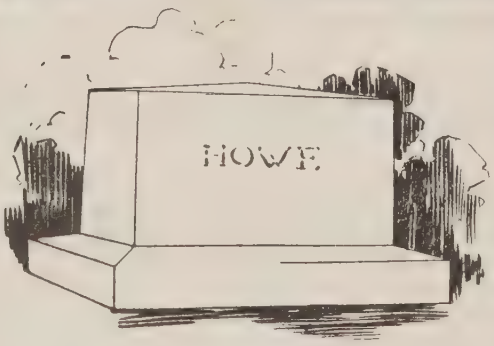
A Masterpiece of Permanent Beauty and Color



THE Famous Rose Window of the Cathedral of Notre Dame in Paris is a work of infinite beauty and splendor. It is perhaps the masterpiece of all art glass windows. Built in the Thirteenth Century, it stands today unsurpassed in beauty and excellence of workmanship. The color of gorgeous gems and precious stones are wrought into this magnificent spectacle for the admiration of passing thousands through all the years. If a world-wide search were made for a monumental material approaching the beauty of the assembled colors of the famous Rose Window, such material would be found in

It is found, also, that the beautiful colors of Winnsboro Granite come from the various crystals it contains, which are identical in substance to many of the finest of precious stones and jewels of the order of the amethyst and moonstone. When the surface of this granite,—which is a composite of these actual precious stone crystals,—is highly polished, all the beauty and color of these jewels become visible. Could a more beautiful monumental stone be found anywhere than this?

Winnsboro Granite is most lasting because it is composed of the most durable mineral known. It is superbly beautiful because it is made up of the substance of precious stones and gems. Inscriptions on it are clearly legible because of the marked contrast between cut and polished surfaces.

Be sure that "Winnsboro Granite" is specified in your contract for monuments. Like other high quality materials, there are many inferior substitutes, which resemble this granite on first appearance, but do not possess its lasting qualities and permanent beauty, because they contain more deleterious elements, such as water, lime and iron. These elements tend to disintegration and discoloration.

ANOTHER SUCCESSFUL INSTALLATION

by RAMBUSCH

WHEN the Dominican Fathers desired to improve the lighting in their Friars' Chapel at St. Vincent Ferrer's Church, New York City, they engaged Mr. Wilfrid E. Anthony as Architect to design the lanterns. He in turn entrusted the solution of the technical part of the problem to the Rambusch organization.

The result was an installation which has been acclaimed a great success by Architects, Clergymen and laymen alike.

Note the pleasing outline, graceful hanging shape, and fineness of detail. If possible inspect the installation and you will find that Rambusch illumination is just as satisfying as the lanterns are beautiful in design and workmanship.

As the science of electric lighting progresses we must develop new types of lanterns to give the best illumination possible. The graceful design and the character of hand wrought metal make this fixture a decorative asset in any small or medium size Gothic Church. When hung in mid-air, its well-balanced proportions and pleasing shape lend on air of dignity to the interior. The soft amber colored light emitted from this lantern creates at night approximately the same Churchly atmosphere which obtains in the daytime when daylight is colored and diffused by transmission through stained glass windows. Its proper location in your Church should not be decided upon until after a consultation with one of our experts on Church Illumination. Finesses in bulb location and hanging heights attended to by our experts.

NAVE LANTERN No. 120

ORIGINALLY designed for the famous Little Church Around the Corner, New York City, this lantern has become a favorite among leading Church architects. The lantern frame and top are made of wrought iron beautifully polychromed and the applied ornaments are of hammered bronze.

During evening services, the soft, amber light, sufficient for reading purposes, helps to create a warm Churchly atmosphere. Similar lanterns can be made suitable for any size Church.

Deaths

HOLLOWAY: Passed into life eternal in the early morn of January 20, 1928, at Ridgeway, Caroline county, Va., ELIZA AMISS HOLLOWAY, widow of Dr. Robert Green Holloway, in her eighty-third year. She is survived by five sons and two daughters.

"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

ALICE V. CLAIBORNE.

ALICE V. CLAIBORNE, only child of Rev. Dr. and Mrs. W. S. Claiborne, died at Emerald Hodgson Hospital, Sewanee, Tenn., May 2, 1928, after an illness of eight weeks.

Miss Claiborne was brought to the hospital from Columbia Institute, Columbia, Tenn., where she had been teaching modern languages since September. At one time a student at the University of Chattanooga, Miss Claiborne won an international reputation as a basketball player. While studying abroad she was captain and star member of the French team which won the European championship. After a year at the Sorbonne, she was graduated with honors from William and Mary College in 1927.

Aside from her athletic prowess, she was an accomplished linguist.

Funeral services were held on Thursday afternoon, May 3, at All Saints' Chapel. Interment was at the University Cemetery, Rev. W. H. DuBose, D. D., and Bishop James M. Maxon, D. D., officiating.

HERBERT IVERSON LEWIS.

Whereas, God in His infinite wisdom suddenly removed from our midst, on May 4, 1928, our senior warden, HERBERT I. LEWIS, who for many years faithfully served our church; therefore, be it Resolved, that the Guild of St. John's Church feels the loss of this sympathetic friend and wise counsellor.

That we cherish the memory of his long years of valued service among us as a faithful member of our vestry, an efficient and forceful superintendent and teacher of our Sunday school and a regular attendant and supporter of all services of the church.

That we express to his family our deepest sympathy, assuring them of our abiding interest and commending them to Him "who doeth all things well".

That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family to the West Point News and to the Southern Churchman.

MRS. SCOTT BROADDUS,
MRS. J. P. EKBERG,
MRS. A. J. WALCOTT.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

Mr. Pendleton has just completed his nineteenth year as rector of the Church of the Advent. In that time the membership of the Church has risen from about two hundred to five hundred and forty-seven. The Sunday School now carries an enrollment of two hundred and seventy-one, against fifty-four at time of his coming. Two Mission Chapels have been erected, while the church plant has been improved by the erection of a handsome stone parish house, especially adapted to the work of the Church School, and a beautiful stone memorial tower containing a handsome chime of ten bells.

During the World War this church rendered to the soldiers stationed at Camp Wadsworth—three miles from the city, a service of unique spiritual and social value. The parish house was converted into a soldiers' club house, and served the boys in kahki in many ways, while the services of the Church ministered to the spiritual needs of the soldiers who crowded the building at every service.

The contributions of the Church in 1909 were about $3,500. Last year they were $30,372.90.

HARRISBURG.

Rt. Rev. J. H. Darlington, D. D. Bishop

Dedication.

Bishop Garland officiated at the official opening and dedication of a new nurses' home and a home for the superintendent at the Protestant Episcopal City Mission Home for Consumptives, Chestnut Hill, Saturday, May 26.

The Home was organized about fifty-seven years ago in a private dwelling on Spruce Street, near Fourth, as part of the missionary work of the Episcopal Church in Philadelphia. It is the pioneer institution in this country devoted to the care of those afflicted with tuberculosis. The present site was occupied thirty-nine years ago and includes sixteen acres of ground on the highest section of Chestnut Hill.

A new Mission for Colored People has been started in the South Philadelphia Convocation. It is working under the name of the Mission of the Holy Spirit, and, at the present, it is located in the Parish House of All Saints' Church.

Theological Conference at Chicago.

On June 6 and 7, a theological conference of unusual scope and significance will be held at the Chicago Theological Seminary as an important feature of the week of exercises by which the Seminary will dedicate its new buildings. Two hundred and fifty delegates, representing the various higher educational institutions and Congregational Conferences of the Middle West, will attend. The topics to be discussed include recent contributions to theology and Biblical scholarship, and the relation of religion to science, education, sociology, journalism, art, drama, and music.

Others beside delegates will be welcome to the conference.

Rt. Rev. Chas. Fiske, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. H. Coley, D. D., Suffragan.

The Knights Templar Commanderies of Utica and Little Falls, N. Y., attended an Ascension Day service in Calvary Church, Utica, the Rev. D. Charles White, rector. The Ven. Charles E. S. Rasay, rector of Emmanuel Church, Little Falls, and Archdeacon of the Mohawk, preached the sermon stressing the need of exemplifying the virtues of Christian knighthood in the life of America today. Bishop Fiske was in the chancel and pronounced the benediction.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Stuart Franklin Gast, vicar of Mechanicsburg, Pa., and adjacent Missions, has accepted a call to the rectorship of St. John's Parish, Bellefonte, Pa.

The Rev. Edmund Lee Gettier, Jr., assistant at Memorial Church, Baltimore, Md., has accepted a call as rector of St. John's Church, Waverly, Baltimore. He will succeed the Rev. Wm. Dallam Morgan, who has served as rector of St. John's for more than twenty-five years and who resigned recently to take effect October 1.

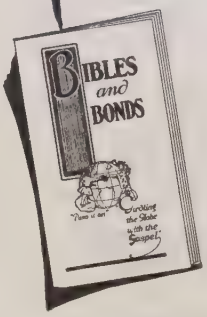
The Rev. C. E. Knickle, rector of St. Luke's, Mount, Joy, Pa., has accepted a call to the rectorship of St. Paul's Parish, Philipsburg, Pa.

Bishop Darlington has been elected Chaplain of the Pennsylvania Society, of New York City, in succession to the late Bishop Ethelbert Talbot.

The Rev. Oscar J. F. Seitz has been transferred from St. James' Mission, Roseville, Mich., and Grace Mission, Halfway, to St. John's Mission, Plymouth, Mich. The latter, an old Mission, has developed so rapidly of late that it demands the full-time services of a resident minister.



The Rev. Charles Wesley, in deacon's orders, has been transferred from St. John's Mission, Plymouth, to a new Mission, the Church of the Redeemer, at Kentucky and Fullerton Avenues, Detroit, Mich.

The Rev. Alfred J. Wilder, after a rectorship of eight years, has resigned the parish of St. Alban's, Highland Park, Michigan. His successor is the Rev. Milton S. Kanaga, at present Executive Secretary and Archdeacon of the Diocese of Erie.

The Rev. George A. Merifield, of Merlin, Ontario, Canada, has been called to the rectorship of St. Mark's, Marine City, Mich.

tells how as high as 9% is paid for life!

As high as 9 per cent? For Life? Yes! Depending upon the age of the annuitant the Annuity Bonds of the American Bible Society will do just that!

But, you say, is it safe? Emphatically YES! It is safe—in fact the Annuity Bonds of the American Bible Society have elements of safety greater than most securities and have many advantages which other securities do not possess.

For over 50 years these bonds have been issued without loss to a single investor.

In addition to being safe Annuity Bonds provide for life an attractive income which never depreciates. They are free from complicated details, have no coupons to clip, no bank book to lose; they assure receipt of a check every six months and enable friends of the Bible cause to contribute liberally without hardship.

You should know all about this enterprising Christian work—send in the coupon today—do it NOW!

THE BLIND RECEIVE THEIR SIGHT

It is the policy of the American Bible Society to offer the embossed Scriptures to Blind readers at a cost of One Dollar per volume. This step has been taken in order that the Word of God may be made available to a larger number of Blind people. Recently an order was received for 25 embossed Bibles, or 525 volumes, for distribution among the Blind. This order was filled upon receipt of the payment of $525, but it cost the American Bible Society over $1500—the difference between the dollar-a-volume price and the cost price.

The American Bible Society is constantly striving to meet the needs of the scattered, lonely, sightless people, whose lives are often so empty and to whom nearly every day is a tragedy.

YOUR HELP IS NEEDED

Even at the special price of $1.00 per volume the embossed Bible is very expensive. A Braille Bible in 21 volumes means $21.00. The Moon Bible in 58 volumes is $58.00. How many sighted people would pay $58.00, or even $21.00, for a Bible? And the Blind are generally less able to pay than the sighted.

Braille is the system being taught in America to the young Blind, and a single Braille Bible costs approximately $100!

The Moon System is that which is generally preferred by the adult Blind—the system you would be dependent on if blindness fell on you. And a single Moon Bible costs over $240!

Only as friends supply the means can the American Bible Society supply the Scriptures to those who are so heavily handicapped. The average cost of a volume containing a single Gospel or a book of the Old Testament is over $5.00.

Can and will you help us mitigate this heavy extra handicap on the Blind?

Contributions for this important work may be remitted by check or post office money order made payable to GILBERT DARLINGTON, Treasurer.

THE ONLY WAY OUT OF THE DARK

Dear Friend:

As a Christian you realize the debt that the world owes to the Bible. It is "The Only Way Out of the Dark"—the only true guide through life's journey. And yet there are millions of men, women and children to whom the Gospel Story is unknown.

The American Bible Society is exerting itself to supply these destitute peoples with the Holy Scriptures. Our colporteurs go into the remote parts of the earth as well as into the crowded cities, to sell where the people will buy, to give where they cannot buy—to spread the Word in every land.

We must make new friends for our enlarging work.

The need is very great—the cry, "Send Bibles," never ceases.

Yours sincerely,
GEORGE WM. BROWN,
General Secretary.

The American Bible Society is a missionary pioneer of Bible light. Its sole object is "to encourage the wider circulation of the Holy Scriptures without note or comment." Its work is threefold:

Translation—into the common languages and dialects.

Publication—in styles convenient for the people and at lowest cost.

Distribution—by gifts and by sales without profit.

It has issued over 194,000,000 volumes of the Scriptures in more than 250 languages and dialects and in 17 languages and systems for the blind.

The Scriptures are furnished for immigrants of all nationalities. Hospitals and jails are supplied with the Word; colporteurs take the Book to the poor and the neglected.

Supported by voluntary contributions. Gifts and legacies are gratefully received.

The Society will pay a fixed annuity for life upon any sum of $100 or over. An annuity gift as an investment is safe, convenient and productive.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"On the hinges of men's prayers God's great purposes turn."

Every time you stifle a good impulse you make it harder to start the next one.

Delays in dealing with duty cause our difficulties.

Kindness to animals is not mere sentiment, but a requisite of even a very ordinary education; nothing in arithmetic or grammar is so important for a child to learn as humaneness.—Journal of Education, Boston.

It is the lives like the stars, which simply pour down on us the calm light of their bright and faithful being, up to which we look and out of which we gather the deepest calm and courage.

This is the condition of God's servant—always conflict, but always a spread table. Joy snatched in the face of danger is specially poignant. The flowers that bloom on the brink of a cataract are bright, and their tremulous motion adds a charm. Special experiences of God's sufficiency are wont to come in seasons of special difficulty, as many a true heart knows.—Alexander MacLaren.

A period of depression is like going through a tunnel. The sun has not ceased shining, because we do not see it. The sun of righteousness is still shining. Be patient and wait. This darkness is only permitted that the trial of our faith, which is more precious than gold, may strengthen, purify, and perfect it.

"We are not to stand apart from Christ and do something for Him. We are to go along beside Him, working in His very presence, and companioned by His power. Then all things will be possible to us."

ORA ET LABORA.

By Eugenie du Maurier Meredith.

The twilight falls, and the night bird calls,
Over meadows, dark and lonely,
While the dusk and sky are broken by
The light of the dim stars only:

The work and play of the smiling day
Have vanished beyond returning;
Which one shall say if our souls shall stay
Till tomorrow's sun be burning:

It is peace and rest which seem the best
To the toiling burden bearer;
And each life needs little loving deeds
To render its whole way fairer:

A cheerful word, like a singing bird,
Makes music some dumb space filling;
'Tis joy's sweet rest, in the blue bird's breast,
Which sets his clear notes to thrilling.

The Judge.

"Now, Bobby!" said his mother sternly, "did you ask Mrs. White for that cooky?" "No, mother, I didn't I jes' saw a plate full of cookies in her kitchen and I said, 'You is sure some cook, Mrs. White, if I's any judge'. An' she gimme one to see was I."—Boston Transcript.

VIRGINIA PRINCIPLES

By LYON G. TYLER, L.L. D.

This historical and illuminating address by Dr. Tyler, published serially in recent issues of SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN, has met with a most generous reception and approval by students of Virginia history and departments of research in all parts of the country. It is a fearless exposition of the fundamental principles upon which the Commonwealth of Virginia was founded, by which it grew, for which its people fought and to which we still adhere.

The complete address is now being put in pamphlet form and will be supplied at the price of

50 Cents a copy, postpaid.

"NO LOOSE LEAF PRAYER BOOK AND BIBLE"

LET MESSRS. BOWIE AND REILAND CHANGE THEIR CHURCH RATHER THAN CHANGE OUR CREEDS.

"Faithful are the wounds of a friend; but the kisses of an enemy are deceitful."

In the King James Version of the Bible, from which I was taught and by which my forefathers and foremothers have lived and died, loving communicants of the Church of England and the Protestant Episcopal Church, the above verse is included in the Proverbs of Solomon. Whether the Modernists concede Solomon the authorship of it or have dug out profound evidence and learning to prove it the work of some profane and recent hand, it is sound common sense, confirmed by ordinary present-day human experience. I respectfully commend it for the consideration of the Rev. Berryman Green, Dean of the Virginia Episcopal Theological Seminary.

The Southern Churchman is the loyal, reverent friend of the Seminary, so long as its Faculty teach the Bible as the inspired true Word of God. If it has wounded the Dean it sorrows sincerely both for the wounding and the causes that made it necessary. Having come into control of The Southern Churchman almost accidentally, I have been forced to understand that if the paper did not ask questions regarding the teaching and methods at the Seminary, it would be like the dogs dumb, so that they cannot bark and the watchmen blind or sleeping while the beasts of the field approach to devour. That comparison is from the Prophet Isaiah, whose prophecies I was brought up to know as part of the Holy Scriptures. Modernists and modern theological instruction may discredit Isaiah entirely, but I venture to quote him, as inspired by God Almighty.

Neither The Southern Churchman nor I as an individual seek controversy with anybody. The vast importance of the work and functions of the Seminary in the saving of human souls and for the future of our Church, our country and our race gives the subject dignity which makes familiar debating society tricks and petty personal squabbles and quarrels, quibbles and fencing, however cleverly done, distinctly inappropriate and improper.

We laymen, and many of the clergy with us, demand to know and have the right to know what kind of religion, churchmanship and doctrine are being taught in the Virginia Seminary, belonging to our Church, to those who will undertake to teach the children and grandchildren for whose existence we are responsible and for whose training we are accountable. We ask plain, straight questions, and as members of the Episcopal Church are entitled to demand plain and straight answers.

That is the position of The Southern Churchman, speaking for the laity of the Protestant Episcopal Church, certainly in the South, probably throughout the country.

The Rev. Berryman Green, Dean of the Seminary, in reply to some of these questions, has been kind enough to send me the issue of the Theological Seminary Bulletin of April 19, with lines and paragraphs in the leading article, headed "Letter to the Alumni", underscored and marked by himself. One of these paragraphs tells me the faculty of the Seminary teach, "The Christian faith as recorded in the Bible, which they believe to be inspired, and as witnessed to in the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds". This is comforting and reassuring. From it I gather that the Rev. Russell Bowie, of Grace Church, New York, and the Rev. Dr. Karl Reiland, of St. George's Church, New York, whose pulpit and platform utterances have been published widely—to the great pleasure of sceptics, atheists, infidels and foes of Christianity—are off the track and not inaccord with Seminary teaching. The Rev. Dr. Reiland, as I recall, repudiated the Creeds entirely as "gabble" and the Rev. Mr. Bowie regarded them as important only because they "express for us the poetry of religious emotion", as The New York Times quotes him. These gentlemen, I infer, are not fair and true typical flowers of the Seminary garden. To think of any one describing our grand and glorious Creeds as the "poetry of religious emotion"! This seems to me to be a natural output of one who is prodigal in words and a pauper in deep-seated thought and conviction and is similar to the expressions of a boy orator of the River Platte, which river is described as twelve inches deep and seven miles wide at the mouth. We strongly urge Messrs. Reiland and Bowie to change their Church rather than waste their time in trying to change our Creeds. This expression of Mr. Bowie sounds as if he thinks that we are governed by "emotions" like the Hottentots of darkest Africa, instead of being guided by the "deepest convictions" as to the Christian plan of Salvation, through the atoning blood of our Saviour Jesus Christ, who made there by Himself once offered on the cross a full, perfect and sufficient sacrifice, oblation and satisfaction for the sins of the whole world.

Dean Green's estimate of Messrs. Bowie and Reiland might be enlightening, but it is not known to me. Remembering that "The kisses of an enemy are deceitful", I am disturbed and distressed by the fact that The New York Churchman hurries to bestow its kisses and embraces on our Theological Seminary and to proffer defence of it against "the loud and confused bellowing of the Fundamentalist Southern Churchman", a characteristic bit of elegance in rhetoric. If an institution, like an individual, is to be judged by the company he keeps, the management and manners of our Seminary would be thought, from this association, in a bad way. Let us hope Dean Green and the faculty regard this volunteered aid as an unwelcome attempt to push into a discussion among well-bred people as an impertinent intrusion. There is, however, an unpleasant flavor of New York Churchman in the comment on The Southern Churchman included in the "Letter to the Alumni". This "Letter" presents explanation of the failure to answer directly criticism and question which seems to have been worked out with some labor and care. The institution, we are told, can not use a declaration of its religious faith as "an advertisement or a controversial weapon". "Furthermore," it continues, "a confession of faith made in self-defence or to allay unreasonable suspicion has little value." This is slightly contradictory of the somewhat explicit "confession of faith" regarding the Creeds. It has far more dignity of expression and meaning than The New York Churchman attains, but has deplorable resemblance to the nimbleness of that puglication in avoiding direct issues. There is further suggestion of The New York Churchman in the counter thrust, used in preference to frank facing of the realities of the subject under consideration. Allusion is made to my "intemperate and incoherent" assaults on the Seminary. This I take with entire good humor. I make no pretensions to rhetorical or literary skill. Being merely an ordinary layman, all I try to do is to "speak out in meetin' " sometimes and put into blunt words what the rank and file of the Church are thinking and asking. With equal good humor, I plead guilty to the charge that The Southern Churchman draws some inspiration from the Moody Institute. I can not quite see what that has to do with the kind of instruction given at the Seminary, but confess to liking for the robust realities of religion given by the Moody School and to belief that such schools and methods have done far more in the practical work of bettering humanity, saving souls and winning recruits for the Army of Christ than all the glittering theological gossamer of the Rev. Morphine Velvets ever spun or all the foggy metaphysical theology from musty brains of "learned" professors that has confused and afflicted the human understanding. And I fin ddistinctly funny the portentous charge that a number of the writers for The Southern Churchman "are from outside our Communion", coming from the faculty of an Episcopal theological seminary employing as its special lecturer a modernist Presbyterian clergyman. "Consistency, thou art a jewel." These counter thrusts have unpleasant resemblance to the tactics customary with a certain variety of lawyers in a certain kind of court, trying to establish defence by assailing the prosecutor.

This, however, is not a debate or quarrel or battle of wits. The issue is far too serious and far-reaching to be used for such exercises. Let us get right to the real points:

In The Southern Churchman of May 26, Mr. J. G. Blakesdale, of Chicago, presents, in clear, condensed form, some of the questions we laymen have asked regarding the teachings, methods and inzuences at the Seminary which we have moral, ethical and legal right to ask and which some of us intend to continue to ask until direct, categorical answers are extracted.

The Rev. Henry Sloane Coffin, D. D., Modernist Presbyterian clergyman, is special lecturer for the Virginia Theological Seminary of the Protestant Episcopal Church. This Seminary Bulletin I have, sent out by Dean Green, contains six columns of abstract of Dr. Coffin's Reinicker Lectures at the midwinter reunion of the Seminary, in February. Our first question is, why was a Modernist Presbyterian Doctor of Divinity chosen special lecturer for an Episcopal Seminary? This carries with it the naturally associated question, whether it was impossible to find a capable, trustworthy Episcopal clergyman as special lecturer to men being trained for the Episcopal ministry?

The next question is on the quality of Dr. Coffin's theology and the religious soundness or unsoundness of his opinions and teachings. Is it true, or untrue, that Dr. Coffin is known widely as an extreme radical in religious and theological belief, being of the faculty of Union Theological Seminary, described by Mr. Blakesdale as "frankly radical", teaching that when we say in the Creed that the Saviour was born of the Virgin Mary, we repeat a falsehood?

Is the Seminary sending to Episcopal pulpits men who will tell congregations that each person may pick and choose among the sentences and articles of the Creeds and believe or reject at pleasure, according to the opinion of the moment?

Is it true, or untrue, that Dr. Coffin is accepted by the extreme Modernists as representative, leader and exponent?

In the "Letter to the Alumni" sent to me, as reply to request for information, it is said the faculty of the Seminary accept the Creeds as expressing the Christian faith. I note that Dr. Coffin's name does not appear as signed to this, with the six members of the faculty. If it happens that the six of the regular faculty teach the truth of the Virgin Birth and a gentleman is brought from New York as special lecturer and does not believe with the faculty, which is the student supposed to follow?

..Was, or is, it not possible to obtain a special lecturer from some denomination, conceding that we may have none fit in our own Church, who believes with his whole heart and soul in the Creeds we repeat each Sunday?

Is it true, or untrue, that the Old Testament criticism taught at the Seminary is "frankly and uncompromisingly radical", in the words of Mr. Blakesdale, and that conservative scholarship on the Old Testament is ridiculed?

Is it true, or untrue, that the notes given in the class of Old Testament extension at the Virginia Theological Seminary "represent the definitely destructive criticisms brought from Germany"?

Is it true, or not true, that at the Seminary the prophetic element in the Books of the Prophets is scoffed at by faculty and students and that the unity, the integrity and the inspiration of the Old Testament are generally denied?

All these questions may be understood by anybody. They may be read and comprehended in ten minutes, answered with "Yes", or No", or "True", or "Untrue", in five minutes. It is not even necessary to write a letter. Dean Green, or any of the other five members of the faculty, can, with pen or pencil, write the answers in the blank places on this page of The Southern Churchman, sign and return.

As a reputable member of the Episcopal Church and member of a large family of Episcopalians, I have the right to ask these pertinent, proper and important questions and to expect frank, direct, kindly answers. The subject is too serious to be put aside with a posture of false dignity.

If we can obtain answers the members of the Episcopal Church can know what is being taught the flower of its young manhood, men who will have in keeping the life of the Church and direction of the lives of thousands in the coming generations. We may be able to know distinctly whether the disquieting reports regarding the methods and teachings at the Seminary shall be accepted mournfully as true or rejected joyously as false.

SHORT FAMILY PRAYERS

Reverend Joshua Peterkin, D. D.

MONDAY MORNING.

ALMIGHTY GOD, our Heavenly Father, through whose goodness we are permitted to see the light of another day, grant us grace, we beseech Thee, to devote to Thy service the lives which Thou hast prolonged.

We pray Thee to assist in all the duties to which we shall be called this day, that we may be diligent and faithful in their performance. Pardon our sins. Grant us the continual assistance of Thy Holy Spirit. Make us cheerful, and contented with our lot. Deliver us from all overwhelming pressure of anxiety and care; and, amid all our earthly employments, keep us ever mindful of a better world.

We would remember that our life is a shadow which soon passeth away, and that the trials which attend our mortal state will, ere long, come to an end. May we, therefore, study moderation in all our temporal enjoyments, and find comfort in Thy promises in all our troubles. Increase our faith in Him, who came into the world to save sinners. Enable us to lay hold of the offers of the gospel, and to derive our chief pleasure from the assurance of Thy favour here, and the hope of everlasting life hereafter. Be pleased to make all things work together for our good—"not weighing our merits, but pardoning our offences"—and thus, guided by Thy Providence, and sanctified by Thy Spirit, may we at the last attain the end of our faith, even the salvation of our souls.

We pray, also for our relations and friends. Pardon, O Lord, their trespasses and sins. May they all be partakers of the promises of the gospel. Lead them in safety through the temptations and trials of life, and make them happy in themselves, and blessings to all around them. Have pity upon all who are distressed, whether in "mind, body or estate", "giving them patience under their sufferings, and a happy issue out of all their afflictions". Send down Thine especial blessing upon the young. May all parents understand their responsibilities. May it be their great aim to seek Thy favour for their children, and not the riches and honors of this perishing world, that thus there may never be wanting in this land a seed to serve thee, or a generation to praise Thy name.

We present before Thee, O merciful Father, these, our imperfect prayers, in the name of Jesus Christ, our only Mediator and Advocate. Amen.

Our Father, &c.

The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, &c.

MONDAY EVENING.

Almighty and most merciful Father, we have erred and strayed from Thy ways like lost sheep. We have followed too much the devices and desires of our own hearts. We have offended against Thy holy laws. We have left undone those things which we ought to have done. And we have done those things which we ought not to have done. And there is no health in us. But Thou, O Lord, have mercy upon us, miserable sinners. For Thy dear Son's sake forgive us all that is past; and grant that we may ever hereafter serve and please Thee in newness of life, to the honour and glory of Thy name. We bring all our sins to Thy cross, O blessed Saviour. Be pleased to blot them out with Thy most precious blood. Pardon our iniquities, for they are great; and cleanse and purify our hearts. And as we are set in the midst of so many and great dangers, that by reason of the frailty of our nature we cannot always stand upright, grant us such strength and protection as may support us in all dangers, and carry us through all the temptations to which we may be exposed.

Lord, we thank Thee for having given us Thy Word as a lamp unto our feet and a light unto our path. May its truths be brought home to our hearts by the teaching of Thy Holy Spirit. And may we embrace and ever hold fast the blessed hope of everlasting life which Thou hast given us in our Saviour, Christ.

Grant that we may ever live as those who are pilgrims and strangers here. May we be seeking a better country, even an heavenly, so that amidst all our occupations and engagements our minds may be kept in perfect peace, being stayed upon Thee.

Be with all who are traveling by land or by water, with all sick persons, especially with our neighbours and friends. Have pity on the poor. Be the Father of the fatherless and the God of the widow. Draw near to them in the hour of trouble, and give them a happy issue out of all their afflictions.

Bless each one of us as Thou seest we severally need. And be with all who are near and dear to us. Grant an answer of peace, we beseech Thee, to these our prayers, which we offer up in the name of Jesus Christ, our Saviour. Amen.

Our Father, &c.

The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, &c.

THE LAST RESORT OF OPPONENTS OF CHRISTIAN MARRIAGE

By the Reverend Walker Gwynne, D. D.

THE latest illustration of the extreme to which the opponents of the indissoluble character of Christian marriage are driven is a bold attack on the accuracy of St. Mark's account of Christ's teaching in 10:2-12, and incidentally that of St. Paul and St. Luke, by a prominent clergyman of the Church of England (Divorce and Nullity, by Dr. R. H. Charles, Archdeacon of Westminster, T. and T. Clark, Edinburgh, 1927).

The particular purpose of this volume is to "prove", from St. Matt. 5:32 and 19:9, (1) that "fornication" in the same sentence with "adultery", means adultery; and (2), that "when the husband is disloyal to his wife, or the wife to her husband, the marriage is ipso facto dissolved"; and "the state in issuing the decree of divorce is not putting asunder those whom God hath joined together, but is only recognizing the already existing fact, that, by the disloyalty of either or both, the persons in question have already put themselves asunder" (Pp. 2, 3).

Without going into the special pleading with which the author reaches this conclusion, it is only necessary to call attention to the extraordinary dogmatic way in which this thesis is "proved". It is little less, in fact, than a series of unsubstantiated assertions that St. Mark's account of our Lord's words in 10:2-12, dealing with the same incident as that recorded by St. Matthew in 19:3-9, is entirely wrong, "mutilated, distorted, untrustworthy, unhistorical and false" (passim). A few quotations, strung together, as they are, by a slender thread of argument, will show the short and easy way in which this is made "obvious".

"Let us now compare the narratives in the first two Gospels which are so hopelessly at variance on this question" (p. 6):

"These eight verses (Matt. 19:3-9) ought not to be taken in connection with the three that follow (10-12)" (p.8).

"The question put by the Pharisees is authentic in Matthew, but unhistorical in Mark—and put in a form impossible for any sane and self-respecting Jew" (p. 9).

Referring to the question of the Pharisees, "Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife for every cause"? the author writes, "In Mark this question has been mutilated, and the form in which it has been transmitted is unhistorical and false" (p. 10).

"In this much edited and distorted narrative in Mark these words make it clear, etc." (p. 15).

"Mark's narrative contains another misrepresentation of fact in ascribing to Christ the wholly gratuitous and unhistorical statement that the wife was not to divorce her husband" (p. 17). "It is unhistorical," he adds, "in other respects. First, it contains another gross mis-statement of facts. Secondly, it assigns to the Pharisees words which were uttered by Christ, and assigns to Christ words which were used by the Pharisees" (p. 17).

"The disordered text of Mark compared with the clear and logical order of Matthew. The former untrustworthy from start to finish" (p. 22).

"But we have not yet exhausted Mark's inaccuracies. . . . Mark represents our Lord as weakly asking, 'What did Moses command you'?" (p. 24).

"Thus the entire narrative in Mark is false in its statements of fact, and hopelessly feeble in its style" (p. 25).

In his "summary of conclusions", Dr. Charles writes: "It is my aim to show that Matthew deliberately (italicized in p. 6) rejected the narrative in Mark as unhistorical", and that his report of Christ as teaching "that marriage was indissoluble under all conditions", was due to a "falsifier of the text"; and that it follows that there is no evidence in the Gospels of any kind to prove that marriage is indissoluble" (p. 34). Again, he writes, "The conclusion that the bond of marriage is severed by disloyalty is (apart from the untrustworthy record in Mark 10:2-12), that of the entire New Testament (First, Third and Fourth Evangelists, and 1 Cor.)" (p. 4, note).

He confesses, indeed, that the statement of St. Luke (16:18), the most scholarly and historically accurate of all the Evangelists, "standing alone, and severed (why "severed"?) from its context, could be taken as declaring the indissolubility of marriage". He tries his best also to get rid of the plain teaching of St. Paul, whose record is earlier than the earliest of the Evangelists, when he writes, "Not I command, but the Lord (Jesus)", that the separted wife must "remain unmarried, or be reconciled to her husband" (1 Cor. 7:11). Then, with strange inconsistency, he confesses this to be "a true logion, a true saying of our Lord", while he proceeds to becloud with a wholly irrelevant argument about the Jewish law (though the Apostle, like St. Mark, is writing for Gentiles) which allowed a woman to forsake her husband, but not to divorce him (p. 28).

So, after getting rid, by this short and easy method, of St. Paul, St. Luke and St. Mark, Dr. Charles finds in St. Matthew, with its "except for fornication", and his deliberate rejection of the Maracan record (p. 6), that marriage is only a contract, subject ipso facto to instant dissolution, "when there is an absolute breach of its essential conditions" (p. 2); "and that the guiltless has the right to contract a fresh marriage" Pp. 4, 5).

But neither of these assumptions is true, even on the face of St. Matthew's own record of our Lord's words, upon which the author bases his entire argument against three other witnesses to the contrary! (1) As to the first assumption, it is not true that fornication and adultery are synonymous. Both passages testify plainly that adultery is only used to define the sin of a married person, or of an unmarried person who marries one who is divorced. In St. Matt. 15:9, also St. Mark 7:2 and 1 Cor. 6:9, the two words are used in the same sentence, as they are used here, in evident contrast or contra-distinction. Adultery in a loose way may be called fornication as including all illicit intercourse, even incest (1 Cor. 5:1). But fornication of itself can no more be forced to mean adultery than to mean incest.

It was only lack of scholarship, and carelessness, and haste in the General Convention of 1868 that permitted "fornication" in St. Matthew to be transformed into "adultery" in the canon. If the word "fornication" had been put there as the first premise of all that follows, the falsity of the argument would have been so evident, that the fatal proviso and exception would have been removed long ago.

(2) As to the second assumption, it needs only to be pointed out that, whether "except it be for fornication" be our Lord's own words, or else the editorial explanation of a Jewish editor of the first or second century, for the benefit of Jewish readers, it cannot possibly be made to mean permission for re-marriage for either innocent or guilty. For, while the grammatical construction definitely allows "putting away" under certain circumstances, it just as definitely condemns re-marriage as adultery.

We have then in this little book of less than one hundred pages, of which only thirty-four are devoted to "Divorce", a long series of unsupported assertions and assumptions, concerning which the whole Church of the first three centuries was living in absolute ignorance, as shown both by her definite teaching and by her discipline. It was to that age, when the unwritten tradition of "the mind of Christ" from the lips of Apostolic and sub-Apostolic men, and the written tradition of at least two of those centuries, was fresh and clear, that our English reformers in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries confidently appealed for confirmation of the faith. That also is our only safe rule of interpretation today.

Yet it is this series of assumptions which the author makes the basis of his final and sweeping assertion that "the narrative in Mark stands alone, and is unhistorical, being obviously written to prove a dogma". And then he adds: "This dogma, therefore, is a human fiction (p. 34)". This kind of criticism of a Greek text that has stood the test of 1,800 years, especially of the keen, and often hostile, scrutiny and research of the last hundred years, suggests rather the methods of the butcher than of the skilled hand of the surgeon, or the thoughtful diagnosis of the physician. It may be safely left, however, to the sane and unprejudiced judgment of humble disciples of our Lord to decide upon its merits.

For those who are so fortunate as to possess a copy of Archbishop Alexander's "Leading Ideas of the Gospels", it would be enlightening to read there the many remarkable signs of accuracy, "the life-like details" which are found only in St. Mark, in spite of his Gospel being the briefest of all; a very "picture gallery of memory" of the looks and feelings, and even the thoughts of Christ" (Chapter 3). And this is the Gospel that is singled out as bearing false witness to Him!

Such criticism, if applied to other things besides divorce, the divinity of our Lord for instance, would soon leave us, not merely the rags and remnants of what St. John calls "The Everlasting Gospel", but no Gospel at all—a merely human and fallible Christ, and a new and easy morality adapted to the low and selfish desires and fancies of the moment.

NOTES ON THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

Article XXII.

Deals with Ordination.

Article XXIV.

A very important one in that it deals with the Worship of the Church in a Tongue that the People can understand.

From Primitive times the Church has always taught in the language of the people.

This article again is a reply to the Council of Trent. In 1562 the Council of Trent decreed that:

"If any should say that the mass ought to be celebrated only in the vulgar tongue he should be anathematized."

This caused our reformers to present the "Service in the Common Tongue of the People".

The ancient liturgies were all in the vernacular. Origen says: "The Greeks use Greek in their prayers, the Romans Latin, and so every one in his own language prays to God".

Article XXV.

Because certain followers of Zwingli had a tendency to deprecate the value of the Sacraments and because the Romanists had a tendency to make their efficacy independent of the spiritual attitude of the worshipper, the Church of England found it necessary to assert the real character of the Sacraments as effectual signs of grace.

The opportunity was taken also to distinguish between the true Sacraments, as laid down by Jesus Christ, and the so-called Sacraments, and also to condemn the superstitious use of the elements of the Holy Communion and to emphasize the necessity of a worthy reception.

The Seven Sacraments were first recognized by Council of Florence and Council of Trent. They were first mentioned by Peter Lombard, who died in 1165, whereas the two Sacraments, Holy Communion and Baptism, have been in use since New Testament times.

Article XXVI.

Deals with the worthiness and unworthiness of ministers and states: That the offices of the Church, the Communion and Baptism, even though ministered by men of "evil repute", are nevertheless effectual as being ordained of Christ and the attitude of the recipient be in accordance with the Will and Word of God, but closes with the instruction that the men so living should be deposed.

Article XXVII.

Deals with the Sacrament of Baptism and points out that infant baptism is agreeable to the Word of God and also that in the very act of Baptism we are made members of "Christ's Church".

Article XXVIII.

Deals with the Lord's Supper. One of he most important of the articles, composed by the Reformers in 1552 and revised in 1562:

(1) Its object, to declare that the Lord's Supper is not a mere sign, but a Sacrament having an inward spiritual grace.

(2) To repudiate the Doctrine of Transubstantiation and to protest against certain practices growing out of this Doctrine of Transubstantiation.

Transubstantiation is defined as: The change of the substance of Bread and Wine. The doctrine first appears in the writings of Paschasius Raabertus, 830, a monk of Corbey, who was refuted by Bertram, another monk at Corbey, and also by others. The doctrine gained ground in spite of this. It was expressly decreed by the Fourth Lateran Council, 1215, and finally laid down by Council of Trent, 1551.

This doctrine is largely mixed up with the Metaphysical Thought of the Middle Ages. The substance of the thing is the imaginary something which underlies its qualities and in which they are supposed to inhere. According to the theory of Transubstantiation, the Substance of our Lord's Body and Blood takes the place of the substance of the bread and wine, though the sensible qualities of the latter remain.

It is difficult to see how such a metaphysical theory could be proved by Holy Scripture except by the statement of the theory in explicit terms, but such a statement cannot be found anywhere.

The consecrated bread is still called "bread". The consecrated wine is still His cup (1 Cor. 11:26-28). There is nothing to indicate a change of substance.

The real presence is correct if it is taken to mean a real presence as an actual spiritual presence, but not so if taken to mean a real presence as a corporal presence. The Body and Blood of our Lord is verily and indeed given to the receiver who, however, does not receive it and eat it unless he have faith. That is to say, the Body and Blood are taken and received in an heavenly and spiritual manner only.

The consecrated elements were reserved for communication of the sick. This was recognized by the Prayer Book, 1549, but this practice was taken away by the Book of 1552, and again authorized by the Book of 1560.

The rubric at the end of the service states distinctly that if any of the consecrated elements remain unconsumed the priest and communicants shall immediately after the blessing reverently eat and drink the same.

This rubric guarded against any profane or superstitious practices.

The Festival of Corpus Christi arose out of the Doctrine of Transubstantiation. It was established with a view to adoration. The host or wafer was carried in procession, first under a veil, afterwards in a glass box, and it is out of this Festival that the service of the Benediction arose.

Article XXIX.

Deals with the necessity of urging the people who would be partakers of the Body and Blood of our Lord, that they must be of a clear and living faith.

Article XXX.

Stresses the need of giving both the Body and Blood, or the Bread and the Wine to all who so desire it, fulfilling Christ's Command.

Article XXXI.

Stresses again the efficacy of the Cross of Christ, a sacrifice once made once for all and condemns the practice of the continual sacrifice as exemplified in the Mass.

Article XXXII.

Deals with the celibacy of the clergy, repudiating the teaching of Rome and all others who teach the same thought —celibacy, taking for their authority in condemning this teaching the Gospels and Epistles, St. Matt. 19:10-12, and also 1 Tim. 4:1-3; 1 Tim. 33:2, 4 and 12.

Article XXXIII.

Deals with persons outside the pale of the Church because of their mode of living, until they are reconciled to God and man.

Article XXXIV.

Deals with traditions of the Church or its usages. They are consistent with all that is good, if they are not contrary to anything in the Word of God.

Article XXXV.

On the Homilies as being useful, inasmuch as they contain good and wholesome doctrine.

Our American Book says this in a footnote: The Books of Homilies to be an explication of Christian doctrine and instructive in piety and morals.

Article XXXVI.

Deals with the Ordination of Bishops and Ministers.

Articles XXXVII-VIII-IX.

Collectively deal with the civil government or citizenship.

These notes on the Articles are intended as a reminder of what seemed necessary in the Sixteenth Century to be definitely stated, so as to cope in their opinion (The Reformers) once for all with practices and false statements that had been in being for so many years.

We are told that Heresies continually arise, if they are once begun. They seem to have renewed life from time to time, like the fabled Phoenix that died and was re-born out of fire. Taking special notice, therefore, of the errors exemplified, and to which these articles were a reply. Thus Article VI, Article XXIV, Article XXV, Article XXVII, Article XXXI.

If we can definitely state that there is no desire to depart from the Word of God and no effort to put human interpretation on what is necessary for salvation or the correctness of that Word. If we can definitely state that the superstitions connected with the Bread and Wine of the Communion, are no longer in evidence; if we can definitely state that the Sacrament is never reserved nor worshipped, that the Service of Benediction or Corpus Christi is never used, then remove the Articles; but if, on the other hand, if we find even in a remote degree such is the case, then leave them as they are, and trust they will again do what they were intended to do, correct men's thoughts and actions regarding the interpretation of doctrines of our Church.

In Convention of 1792 Bishop Seabury was in doubt as to their necessity, although he acknowledged his inability to answer an argument pressed on him, "That without them individual ministers would have to do by their respective will and authority what had better be done by known law for the preventing of the delivery of opposite doctrines to their flocks by different preachers". And so they remained. Let us, therefore at our next Convention, do likewise for the good of the Church in general and our own in particular, for if once the process of elimination is begun, one can never know where it will end, if only to give men something to discuss.

Acknowledgment is made to Liturgical Americanae by Wm. M. Garvey, The Tutorial Prayer Book, Neil and Willoughby, the Prayer Book, Evan Daniel; and others.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed—"Thy word have I hid in my heart" (Psalm 119:11).

This week the following verse was submitted by Mr. P. M. Christian, of Atlanta, Ga.:

> "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man; but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it" (1 Cor. 10:13).

Who will send one from the far-away places, as well as very near us?

THE SURRENDERED LIFE---IN CHRIST

Conducted by the Reverend Frank Cox

WHAT is the court of final appeal in the Christian life? Men have appealed to Reason, to Tradition and to Revelation, which one of these constitutes for us our final court of appeal?

Reason today holds chief sway in many quarters. Many believe that it is all that is needed to conduct us through life, and to give us correct thoughts about the life hereafter. The advocates of Reason are not only skeptical of Tradition, and ready to deny anything that does not appeal readily to the "modern mind", but are convinced that they are competent to sit in judgment upon Revelation also, and to declare it unnecessary if not impossible.

No one desires to discredit Reason. Nor does one wish to hold that which is irrational, but we can see clearly that Reason has its limits. The human mind is apt to be influenced by the prejudices of the reasoner. It is well enough to talk of Pure Reason, but then Reason does not exist in that state. It cannot be isolated like a chemical element. There is always a reasoner behind every reason and he possesses certain passions and limitations that interfere with the purity of his reasoning. For one thing there is sin with its blighting effect upon the outlook of the mind.

Human Reason has always been in disagreement about the highest matters, so that we are in a quandary as to whom we shall choose. Certain superficial thinkers can speak glibly of the "consensus of scholarship", that always seems to be on their side, but deeper study will show that such "consensus" does not exist. Are we, then, to depend upon a majority vote and argue that the verdict will rest with the "heaviest battalions"?

In matters that are above the sphere of human knowledge the common sense person will feel that his view in the matter is as apt to be correct as that of the expert. In thinking of the life to come, outside of a revelation from One who knows, one man's guess is as good as another's.

In the end this uncertainty undermines the conclusions of reason and skepticism results. The shifting sands of human reason provide no certain resting place for human faith. The results of the deification of human reason are evident on every hand today. We find widespread skepticism, and unrest, from the pulpit an uncertain note, and among the young who are reaping what the older generations have sown, a distressing break in moral standards. Life seems to have lost meaning.

At such a time Tradition makes a strong appeal. The appeal to Tradition has more to commend it than the other. It is surely more sensible to trust to what a great number of people through the ages have thought good, than to put your faith in some untried experiment of today. To those who wish an easy-going way or to those who have grown weary of effort after truth, it is the simplest thing to fall back upon that which professes to be old. Put yourself under the care of the Church, she has had the experience and can guide you safely, is the specious argument put forward.

Tradition is more dangerous in its appeal than the other, because it builds up for itself a false faith. Deification of Reason soon degenerates into Rationalism, it has in itself the seeds of its own dissolution, but Tradition can entangle men in a false faith, a substitute for the true, something "just as good".

The only stable ground of appeal is to Revelation. That appeal our Church makes. We are not to teach as essential to salvation, anything contrary to God's Word or that cannot be plainly proved therein. When God has spoken, man's reason, whether individual or collective, must bow. The Bible throughout claims to be the Word of God. "Holy men of old spoke as they were moved by the Holy Spirit." "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God." "These are they that testify of Me."

Reason may be used to discover whether there be a revelation, but when that point is settled then God's Word takes the first place. Likewise, there may be no harm in some traditions, but they must always be tested by the Word of God. In that way the Church in her growth will always be kept pure and true to the mind and will of God.

PLAIN BIBLE STUDIES

Prepared by J. T. Bougher. Reading Terminal, Philadelphia, Pa.

Note: In this new series of studies effort will be made to set forth in brief form wondrous things that God would have us know as told in His own eternal words.

LESSON—No. 38.
TOPIC—The Preciousness of Our Lord to the Believer.

Whether we realize it or not, from the moment Christ the Lord is sincerely received as our Saviour, just that quickly there is established between the believer and the beloved Son of God, more than one hundred different relationships, as set forth in the following Scriptures. Let the believer carefully ponder each one and receive a new vision of the wonders of His grace:

1. He is my Atonement.—Rom. 5:11.
2. He is my Assurance.—Rom. 8:1.
3. He is my Advocate.—1 John 2:1.
4. He is my Avenger.—Luke 18:7.
5. He is my Armour.—Eph. 6:11.
6. He is my Beloved.—Song of Sol. 5:16.
7. He is my Bishop.—1 Peter 2:25.
8. He is my Bridegroom.—Matt. 9:15.
9. He is my Buckler.—2 Sam. 22:31.
10. He is my Brother.—Mark 3:35.
11. He is my Burden-bearer.—Ps. 55:22.
12. He is my Bread of Life.—St. John 6:33.
13. He is my Confessor.—Ps. 32:5.
14. He is my Cloud by Day.—Ex. 13:21.
15. He is my Comfort.—1 Cor. 1:4.
16. He is my Chief Cornerstone.—1 Peter 2:6.
17. He is my Captain.—Heb. 2:10.
18. He is my Company.—Josh 1:9.
19. He is my Counsellor.—Isa. 9:6.
20. He is my Deliverer.—2 Tim. 4:18.
21. He is my Drink.—1 Cor. 10:3, 4.
22. He is My Door.—St. John 10:7.
23. He is my Eternal Life.—St. John 3:15.
24. He is my Elect.—1 Peter 2:6.
25. He is my Freedom.—St. John 3:32.
26. He is my Friend.—St. John 15:14.
27. He is my God.—Ex. 15:2.
28. He is my Grace.—2 Tim. 1:9.
29. He is my Glory.—2 Cor. 3:18.
30. He is my Guide.—Isa. 58:11.
31. He is my Grief-Bearer.—Isa. 53:4.
32. He is my Hope.—1 Tim. 1:1.
33. He is my High-Priest.—Heb. 8:1.
34. He is my Head.—1 Cor. 11:3.
35. He is my Healer.—Isa. 53:5.
36. He is my Hiding-place.—Ps. 27:5.
37. He is my Helper.—Heb. 13:6.
38. He is my High-Tower.—2 Sam 22:3.
39. He is my Health-restorer.—Jer. 30:17
40. He is my Intercessor.—Heb. 7:25.
41. He is my Instructor.—Ps. 32:8.
42. He is my Justification.—Gal. 2:16.
43. He is my Love.—1 Peter 1:8.
44. He is my Joint-heir.—Rom. 8:17.
45. He is my King.—Rev. 19:16.
46. He is my Keeper.—Ps. 121:5.
47. He is my Life.—Col. 3:4.
48. He is my Lord.—St. John 13:13.

WHAT A WONDERFUL SAVIOUR!

"And ye are complete in Him, which is the head o. all principality and power."—Col. 2:10.

"Unto you therefore which believe He is precious."—1 Peter 2:7.

"Blessed be the Name of the Lord."—Ps. 113:2.

A GREAT AMERICAN STATESMAN AND CHRISTIAN SOLDIER,

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

Because of the overwhelming genius of Lee and of that general's unparalleled appeal to his people, or largely because of these things, Jefferson Davis, the President of the Confederate States of America, was never a popular hero in the South, in the degree that some other leaders of the section were. It was charged, and, perhaps, rightly so, that Mr. Davis meddled too much in the operations of troops who were being directed by able chieftains. The President himself had been a military man, and in that capacity served his country with great distinction. It is said that his fondest wish was not to become civil head of the Confederate government, but to command soldiers in the field. He had seen much service in the Mexican campaigns as colonel of the Mississippi Rifles. On one occasion he was severely wounded early in the fight, but refused to evacuate himself until victory had crowned American arms. It was Mr. Davis, by the way, who, as an officer in the United States Army, administered the oath of allegiance to Abraham Lincoln when the future Union leader assumed command of a company in Illinois for the Black Hawk War.

With the passing of the years, however, the figure of Jefferson Davis looms larger and larger in the critical minds of the South. He lacked the dash of a Stuart, the genius of a Lee and the consecration of a Jackson, but he was possessed in abundant measure of the qualities both of brain and heart which distinguish the truly great man. Either as statesman or soldier, Jefferson Davis is surpassed by few men in the history of this country. As Secretary of War in the Pierce administration, he was the dominating figure in the Federal government. The President leaned upon him as a wise counsellor, not only in matters which affected the army, but in consideration of other problems which came up for executive action. Although he was in the Senate at a time when that body boasted of an eminent galaxy of men, he was a notable Senator among notable Senators. His farewell address, when he resigned his seat to cast his fortunes with the South, is one of the classics of American oratory.

In addition to his undoubted ability, Mr. Davis was devoted to the cause of the Confederacy. He may have been arbitrary at times; he may have interfered with military operations which could have been better handled by the generals in the field; he may have been unjust to Joseph E. Johnston, who was then, and is now, regarded as one of the outstanding American soldiers, or, for that matter, one of the outstanding soldiers, of all time; but, appraising his faults at their highest value, Jefferson Davis, clothed in all the shortcomings attributed to him, was a great man and a great patriot, the captain of the Confederacy who went down with his ship and bore unflinchingly the burdens of his people.

The South has in its heart a warm spot for one of its most distinguished sons. That spot is growing warmer year by year. Affection for Mr. Davis is increasing as he is revealed more and more clearly in his true nature. And so it is that tomorrow, June 4, the one hundred and twentieth anniversary of his birth, the section for which he labored and agonized will remember him in love and tenderness. The time is come, too, when the country generally regards him not as an "arch rebel", but as a great and good American, reflecting in his life and works the principles on which the republic was founded and for which he was ready to die a martyr.—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

The Great Commission

TO FRIENDS OF MEXICO.

Far up in the mountains in the State of Jalisco is the little village of San Sebastian. Our missionaries from Guadalajara have ministered for years to our congregation there. For a time the Rev. Josue Diaz, then a Deacon, was in charge of San Sebastian and Tlajomulco, living in the latter place until he and his mother and sisters were driven out by the rebels. For a time it seemed that both missions would have to be closed, as the persecutions eventually extended to our people in San Sebastian. Time after time they were molested and driven from their homes. Thy have been insulted, threatened and even imprisoned, and yet they have never wavered in their loyalty and devotion. Somehow or other these poor Indians, out of their penury, have always paid their quota for the general work of the Church.

I shall never forget my visit to them and the reverent and moving service we held in an adobe room without windows. Part of the congregation from Tlajomulco was there and among them the widow of one of our laymen who was killed the night Mr. Diaz was driven out, and with her were her little children, one of whom was wounded in his father's arms when the assassins killed him.

Little did we think, that day, that San Sebastian was soon to pass through a similar experience and be cut off from Guadalajara for a period which Archdeacon Salinas described as "three terrible days".

In the midst of all these difficulties our Deacon Jose N. Robredo took charge of the work. He has been a tower of strength to his people, sharing their troubles and privations and sleeping with them in the mountains when it is not safe for them to remain in the village.

But, as is sometimes the case, persecution has made this congregation all the stronger. They have now reached the point where they must have a real church. Plans have been drawn and the people are already hard at work making adobes and gathering stones. The little church will cost about $2,000 (Mex.) mas o menos. The congregation stand ready to assume $600 (Mex.) of the cost in labor and gifts. The balance, $1,400 (Mex.) l must raise somewhere.

This letter is an appeal to you to help with a gift large or small. On April 24, the Department of Missions passed a resolution authorizing me to make an appeal for $750 U. S. Cy. This is the first general appeal I have made to friends of Mexico to help me with a building project. May I hope for a response so generous that I may report at General Convention that the Church at San Sebastian is provided for and under way? Surely your fellow Churchmen in San Sebastian deserve your sympathy and help.

Book Reviews

UNSEARCHABLE RICHES: By Arno Clemens Gaebelein, D. D. Cloth. Pp. 157. Published by Our Hope, 456 Fourth Avenue, New York. Price $1.25.

To review and commend anything Dr. Gaebelein may write on dispensational truth is both a privilege and a pleasure. And in this treatise he is fully at home. For he has spent many years in the study of this particular theme. And the Epistle to the Ephesians, which is here treated, is the keystone of Christian doctrine, and the lens through which we discover the purpose of God for the ages.

Confessedly, the lack of knowledge of the depths of this letter of the great Apostle accounts for the readiness with which, as the Epistle warns, many are even now "tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness". If we could put the Doctor's little volume into the hands of every sincere believer, and know that its contents were fully digested, there would g no fear in their case of declensions from the faith.

With the author's usual penetration and accuracy, the Epistle is analyzed and synthecized, so that the orderly arrangement of the teaching may be most easily comprehended. Then, the unfolding of the meaning of special terms is a desirable feature. When we follow the Doctor in his treatment of the wonderful section, embracing chapter 1:17-2:10, wherein the power of our glorified Lord is defined and our union with Him is assured, we lay the book down energized in faith, gladdened in heart.

GENTLEMEN—THE KING! By John Oxenham, author of "The Hidden Years", "Bees in Amber". Slip covered boards. Pp. 96. Published by the Pilgrim Press, Boston, Mass. Price, 75 cents.

Those who can recall the flowering of the Victorian Age in literary fragrance, appreciate that both time for poetry and a taste for it, marked that era. John Oxenham seems to recall us to the order then existent. His previous compositions also link us to that age. We are so rushed, the fever of life is so highly temperatured, our terminology is so sketchy, running at times into almost vulgar slang, that we are won away from the muses to the sordid commonplace. We may well be ashamed of our hurly-burly goings and doings, our slouchly consideration for personal culture and aspiration.

In this little volume the author, well-known to many readers of the best literature, leads us into the most precious of all themes, the life of our Lord, from His boyhood to His ascension. With majestic measure and sweetening cadences we are carried forward into realms of high thought and devout contemplation.

FACTS AND OPINIONS CONCERNING THE BRITISH-ISRAEL THEORY: By the Rev. Arthur Simmons, M. A. Paper. Pp. 19. Published by Charles J. Thynne and Jarvis, Ltd., 28-30 Whitefriars Street, Fleet Street, London, E. C. 4. Price, three-pence.

Books dealing with this abstruse and so much discussed problem are usually so heavily-weighted with formidable argument as well as voluminous treatment, that the ordinary reader is reluctant to pursue the study of the question. Almost numberless were the volumes sent forth by Lieutenant Totten in our own land the latter part of the century past. And many were won or antagonized by his ardent espousal of the theory.

Here is a succinct treatise which has boiled down the objections to the claim that Britain comprised the tribe of Ephraim, the United States the tribe of Manassah, though this author omits America, which others include. The language is simple and the viewpoint thoroughly sincere. Mrs. Jessie Sage Robertson, Piedmont, Cal., is also conducting a campaign with equal emphasis and simplicity. Unquestionably, there are arguments on both sides.

While the British-Israel adherents are most enthusiastic in their discovery of texts which bolster the postulate, those who cannot grasp the norm of the ideal are hard-pressed to understand what value it has upon Christian culture. We may and do love them for their devotion to the Word as they understand it; and they certainly have an important place in our day, standing as they do for an unmutilated Bible. They do believe in prophecy; they do hold to the faith. And for that we may thank God. But what does this theory do for our souls? The perplexity is further involved when we consider that though England is a separate nation, ethnologically, America is fast departing from the Anglo-Saxon heritage, soon to become such a conglommeration of races as to defy any distinct individuality. That it should be the tribe of Manassah is hard to conceive. As there is no American publishing house indicated on this pamphlet, American readers will have to order direct from London or through some dealer in foreign publications. The book is worth-while for those who would pursue the subject.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letters to the Editor" will appear in our columns except those coming to us signed by writer.

ENCOURAGEMENT.

Mr. Editor:

. . . . . Each issue of The Southern Churchman is filled to its brim with rich spiritual food. I am a subscriber to several Church papers and other magazines, and daily papers, but I get more spiritual food, better explanations of Scriptural writings and as much information from other fields as from any I read.

I save each issue and pass it on to other members of our parish and hope to inspire or encourage quite a few of them to become regular subscribers. I don't want my home to be without it again, for it brings sunshine and wholesome thoughts for the entire week. * * * *

Again thanking you heartily for this great gift and congratulating you and the other members of our editorial staff for the very fine material published.

I am very gratefully yours,

THE ONLY WAY.

Mr. Editor:

I am glad to hear about The Southern Churchman; we pray the Lord's blessing upon that ministry.

Every problem in life, whether it be international, national or local, can be completely solved on the basis of the Word of God, and outside of that none can be solved: It is the only way.

In line with the ministry of the Word, I am enclosing a few circulars which show the value of this ministry. The anti-Bible society circular is causing more requests for Bibles than we can supply. I am harassed on every side with speaking engagements and requests from hotel managers for Bibles for guest rooms.

We take the liberty of sending you the Gideon magazine, with our compliments, each month. I am sure you will be interested in the editorials by S. A. Fulton, our President; he is one of the largest automobile accessory manufacturers in America; he writes from the standpoint of a business man.

ANTIPATHY.

Mr. Editor:

The "Articles of Religion" in our Prayer Book, which originated in reign of Edward VI (mostly Cranmer's work and forty-two in number, though condensed later in Elizabeth's reign into the present thirty-nine), were suppressed in Queen Mary's reign, showing the Roman Church's antipathy to them.

It were well to bear this carefully in mind now, when the same antipathy to these Articles is shown by that element in our Protestant Episcopal Church, which leans toward Rome, and would draw our Church away from the other Protestant bodies. If they cannot suppress them, they would fain put them as much out of sight as possible.

Berkeley Minor, Sr.

LET THE RIENNIAL CONVENTION KNOW.

Mr. Editor:

If Protestant Evangelical Churchmen in our Church, both clergy and laity, would stand together, and let the Triennial Convention know that they will not use the Revised Prayer Book if it contains popish teachings, etc., and that they will continue to use the present Book of Common Prayer, I believe the proposals of the Catholic Party would be voted down.

Unless a bold stand is made at the coming Convention against the plot of the Pro-Roman party to introduce popish teachings in our Church, loyal Protestant Evangelical Churchmen will be compelled to withdraw from our Communion.

I do hope that old Virginia will let her voice be heard at the Convention. This is our hope and prayer.

DIOCESE OF ARKANSAS.

The Fifty-sixth Annual Convention of the Diocese of Arkansas was held in Christ Church, Little Rock, on May 2-3, and was especially blessed with the presence of the Most Rev. John G. Murray, D. D., Presiding Bishop, who preached the Convention sermon, also two others at missionary services on Wednesday and Thursday nights.

The keynote of the Convention was thanksgiving to God for the return of the Diocesan, the Rt. Rev. James R. Winchester, D. D., who, though much benefited in health, on the advice of his physicians, was not present at the Convention. The Rt. Rev. E. W. Saphore, D. D., Suffragan Bishop of the Diocese, presided throughout.

The annual address of Bishop Winchester was read to the Convention by Mr. Thomas E. Wood, Secretary of the Diocese. The annual meeting of the Convention was changed from April to the third Wednesday in January.

Election results are as follows:

Standing Committee—The Revs. G. F. Collins, C. C. Burke, H. A. Stowell, John Williamson and Messrs. R. E. Lee, R. W. Newell, A. L. Ferguson.

Diocesan Executive Council—The Revs. W. P. Witsell, D. D., C. F. Collins, Louis Tucker, D. D., J. H. Boosey, C. C. Burke and Messrs. Thomas E. Wood, J. D. Barlow, R. E. Lee, S. A. Pernot, C. E. Ratcliff, Charles D. James, H. J. Coomber.

Deputies to the General Convention —The Very Rev. John Williams, Little Rock; the Rev. C. F. Collins, Hot Springs; the Rev. W. P. Witsell, D. D., Little Rock; the Rev. H. A. Stowell, Pine Bluff; Messrs. John D. Barlow, Hope; Thomas E. Wood, Little Rock; Charles D. James, Eureka Springs; J. Conway Fitzhugh, Batesville.

Alternate Deputies—The Rev. C. C. Burke, Marianna; the Rev. J. H. Boosey, Batesville; the Rev. Louis Tucker, D. D., Fort Smith; the Rev. R. R. Claiborne, Camden; Messrs. D. H. Cantrell, Little Rock; H. W. Wells, Monticello; S. B. Matteson, Foreman; A. L. Ferguson, Fort Smith.

Mr. Thomas E. Wood, 315 Moore and Turner Building ,Little Rock, was elected secretary of the Diocese.

DIOCESE OF WEST TEXAS.

The Twenty-fourth Annual Council of this Diocese was held at the Church of the Good Shepherd, Corpus Christi, May 1-3.

The Bishop delivered a portion of his Council address at the opening service, Wednesday morning. Every active presbyter of the Diocese was present, and a majority of the parishes and missions of the Diocese were represented by lay delegates.

Elections for General Convention follow:

Clerical Deputies—The Rev. Dr. John W. Sykes, rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Corpus Christi; the Rev. Rolfe P. Crum, rector of St. Mark's Church, San Antonio; the Rev. Charles W. Cook, rector of Christ Church, Laredo; the Rev. L. B. Richards, rector of Christ Church, San Antonio.

Lay Deputies—Hon. Roy Miller, of the Parish of the Church of the Good Shepherd; Mr. Albert Steves, Jr., of St. Mark's Parish, San Antonio; Mr. Walter A. Springall, of St. Mark's Parish, San Antonio; Mr. Jesse A. Chase, of St. Philip's Mission, Beeville.

The Provisional Clerical Deputies are —the Rev. J. S. Budlong, rector of St. John's Church, San Antonio; the Rev. James T. McCaa, Missionary of Fort McKevett District, postoffice, Brady; the Rev. Samuel Orr Capers, Missionary of the Rio Grande Valley, postoffice, Pharr; the Rev. Everett H. Jones, rector of Grace Church, Cuero.

Provisional Lay Deputies—Mr. Hiram Partee, of St. Mark's Parish, San Antonio; Judge E. B. Cookwood, of the Parish of the Church of the Messiah, Lockhart; Dr. E. Galbraith, of St. Peter's Parish, Kerrville; and Mr. A. M. Ramsey, of St. Mark's Parish, San Marcos.

The members of the Standing Committee were reelected.

At the close of a banquet given in honor of the Bishop of the Diocese, an Episcopal ring was presented to the Bishop with a highly ornamented Book of Remembrances, and Letters Patent from the College of Arms, London, covering Grant issued to the Diocese of West Texas for its Coat of Arms. This gives the Diocese of West Texas the distinction of being the second Diocese among the Dioceses of the United States that has its Coat of Arms registered in the College of Arms, London.

Dr. John W. Sykes, rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, made the presentation address on behalf of the clergy and lay members of the Diocese of West Texas.

This Council discharged a tremendous volume of business, all of which had to do with advance work in the Diocese. A revision of the Canons of the Diocese was completed. A resolution was unanimously passed asking the Church people of the Diocese to commemorate the fifteenth anniversary of the Bishop's Consecration to the Episcopate by increasing the Endowment Fund from $70,000 to $100,000. The spirit of the Council was characterized by brotherly love and a common purpose to advance the Church's interest in the rapidly-growing portion of the state which coincides exactly with the meets and bounds of the Diocese of West Texas.

The Thirty-third Annual Meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese met coincidently with the Council of the Diocese and its delegates were also the guests of the Church of the Good Shepherd. The Rev. Mr. Trelease made the annual address. Mrs. J. H. Moore, of San Antonio, was elected president of the Auxiliary in succession to Mrs. J. Muir.

DIOCESE OF NEW YORK.

The One Hundred and Forty-fifth Annual Convention of the Diocese of New York was held May 8, 1928, in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine.

The following items from Bishop Manning's annual address may be of special interest:

1. The Bishop states that the minimum salary of missionary clergymen in the Diocese of New York has been increased from $1,200 and house in 1911 to $2,-000 and house in 1928, and urges necessity of further increase.

2. Commends affiliation of St. Stephen's College with Columbia University as "of singular interest and high importance in the field of education".

3. Calls for increase in number of candidates for holy orders and of young women to serve as missionaries and deaconesses.

4. States that gifts for work of the Diocese and General Church have been larger during progress of Cathedral campaign than ever before.

5. Announces gifts aggregating $900,-000 for tower of West Front of Cathedral to match conditional gift of same amount for other tower announced few weeks ago. This assures erection of West Front.

6. Deprecates controversy over Thirty-nine Articles as waste of time; says: "They have little relation to the religious lives of any of us," and doubts "if any great number of people have ever read them. No one in the Protestant Episcopal Church is required to subscribe to them."

7. Discusses obligations resting upon those ordained to ministry of Protestant Episcopal Church and declares that to deny or cast doubt upon Creed of Church whose commission has been accepted is inconsistent with ordination vows.

The Convention adopted a resolution favoring the retention of the Thirty-nine Articles in the Prayer Book and suggesting the appointment of a Joint Commission by the next General Convention to examine the subject and report to the next triennial Convention.

The elections were as follows:

Trustees of the Cathedral—Bishop Herbert Shipman, George W. Wickersham and Le Roy King. Secretary of the Convention—The Rev. Dr. Charles K. Gilbert. Treasurer—Mr. R. M. Pott. Standing Committee—The Rev. Dr. F. W. Crowder and Mr. R. B. Elliott. Deputies to the General Convention: Clerical—The Very Rev. Howard C. Robbins, the Rev. Dr. Percy Silver, the Rev. Dr. Caleb R. Stetson, and the Rev. E. Clowes Chorley. Drs. Stetson and Chorley served at the last General Convention. Drs. Silver and Robbins will attend for the first time. Lay Deputies—Stephen Baker, George W. Wickersham and George Zabriskis, all of

New York City, and Samuel Thorne of All Saints' Church, Harrison. Provisional Deputies to the General Convention: Clerical—The Rev. Dr. Charles K. Gilbert, the Rev. Dr. Octavius Applegate, Dean Fosbroke of the General Theological Seminary, and Dr. F. W. Crowder. Lay—Messrs. Frank Polk, Haley Fiske, R. B. W. Elliott and Lawson Purdy. Deputies to the Provisional Synod—The Rev. Messrs. John Wade and De Witt Pelton, Messrs. William Kissam and H. P. Robbins. Provisional Deputies—Dr. Leighton Williams and the Rev. S. Brown-Serman, with Messrs. Adrian A. Buck and Elon S. Hobbs. Social Service Commission—The Rev. Dr. R. H. Brooks, Vandervilt Webb and Mrs. Arthur Choate.

DIOCESE OF FLORIDA.

The Eighty-fifth Annual Council of the Diocese of Florida convened in historic Christ Church, Pensacola, May 22-23. Meeting at the same time and place, the Diocesan Assembly of the Daughters of the King and the Diocesan Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary to the National Council, shared in the opening service of the Council and to them, as well as to the clergy and laity of the Council, was addressed the annual charge of the Bishop of the Diocese.

Bishop Juhan reported an increase during the past year of thirteen per cent in confirmations which, he said, he believed to be an actual evidence of the activity and power of lay evangelism, stirred up during the successive steps of the Bishops' Crusade. He also reported that during the past year he had licensed more lay readers than ever before. "These two facts," said the Bishop, "are significant; they are testimony to a growing realization among the laity that confirmation is lay-ordination for service, and among the clergy, they are evidences of their ability to multiply themselves and their sacred ministry through their communicant members." The Bishop stressed especially the need for the erection of adequate student centers at the University of Florida, in Gainsville, and at the Florida State College for Women, in Tallahassee. At both of these institutions the two Florida Dioceses combine in maintaining student workers.

During the sessions of the Council resolutions were adopted which it is felt will assure the realization of the above plans during the coming year. The Women of the Auxiliary are pledged to the sum of $10,000 for the equipment of the Chapel at Weed Hall, Gainesville, which they will give in memory of the late Bishop Edwin Gardner Weed, $5,084.15 being already in hand.

Bishop Juhan also made a strong plea for more missionaries in the rural field and for more adequate stipends for the rural clergy, this increase in support to be partially assumed by the missions themselves as an evidence of growth and self-respect and in order to release money from diocesan funds that new fields might be opened for the Church's ministrations.

Financially, the Diocese was found to be in a healthy condition. Florida paid its full quota for 1927 to the National Council and has already guaranteed the same amount for 1928.

The Eighty-sixth Annual Council of the Diocese of Florida will be held in Holy Trinity Church, Gainesville, in January 1929. The change from a May to a January Council was made upon the recommendation and resolution of the Chairman of the Department of Finance.

The Council memorialized the General Convention of next October to retain the Thirty-nine Articles in their place in the Prayer Book, but it was made clear that in adopting the resolution which provided for the sending of this Memorial, the deputies to the Convention were not sent under instructions with regard to the Thirty-nine Articles, or any other issue before the Church.

The Deputies elected to the General Convention are: Clerical—The Revs. L. Fitz-James Hindry, G. Hendree Harrison, Charles A. Ashby and Edgar L. Pennington. Lay—F. P. Dearing, R. A. Yockey, W. W. Hampton and I. K. Aiken.

Other elections were: Chancellor, the Hon. W. W. Hampton; Registrar, Harry B. Hoyt; Actuary, Herbert Lamson; Treasurer, R. A. Yockey; Secretary, the Rev. Mellville E. Johnson; the Standing Committee, the Revs. L. F. J. Hindry, Harris Mallinckrodt, and George E. Benedict, George E. Bedell, R. D. Knight and Judge S. D. Clarke.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

The Ninth Annual Council of the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia was held in St. John's Church, Lynchburg, the Rev. Thomas M. Browne, rector, on May 15 and 16, 1928. The Rt. Rev. Robert Carter Jett, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese, presided.

Transactions of the Council of general interest were:

1. Ratifications of changes in the Diocesan Constitution and Canons so that the Diocese resumes the system of geographical definition of "parishes", with separate congregation", etc. In 1923 and 1924 a Constitution had been adopted in which "parish" definitions were determined by communicant and financial strength rather than by geographical boundaries. Consequent to the readoption of the former system at this Council, a committee was formed whose duty it will be to define the geographical boundaries of all the parishes in the Diocese as they existed prior to the Council of 1924.

2. Adoption of a resolution relative to Prayer Book Revision as follows:

Resolved, The Diocese of Southwestern Virginia . . . . hereby goes on record that it is opposed to the removal of the said Thirty-nine Articles from the Book of Common Prayer.

Further, The Diocese is opposed to the adoption of the Collect, Epistle and Gospel for the Burial of the Dead, the deletion of the word "militant" from the title, and the addition of an obligatory prayer for the departed as a part of the prayer now known as the prayer "for the whole state of Christ's Church militant", and the addition of the anthem, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord", before the prayer of consecration in the Holy Communion office.

And lastly, it is opposed to the proposed omission of certain words from the Baptismal office (p. 247), relative to the principle of covenant in the said office.

3. The assumption by the Diocese of ownership and control of the Virginia Episcopal School at Lynchburg, this action being taken at the request of the present Trustees of the school.

4. The adoption of resolutions requesting the General Convention to officially define the word "Communicant" for the purposes of the Parochial Reports and to issue, through the proper officials, a manual of instructions for use in filling in the report forms, so that there may be uniformity in these matters so far as possible throughout the Church.

5. The adoption of resolutions providing certain changes in the method of electing Trustees for Stuart Hall at Staunton.

6. The acceptance of an invitation to hold the next annual Council in St. Paul's Church at Salem, the Rev. Roland J. Moncure, rector.

7. Elections as follows:

Deputies to the General Convention: Clergy—The Rev. John J. Gravatt, Jr., Staunton, Va.; the Rev. Alfred R. Berkeley, Box 1057, Roanoke, Va.; the Rev. Devall L. Gwathmey, Wytheville, Va.; the Rev. Carleton Barnwell, Lynchburg, Va. Laity—Mr. C. Edwin Michael, Drawer 925, Roanoke, Va.; Mr. C. Francis Cocke, Box 565, Roanoke, Va.; Mr. Charles P. Macgill, Pulaski, Va.; Col. William King, Jr., Lynchburg, Va.

Alternates: Clergy—The Rev. Thos M. Browne, 320 Woodland Avenue, Lynchburg, Va.; the Rev. Thomas D. Lewis, D. D., Amherst, Va.; the Rev. Herbert H. Young, Bluefield, Va.; the Rev. J. Manly Cobb, Blacksburg, Va. Laity—Mr. E. G. Hirons, Covington, Va.; Col. Wm. M. Brodie, Blacksburg, Va.; Mr. Robert L. Peirce, Wytheville, Va.; Mr. John A. Muse, Dante, Va.

Members of Diocesan Executive Board (to serve three years): Clergy—The Rev. Alfred R. Berkeley, the Rev. Carleton Barnwell. Laity—Mr. Charles P. Macgill, Mr. W. D. Tyler; (to fill present vacancies and serve one year): Clergy—The Rev. Ernest Warren. Laity—Captain E. Walton Opie.

Standing Committee: Clergy—The Rev. Thos. D. Lewis, D. D., the Rev. Thos. M. Browne, the Rev. W. G. Pendleton, D. D. , Laity—Col. Wm. King, Jr., Mr. C. S. Hutter, Colonel W. M. Brodie.

Trustees of Boys' Home at Covington (to serve three years)—The Rev. John J. Gravatt, Jr., and Mr. E. G. Hirons; (to fill a vacancy and serve two years)—the Rev. Alfred R. Berkeley.

Treasurer and Executive Secretary—Mr. Thomas A. Scott, Box 1063, Roanoke, Va.; Historiographer, Hon. Don P. Halsey, Lynchburg, Va.; Chancellor, Mr. Charles Francis Cocke, Box 565, Roanoke, Va.; Trustees of Diocesan Funds (to fill vacancies), Messrs. J. C. Terry and C. Shelburne Spindle.

DIOCESE OF NORTH DAKOTA.

A resolution commending the National Council for its stand on the Naval Bill was adopted unanimously by the Annual Convocation of the Missionary District of North Dakota, meeting in St. Paul's Church, Frank Forks, N. D., May 20 to 22. Deputies to the General Convention were elected: the Rev. N. E. Elsworth, Jamestown, and Mr. H. T. Alsop of Fargo; alternates, the Rev. G. H. Swift, Minot, and Mr. W. B. Overson, Williston. The Convocation was exceptionally well attended. Dr. Gillette of the University of North Dakota conducted a splendid conference on the Social Needs of North Dakota. The Rev. B. T. Kemmerer, rector of St. Paul's Church, Duluth, Minn., conducted conferences on the General Church Program. The Bishop, the Rt. Rev. J. Poyntz Tyler, D. D., presided at all the meetings. Ven. H. R. Harrington of Fargo was reelected Secretary of Convocation. The Convocation will meet in Fargo in 1929.

SUMMER SCHOOLS AND CONFERFNCES

BLUE MOUNTAIN CONFERENCE.

The third consecutive season for the Blue Mountain Summer Conference will open on July 9 and continue twelve days. As heretofore, the Conference will meet in Hood College, Frederick, Md.

Candidates for admission in the Blue Mountain Conference this summer are to be registered by designated persons in each diocese and not at a central office. It is expected that this will result in securing students from a wider territory than heretofore, as well as prevent the unwise registration of persons not sufficiently trained or experienced to profit by the courses.

Requests for Reservations should be made to:

Those residing in:

The Diocese of Bethlehem, apply to Major William Radford Coyle, Box A, Moravian Station, Bethlehem, Pa.

The Diocese of Maryland, apply to Mrs. Hartman K. Harrison, Poplar Hill Road, Roland Park, Baltimore, Md.

The Diocese of Pennsylvania, apply to Miss Lily Cheston, Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Diocese of Virginia, apply to the Rev. B. Duvall Chambers, Millwood, Va.

The Diocese of West Virginia, apply to Miss Etta Ambler, 112 Beech Street, Grafton, W. Va.

The Diocese of Washington, apply to the Rev. A. A. McCallum, 917 Twenty-third Street, N. W., Washington, D. C.

Sunbury, Pa., apply to the Rev. B. Talbot Rogers, D. D., Sunbury, Pa.

Williamsport, Pa., apply to the Rev. Hiram R. Bennett, Williamsport, Pa.

All others, apply to the Rev. C. E. McCoy, 844 West Fourth Street, Williamsport, Pa.

Note.—The registration fee is $4, and should accompany registration blank. No fees will be refunded, except that in case of necessity the registration fee may be transferred to another applicant not later than two weeks before the opening date. Programs may be obtained from the local registrars, or from Miss Helen Washburn, Secretary, 2030 DeLancey Place, Philadelphia, Pa.

The buildings will be open for the Conference after 2 P. M., on Monday, July 9. Registration Cards must be presented on arrival.

CHURCH TRAINING SCHOOL, KANUGA LAKE, HENDERSONVILLE, N. C.

The Summer School, known in past as Valle Crucis Summer School for Religious Education will meet this year as the Church Training School, July 2-13, at Kanuga Lake, Hendersonville, N. C., continuing under the direction of the Departments of Religious Education for the five Carolina Dioceses, the Bishops of the Diocese serving as an advisory board and the chairman of the Department of Religious Education in these Dioceses forming the Executive Committee of the School. The officers of the school are the Rev. J. W. C. Johnson, Director, Gastonia, N. C.; the Rev. W. H. K. Pendleton, Vice-Director, Spartanburg, S. C.; and the Rev. H. W. Starr, Ph. D., Dean, Charleston, S. C.

Kanuga Lake, situated in the most popular section of the West North Carolina mountains, has become the center of Church interests in the Southeast for the summer of 1928. A number of Conferences and Camps have been arranged. This attractive resort has the prospect of becoming permanent Assembly Grounds for the Church. With hotel annexes and thirty-nine cottages fronting on a lake of thirty acres, within an hours' ride of Asheville, the inducement for permanent possession and for participation in this year's Camp, Training School and Conference is very great.

The Faculty of the Church Training School includes the Rt. Rev. K. G. Finlay, D. D.; Mrs. A. J. Gammack; the Rev. Elwood Lindsay Haines; Mrs. M. B. Hutchinson; the Rev. Cantey Johnson; Mrs. Jean S. Knight; the Rev. Edmund J. Lee; Mrs. John Loman; the Rev. Homer W. Starr; Mrs. D. D. Taber; Miss Amy Burt; the Rev. Gardiner Tucker, D. D.; the Rev. John Moore Walker; Miss Margaret G. Weed, and the Rev. Louis G. Wood, D. D.

The nineteen courses, based on N. A. T. A. standards, have been carefully chosen to advance the training of Church Workers in Church Schools, of educational leaders of the Woman's Auxiliary, Church Workers generally, all Bible students, and other men and women of the Church who are seeking intelligent training for better service for Christ. Special training is arranged for the Y. P. S. L. work.

The entire cost for the period of the Summer School will be $20. Address inquiries to the Rev. J. W. C. Johnson, Director, Gastonia, N. C.

Many of the clergy will attend the Summer School as well as the Clergy Conference which will be held at a later date, July 16-25. Other Kanuga Camps and conferences under the direction of Bishop Finlay, will be held, including the Young People's Camp, June 16-29; Junior Boys' Camp, July 2-13; and Junior Girls' Camp, July 2-13.

"LOS ANGELES—1928."

Reservations are now being made on at least twenty-five Special Trains through the various State Secretaries for delegates to the Tenth Convention of the World's Sunday School Association, which will be held in Los Angeles, July 11-18, 1928. Some Secretaries report that at least a half train load is assured now. May and June will, of course, be the big months for registrations and reservations. The registration fee is $5 and should be sent either to the State or Provincial Secretary, the International Council of Religious Education, 5 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago, or to the World's Sunday School Association, 216 Metropolitan Tower, New York City.

Sheikh Metry S. Dewairy, Field Secretary in Egypt, is coming. He is a national of remarkable ability and will speak on numerous occasions.

Church Intelligence

Meeting of the National Council.

A special meeting of the National Council was held in New York, May 31, with meetings of the Departments of Missions, Religious Education and Finance on May 30. This meeting was held to clear up important business connected with the budgets, the proposed quotas and the Program, all of which must be presented to the meeting of the General Convention in Washington in October.

For the first time in the history of the Church, not only the bishops of the Continental Domestic Missionary Fields, but also many of the bishops of the dioceses receiving appropriations, met for the purpose of going over their prospective budgets in order to make recommendation to the National Council. In some of these budgets, such as that of Oklahoma, Sacramento, Oregon, Kansas and Springfield, much larger appropriations than those in force were recommended by the bishops. It was felt that in these fields opportunities faced the Church which justify a larger investment by the General Church than had been the case in the past. In each of these cases the bishop expressed the desire to have the National Council send a committee to make a survey of the situation, in order that accurate detailed report might be brought back before the increased appropriations were granted. It was possible to make these surveys in only two cases—Oklahoma and Sacramento.

Dr. Franklin was the only member of the committee of Bishop Burleson, Dr. Wood and himself, who was able to visit Oklahoma.

The Finance Department had spent a great deal of time at its meeting in April considering the budgets of the various mission fields, and the departments, but had not been able to finish its task. It took them up again at its meeting May 30, and recommended to the Council an appropriation totalling $4,337,958. This compares with a budget totalling $4,250,400 approved by the Council for the year 1928. This increase is partly accounted for in the normal increase due to the contract with our missionaries covering increase in salary due to term of service, and also to small increases in the salaries of our missionaries in the Foreign and Latin American fields, made necessary by the greatly increased cost of living. There was also an increase in the children's allowances made to missionaries in all fields where such allowances are now in force. These advances account for more than $50,000 in the increase of appropriations. Even with this small increase over the year 1928, the budgets were cut literally to the bone, and every possible item that could be reduced or eliminated was scrutinized and action taken thereon.

The adoption of the budget naturally led to the question of the quotas to be recommended to the General Convention for assignment to the various dioceses for the coming triennium. As will be recalled, the last General Convention asked the Presiding Bishop to appoint a special committee to consider the question of a revision of the method of figuring the quotas, and this committee reported at the December, 1927, meeting. The Council felt that it was not prepared to accept the recommendation of the committee, and appointed a committee to bring in a recommendation to the Council as to a method of determining the quotas that should be recommended to General Convention. This committee brought in its report and by a majority vote of the committee recommended that the sliding scale method be continued, but that a new scale be adopted which would result in a lessened difference in the percentages. The Council adopted the report of the committee. This action has the effect of reducing the quotas to the larger dioceses, and increasing the quotas of the smaller dioceses, but not in such a large amount as would have been true in the case of the adoption of

COLLECT FOR FIRST SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

O God, the strength of all those who put their trust in Thee; Mercifully accept our prayers; and because through the weakness of our mortal nature, we can do no good thing without Thee, grant us the help of Thy grace, that in keeping Thy commandments we may please Thee both in will and deed; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

COLLECT FOR ST. BARNABAS THE APOSTLE.

O Lord God Almighty, Who didst endue Thy Holy Apostle Barnabas with singular gifts of the Holy Ghost; Leave us not, we beseech Thee, destitute of Thy manifold gifts, nor yet of grace to use them always to Thy honor and glory; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

TO SIMON THE CYRENIAN.

Edith Mirick.

Spring it was, Simon, when you came
In from the country. I can see the way
Made sweet with flowers and with song or bird
Under blue skies—into Jerusalem for the holiday.
And then they took you to bear up a Cross
To Calvary. I can sense the stir
As Caesar's soldiers lay their hands on you.
Your glad face flushes, falls and you demur.
You are a man of brawn and might;
You clench your fists;
You do not fear a fight—
When suddenly your eye falls on Him there,
Thorn-crowned, weak, white—but proud,
With something in His eyes—
Things blur a bit, then some one cries,
"Pick up the cross, Cyrenian"! You bend your dark back
Taut with suppled muscle, lift His cross and fling
Your head high as you walk to hide the sting
Of unused tears—They laid hold upon on Simon
Of Cyrene, coming in from the country and laid
On him the cross. It is a simple record, Simon,
Is it not, in all that chronicle
That he who runs may read. No touch
Of David's glory here, nor Solomon's. You carried Christ's cross up to Calvary. Who boasts as much?

Dean Inge on Protestantism.

A protestant should mean one who makes a "protestation", which Dr. Johnson defines as "a solemn declaration of resolution, fact, or opinion". The verb had the same meaning in Shakespeare, and later. "I have a wife whom I protest I love." "Do me right, or I will protest your cowardice." The negative meaning, of an expression of dissent, is later than the original application of the name to the Reformed Churches, which dates from 1529. This "protestation" of the Lutheran princes and others was merely an assertion of the liberty of Reforming Diets. It is ignorance which restricts the word to the attitude of an objector.

The name does not much matter, but it is important to recognize that Protestantism is a permanent factor in the evolution of religion, not merely a historical accident of the sixteenth century. There have been Protestant movements in all the great religions; Christianity itself began as a Protestant movement within the Jewish Church. On the other hand, there is much in the Reformed Churches which is not essentially Protestant.

Protestantism is essentially an attempt to check the tendency to corruption and degeneration which attacks every religious institution. Institutional religion is like those chemical substances which are never found pure. The revelation which gave it birth, the inspiration which vitalized it, partly congeals and partly evaporates; the religion mingles itself with earlier forms of belief; it is entangled in the tortuous politics of a hiararchy greedy of power and pelf, in national ambitions and social movements. The natural disintegrations of religion, as Plutarch says, are atheism and superstition—atheotes and deisidaimonia; and the two flourish together. Protestantism is the revolt of genuine religion against this apostacy. Almost always we find it advocating ethical purity in the place of ceremonial scrupulousness, and individual freedom against ecclesiastical discipline; we find it claiming the right of immediate access to God, without any priestly mediators; we find it insisting on inner conviction in the place of obedience and surrender of private judgment.

Protestantism is always in intention a return to an earlier simplicity. It is doubtless true that revivals are always attempts to restore something that never existed. The Reformation was not really a return to primitive Christianity, still less to the religion of the old Hebrews. And yet Protestantism is a genuine attempt to recover the spirit of the Gospel, even at the cost of throwing away the greater part of what the masses, especially in the Mediterranean countries, mean and always have meant by religion.

The Prophets were the Protestants of the Old Testament. They were unable to prevent the victory of the priests, but they succeeded in recording their protests against sacrifice and ritual, and against the burden of unethical regulations, which always bring with them a neglect of justice, mercy, and truth. The famous declaration of Micah ("Wherewith shall I come before the Lord? . . .") and Psalms like the Fiftieth, are entirely in the spirit of the sixteenth century Reformers.

Our Lord deliberately placed Himself in the prophetic succession. He lived as a prophet; He taught as a prophet; He died as a prophet. But whereas the earlier prophets had aimed at a reform, Christ, with full consciousness, made a revolution. He abolished at a stroke the principle of religious hierarchies. His disciples were to be a band of brothers; none of them was to be called Master or Teacher; there was to be no precedence except in service. With sovereign confidence He sets aside Moses and the Tradition. "It was said to them of old time . . . but I say to you"—something quite different. The old garments and the old wineskins must be discarded; they cannot be used with the new cloth, or hold the new wine. The whole system of ritual purifications is abolished by the principle that only that which comes out of the heart of man can either cleanse or defile him. "This He said, making all meats clean." Nay, if the Temple, with all that it stood for, were destroyed, the dynamic of a spiritual religion could rebuild it—or an invisible Temple in the hearts of men—"in three days". This is the teaching of an emancipator who is not afraid to be an iconoclast.

It was at once felt that here was "a new covenant"; and men were not slow to remember the splendid prophecies of Jeremiah and Joel, which were now fulfilled. The centre of this new dispensation is the Spirit; that is to say, God as imminent and self-revealing in the hearts of all the faithful—of lay folk, servants and handmaids. This gift of the Spirit is a continuation of the Incarnation under another form. As Bengel said: "Conversio fit ad Dominum ut Spiritum."

All barriers, except between right and wrong, are ignored or abolished. Jewish exclusiveness is torn up by the roots. There is an end of all material sacrifices. The law of Love embraces all that is left of the old legislation. Whatever organization may be required must grow from within outwards. It is perhaps the primary error of Catholicism to suppose that an instituton can be wiser and holier than its members.

This being the essential character of the Gospel, every Protestant movement may justly claim to be a return to it. But few Reformers have ventured to claim the "Liberty of a Christian Man" in its entirety.

It is quite true that without discipline and organization the gains of an outpouring of the Spirit are left unharvested and soon lost. The medieval Church, with all its monstrous corruptions and almost total apostacy, may have been a historical necessity, like the post-Maccabean hierarchy whom Christ denounced so fiercely. But if the Church very early became Catholic, as we are often told, the Gospel was indubitably Protestant. No ingenuity of controversialists can refute so patent a fact. And if, as I believe myself, the time is come for a new Evangelical revival, we shall find in the New Testament a call to great confidence and courage, and we shall understand the joy with which St. Paul exclaimed, "Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty". Why should we be ashamed of the name Protestant? Archbishop Laud claimed it for himself.—Dean Inge, in C. of E. Newspaper.

Patience.

Part II.

Let us look at the matter in another way. In the past great emphasis has been laid on the transcendence of God. He was thought of as far above the world, ruling it from outside. The attempt to reconcile the love of God with suffering and calamities supported the view that God sent such things as chastisements and visitations for the individual's good. In modern days the discoveries of Science, especially the perception of a gradual development throughout the whole course of nature, have led Theologians to stress the immanence of God, i. e., to think of Him not only as transcendent, but as being in some sense in the created world, unceasingly at work to produce perfection, and therefore as bearing His share, if we may say it with reverence, in the pain and sufferings of His creatures. On either view an attitude of patience is possible. But there is an important difference. The patience which springs from the former view tends to be resignation to what we believe to be God's will: evils are borne patiently just because we believe that they are God's will. This is good as far as it goes. But is there not a higher conception of patience emerging from the second view? For if we think of God as immanent, then we learn that He is sharing the pain and suffering with us, even if they be the results (and even in that sense the punishment) of our own wilfulness and folly and, because this is so we learn to bear them with God and in His way and with active patience enter into the joy of sharing with Him in the working out of His loving will: not a will which visits us with suffering to produce in us a spirit of unmurmuring resignation, but the will to share at all cost with us in the struggle to overcome evil, and which therefore gives us the privilege of, nay more, calls upon us to cooperate patiently with Him in the working out of good. And surely this was the way of God and Christ.

Finally to put the matter in a more practical way, it may be said that true patience is the means between two extremes. In face of the evils which beset life one man will doubt the love or the power of God or both, rebel and be ready to curse God even though he die. Another with a more religious temperament will not dream of questioning God's will, but will submit patiently and try to find strength to say, "Thy Will be done": some will even seek suffering in order to increase resignation. But both of these attitudes are the result of a mistaken conception of God's will. The two types reach in different ways to the conception; but they both believe, the one perhaps more explicitly than the other, that God directly wills pain and suffering and other evils for the individual. And in both cases, though in different ways and in different degrees, the result is detrimental to fulness of life. True patience lies between these two extremes. It is neither rebellion nor dull apathetic resignation. Nor is it a negative virtue, whose perfect work is the stilling of all murmurings. It is strong and active. It is a way of living, based on an unfaltering belief in the love and goodness of God in face of all difficulties, which enables the believer, because he knows that God is sharing with him, not only to endure with quiet confidence, but to direct all his energies towards cooperating with the ceaseless self-sacrificing activity of the loving will of God in destroying the forces of evil. And if it be felt by some that they find the strength to endure, just because they believe that their suffering is God's will for them, will they not find in the view of patience suggested above a more vivid sense of the love of God, a greater comfort in thinking of God as sharing their burden with them, and a greater hope and joy in consciously seeking to link up their suffering with the great self-sacrificing activity of God and to share with Him in His work of overcoming evil?—H. B. Gooding, in Barbadoes Diocesan Magazine.

How War Comes.

War does not originate from time to time simply in a sudden and uncontrollable impulse on the part of one of these great national masses to go out and slaughter another. . . .

The maneuvering is done by little groups of men called governments. These little groups seek constantly and naturally to gain supposed advantages of one sort and another for their own nationals.

Out of their efforts to enlarge or to strengthen or to maintain the interests intrusted to their charge the masses they represent are gradually maneuvered into positions which, to say the least, cannot easily be surrendered. If the process continues, sooner or later a situation arises in which an agreement between these small groups becomes impossible. Then, on the ground that their lives and families and property are somehow involved and endangered, these great masses of men and women, roused by every power of organized appeal and propaganda, are ordered under arms, and war follows.

The entire process is in control of the smaller groups.

They make the issue.

They declare war.

The masses they control simpley obey.

Having put this power or left this power in the hands of their governments, they find themselves at the critical moment substantially helpless. And so, as individuals, they merely accept the decision and go out to pay the bills of war with their bodies, and perhaps with their souls, in the hope that if not they, then those who come after them may reap a benefit in some measure proportionate to its cost—Alanson B. Houghton, U. S. Ambassador to Great Britain.

A GARDEN IS NEVER SO FAIR.

Anna Hamilton Wood.

A garden is never so fair—so fair,
As when the fresh raindrops cling;
When ferns shake moisture out of their hair
On a butterfly's spreading wing.

A garden is never so utterly sweet
As just when a storm moves on,
And drenched green heads are raised to greet
A grey sky, bruised and torn.

A garden is never so real a place
For a man to meet his God
As when wet flowers reflect His face,
And He moves on the soft moist sod!

Guidance.

"In my earlier years I spent much time on the prairie looking up routes for railroad lines. With my watch and compass by day and the stars at night I traveled to my destination. God's sun and stars were perfectly trustworthy and guided me aright. In later years, with the roads and fences, I have frequently lost my way, by reason of breaks in the roads." Most of the time the fences help to keep one in the road. So, I think, most of the great definitions of faith made by devout men are a help. But there come cross-roads of decision, where only the direct influence of Christ, mediated both by Scripture and prayer, will suffice.

"I am the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." So still says Jesus.—Presbyterian Banner.

How to Receive the Holy Spirit.

We may receive the power of the indwelling Christ today so as to live a witnessing life, if we will fulfill the conditions. We must believe that the power is promised to us, and we must expect to receive it. We must also fulfill the conditions by a complete surrender of our bodies, our minds, our talents, and every cent of our property. Our whole being—our desires, our aims, our habits, our pleasures, all we are and have, must be given to God. Then he will fill us and possess us and work through us, and we shall witness to His indwelling power. We must exalt Him and not ourselves, and give all the glory to Him, for it is He that is to witness through us. Then we may and must expect to produce conviction and conversions and the transforming of other lives. The humblest may become the most powerful. No life is really Christian unless it witnesses to the indwelling Christ. And no church has any reason for existence unless it is a witnessing church.—Homer F. Yale.

I Know.

"I know" that if the religion of Jesus Christ is best for the great world, it is best for my little world: the circle which I can influence; and chiefest of all, my own home. I know that my children will have a better chance to live a worth-while life if they will regularly spend a part of Sabbath mornin which this same Apostle Paul teaches us: "Let all bitterness and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil-speaking be put away from you, with all malice, and be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you". There is no doubt there. I know in my heart, whether I confess it or not, that I am not doing the right thing by them when I take them picnic hunting on Sabbath morning instead of going with them to the quiet peace of God's house and joining with them in its character-making service.

And finally, "I know" that if the religion of Jesus Christ is the best for the great world and the best for my little world, it is the best for me.—Rev. George Thomas Dowling.

The Branches.

We are too prone to forget the significance and application of Christ's words when He said: "I am the vine, ye are the branches". We need to walk out frequently to the arbor and contemplate those words anew in the presence of the growing vine. How easily, how perfectly naturally, even how inevitably, those branches bring forth fruit so long as they have healthy connection with the vine, with a proper amount of the lifeblood of the vine coursing through their vines. But how soon they are stunted and how restricted and imperfect is their fruit when some stricture is bound around them that limits the floow of that vital sap! And how quickly they wither and die when cut off from the vine altogether! Even so is it with Christians. How scarce and poor the fruit when riches or pleasure or selfishness fastens around and squeezes the Christ blood out of the soul. And how futile it is to strain and pull at such folks when what they need is that the flow of Jesus Christ be released anew into their lives. Consider the branches, how they grow and bear fruit.—Selected.

The stars shine over the earth,
The stars shine over the sea;
The stars look up to God above,
The stars look down on me.
The stars shall shine for a thousand years,
A thousand years and a day;
But God and I will love and live
When the stars are passed away.

GREAT HEART.

Where are you going, Great Heart,
With your eager face and your fiery grace?
Where are you going, Great Heart?
"To fight a fight with all my might,
For Truth and Justice, God and Right;
To grace all Life with His fair Light."
Then God go with you, Great Heart!

Where are you going, Great Heart?
"To beard the Devil in his den;
To smite him with the strength of ten;
To set at large the souls of men."
Then God go with you, Great Heart!

Where are you going, Great Heart?
"To hurl high-stationed evil down;
To set the cross above the crown;
To spread abroad My King's renown."
Then God go with you, Great Heart!

Where are you going, Great Heart?
"To lift Today above the Past;
To make tomorrow sure and fast;
To nail God's colours to the mast."
Then God go with you, Great Heart!

Where are you going, Great Heart?
"To break down old dividing-lines;
To carry out My Lord's designs;
To build again His broken shrines."
Then God go with you, Great Heart.

What Changed Jessie?

"Oh, here you are," cried Nellie Jones, as she stepped from the little steamer. "I was looking for you. It's kind of you to meet me."

"What's the news from home?" asked Jessie. "I presume everything is all right. Mildred will see that things are kept going."

"Yes," smiled Nellie, "nothing unusual. What could go wrong with your sister Mildred in charge? I never knew a more competent and dependable girl. Here's a letter your mother sent. It must be important; she asked me to deliver it immediately."

The girls sat down near the dock where the little steamer landed provisions and mail for the Girl Scout camp Reading her letter, Jessie's face lighted with a happy smile, and at the end she exclaimed, "O Nellie, what do you think, I may go to Europe for three months! Won't that be fine?"

"When?" asked Nellie.

"In a week. Aunt Martha, who lives in Chicago, is going and wants either Mildred or me to accompany her. She pays all expenses and knows how to give one a good time. I traveled with her last summer. I am to go home tomorrow. We'll have a family conflab to decide who goes."

"It will be you, I'm sure," said Nellie. "Mildred is so busy, we all depend on her so. What would we do without her in the Young People's Society? The Blue Birds, those young girls would all flutter away and be lost to the Sunday school without her guiding and inspiring presence. You're more used to travel. Mildred might be homesick, she lives so at home. Tell her for me not to think of going."

"There's no objection to my going, I suppose," said Jessie dryly.

"Oh, of course, you would be greatly missed," replied Nellie, with a quick glance, "but we will all be glad for you to go. It's such an opportunity. Mildred is different."

"Yes, I suppose so," commented Jessie.

The next day on the train, Jessie made many plans and discussed Europe with herself; furtively rejoicing that Mildred was so capable and willing.

Two men entered the car and sat just behind her. Continuing their conversation, she heard one say: "For once I misjudged. I picked Joe for the place. He is popular and able. He has served the party many ways and deserved the promotion. Judge Graham was to appoint the man, and asked the boys at home to choose.

"It lay between Joe and Fred, and Joe seemed to have the best of it. But it didn't work out the way you'd expect. The boys put their heads together and decided Joe was so strong at home, and the party depended so on him, he could not be spared. That's the reason Fred was appointed. He's a selfish man and never lifts his hand in any public affair unless he sees something in it for him. Cold as an iceberg, but a schemer."

"Rather hard on Joe, don't you think?" commented his companion.

Brother Harvey met Jessie at the station and walking home said: "You'll be sure to go. We've talked it over. At first mother said Mildred should go, and she did think she would, but after awhile she began wondering how we could get on without her. Father and mother perked up considerably when she definitely decided to refuse. I don't know what I would do without her help in my studies. I'd never make the debating team, if I didn't have her keen suggestions."

"You do rely on her a good deal, don't you?" asked Jessie.

"Yes," acknowledged Harvey, "and I'm not the only one. She is first aid to a lot of us."

When Jessie reached home Mildred was out to supper and to spend the evening helping the Blue Birds to prepare a class play.

"It's as good as settled," asserted mother. "Mildred does not care particularly to go, she is such a home body and so busy."

"Yes," declared Jessie, "she's a home body and always will be if her friends and family have their way. It's a case of the people decided. We're willing to let her faithful service and unselfishness cost her a trip to Europe. It's a case of Joe and Fred."

"Who's Joe and Fred?" asked Harvey.

"Oh, sometimes I'll tell you, perhaps," laughed Jessie, "but I'll tell you this. I think we've let Mildred work and serve and do for us, and not shown any too much appreciation. I'll be the home body for awhile. It will do me good. Harvey, don't you think I can help you in your lessons and debating? Mother, I need to learn to be unselfish. Perhaps I can take part of Mildred's place. I want her to go."

"There you are, Joe," she continued, as Mildred opened the door, "and you're going to Europe with Aunt Martha."

"Why am I Joe, and why am I going to Europe?" asked Mildred.

"Because," said Jessie with a trembling voice, but a happy smile, "because the chance is yours of right, and because I've just seen I'm a selfish Fred, and because I need just three months to change into an unselfish Joe."—Kind Words.

Overheard in a Garden.

One morning in the early spring a Blackberry bush remarked to a Strawberry vine at his feet, "I have just found out that you and I belong to the same family as the rose".

"it seems hardly possible!" exclaimed the Strawberry vine. "I did not even know before that you and I are related. You are much the taller and you also have brambles. In that respect you resemble the Rose."

This made the Blackberry bush indignant, but before he could decide what to reply the Raspberry bush observed:

"I look more like the Blackberry bush than you do, Strawberry vine. Yet the three of us are related. But you are the shortest member of our whole family. You are not even so tall as Five-Finger."

"Five-Finger has an insignificant yellow blossom and no fruit worth mentioning," replied the Strawberry vine tartly. "I can't imagine why you should say I resemble that weed."

"I was merely speaking of height," explained the Raspberry bush.

"Meadowsweet is of our family," continued the Blackberry bush.

"Meadowsweet is quite pretty," conceded the Strawberry vine, "but she's of no special use."

"That might be said of the Rose," observed the Raspberry plant. "Yet all of us are secretly jealous of her."

"Of course she is the queen of flowers," allowed the Strawberry vine. "But that's the most one can say of her."

"Well, there's Choke-Cherry, a distant relative of ours," said the Blackberry.

"And just imagine Choke-Cherries with cream!" scoffed the Strawberry vine.

The others laughed. "People say that Choke-Cherry jelly is nice," observed the Raspberry.

"Our fruit makes nice jelly, too," affirmed the Strawberry vine. "But I don't mind admitting I'd like to be taller."

"The Apple and the Pear are both related to us," continued the Blackberry bush.

"I'd like to be as tall as an Apple tree," declared the Strawberry vine.

"I wish my blossoms were as pretty!" sighed the Raspberry plant.

"And mine!" echoed the Strawberry vine.

"Yet when a tree bears good fruit I've noticed that people do not pick its blossoms," remarked the Blackberry bush. "They care more for the fruit."

"And nobody would prefer even a Rose always to strawberries and cream," declared the Raspberry bush, looking kindly down at the little vine.

The Strawberry plant was much pleased with this compliment.

"I think we ought to try to be the best of our kind," remarked the Blackberry bush, "and not wish we were somebody else. No one expects roses of us, and if our modest blossoms are followed by good fruit, that is all one could wish."

The others were of the same opinion. And they must have tried very hard to do their best that year, for the owner of the garden said his berries had never before been so large and so sweet.—Zion's Herald.

Seeing Both Sides.

"I just hate that old teacher, she gets so hard!" exclaimed ten-year-old Tom, as he rushed in at noon, giving his cap a spiteful jerk as he removed it from his head. "I just wish I didn't have to go to school another day, to her. Do I, Mother? Can't I go to M . . . to finish this term?" naming a near-by town.

"Wait a few moments, Son, until we find out just what's wrong," quietly answering his mother. "You are putting it pretty strong; it must feel dreadful to really hate anybody. I always thought Miss Larson so pleasant and sweet-appearing. What's the trouble?"

"Well," replied the lad more quietly, "this morning she put a problem on the board for us sixth graders, and she put one figure down wrong, then gave us zero because we had the answer wrong."

"Why didn't some of you point out her mistake to her?" asked his mother.

"We couldn't 'cause she erased the problem as soon as we had it copied," replied Tom.

"Then how do you know she had it wrong, instead of you boys and girls?"

" 'Cause, we do know, for we all had it alike, the problem and answers, and we looked in the book, and found where she made the mistake, so we know," answered the boy with conviction.

"All right, Son, if you know, you know, and that settles that part of it. Did any of you go to Miss Larson and tell her of her mistake?"

"Yes, Don Thomas tried to, but she would not listen—just told him to go to his seat and keep still," heatedly replied the lad.

"Well Tom, no use to worry and get all fussed up over a little thing like that; it will all come out right, I'm sure," soothed his mother. She felt puzzled, however, for Miss Larson had nearly always seemed fair-minded, and patient. The error, in itself, was small, but results would be serious should she insist she was right when the children all knew she was wrong. They would lose confidence in her. The mother decided to try and prevent that if she could. After a few moments' silence, she asked, "Tom, how did Miss Larson look this morning? Sweet as ever"?

"No, she didn't," answered Tom, "she looked white and her eyes and nose were red as anything, and her hair wasn't one bit pretty like it usually is, and she held her hand to her head so much."

"There is the cause of your trouble then, Son; your teacher is either not well or has troubles of her own. Were you all pretty good this morning, in school?"

"I guess not very," answered the boy, beginning to laugh, "we had lots of fun. Roy stuck a bent pin in the toe of his shoe, and, say, you'd ought to have seen Sam rise when he stuck him."

"And what did Tom do?" asked his mother.

"Well, I threw a paper wad, and took Roy whang in the ear. He sure jumped.

"Say, Sonny, suppose you were a teacher with eighteen or twenty boys around, all acting as you were, and you just had to try to teach them something, whether you were sick or well, don't you think you'd be cross and unfair sometimes?"

"Yes, I s'pose I would," answered Tom.

"Mother," spoke up Tom's big brother, who was a senior in high school, "one of the finest things you ever taught me was to see both sides."—Lila M. Marshall.

The Beloved Clown.

Elizabeth B. Thomas.

The first time I saw him, he was standing in a roomy box-stall in a sales-stable, calmly scratching his ear with one hind foot. Scratching completed, he yawned, stretched, and moved to the stall door to look at his visitors. He was just a "little feller for a cent", weight not over 900 pounds, bright bay, with one white hind foot, a white star, and a white splash on his nose that looked as if some one had thrown a brushful of white-wash at him which had landed sideways, and two twinkling brown eyes that fairly radiated mischief. The minute I looked at him I knew that he was just the horse I wanted, and after some preliminary argument over the price I bought him.

The next thing was to get him to my home, which was nearly twenty miles from the stable. It was spring and the frost was just coming out of our New England roads, and I did not relish the thought of my long ride home on a strange horse. But I asked the stable boy to saddle up for me. The bay submitted to the saddling process mildly enough, watching me with a speculative eye all the while.

Somehow, with the saddle and bridle on, the horse looked much larger and more formidable than he had in the stall, particularly after they informed me that he had never been ridden. Quite a crowd had gathered to see "that fresh girl get her neck broke", and I wasn't at all sure that they weren't going to see something of the sort. The audience was entirely too large to permit me to back down, so I mentally rolled up my sleeves and grasping the bridle with what I fondly hoped was an air of ease and unconcern, I swung into the saddle. Nothing happened. I became slightly bolder and tapped him lightly with the end of the reins. Still nothing happened, and I tapped him again, harder, and he turned an interested eye towards me and started out of the stable. Alas, he began to back up and finally sat down in the ditch and started to eat grass! My position was undignified, to say the least, and my audience was much amused. I tried coaxing, punished him a little, and nearly tried swearing and still that horse sat calmly and appeared to have forgotten that I was there. Then, suddenly, he tired of the sport, stood up on his hind legs, shook himself and started running down the street, fortunately in the direction that I wished to go. His burst of speed carried him well out of the town and into the muddy district where he was forced to slow down. His play over, he settled down to business in earnest and carried me very well. The roads were terrible and it was a very weary little horse that I unsaddled in my barn that night.

The next day I harnessed him into a light road cart and drove him to town, wishing to show off his speed and style. He went splendidly until I got right into the village where I wanted him to be his handsome best, and then he hung his head and stumbled, walked sideways and behaved generally like somebody's old plow-horse. Going home along the country roads where nobody could see him he went like a flash with his head in the air.

I soon learned that his sense of humor was unusually well developed, and ceased to try to make him show off. He had an uncanny way of doing just what I didn't want him to do at all times when people could see him. I never knew whether he was going to sit down on the main street or untie his halter and go into a store to steal apples. But there was something so lovable about him that I could not bear to punish him, and he had his own way most of the time. The storekeepers learned to know the white splashed nose and the impish eyes and I am afraid encouraged him in his pranks.

Because of his beauty people used to want to hire him to ride, but they seldom came a second time. After being backed all over town and taken calling on people to whom they had never been introduced, most people gave up. Another trick of his was to run along nicely for about a mile and then think of something important that had to do at home, whirl like a flash and start back to attend to it. He soon got over trying his tricks on me, but outsiders were never safe a minute with him. I used to be bothered by people who wished to borrow him to ride in parades, but after he had backed into the band several times they gave it up.

I used to turn him loose and let him run around a bit to get grass, but I heard such bad reports of him that I had to give it up. Once he chased one old lady up on her piazza and refused to let her come down to the ground, once he went to a neighbor's house and took all her clean clothes carefully off the line and laid them on the ground, and once he rolled right in the middle of a newly planted garden.

The little horse is over twenty now, but as playful as ever.—Our Dumb Animals.

THE YOUNG CONTRIBUTOR.

Robert James Clark.

He was only a child of tender years;
But near to the Christ he drew.
There in the midst of the multitude,
He was almost hidden from view.

Then some one from him, his basket took.
And I think perhaps he cried.
But the little eyes that shed the tears
Soon shone with joyful pride.

How his little face lit with wonder
As he sat at Christ's command.
And he saw his loaves and fishes
Being blessed in the Master's hands.

Around him the crowd was eating,
In the midst stood God's own Son,
Yet the boy ate not but wondered
What his gift through Christ had done.

Like that boy each one has a portion
And the world is just as that crowd,
If we give of our share through the Master
We, too, will have cause to be proud.

A Crooked Day.

"Mother, what has been the matter with the day? It has been the longest day of my life, and such a very crooked one."

"It is very easy for me to see where the fault lies. Can you not see it also?"

"I know, dear mother, that I was very naughty to read the book," Abby answered gently.

"But what did you omit to do today?"

Abby said: "What do you mean, mother? I know everything has gone wrong."

"My darling, did you ask your Heavenly Father to forgive your disobedience to me? Did you ask His loving care of you today? Did you ask to be helped through the day?"

Abby hung her head, and confessed that she was in such a hurry to get to breakfast that she forgot the prayer.

"Ah, little girl, there is reason enough for a crooked day. I and all grown-up folks who love God have to ask for help all the time, and they may be shown how to take each step, as well as how to live each moment. And I know you do not forget the dear Saviour listens to the little children when they call upon Him."

Abby has lived a good many years since she had that talk with her mother, and she does not forget her morning prayer.—Selected.

The King's Emerald.

Rupert stood by the side of the road watching an unusual number of people hurry past. At length he saw some one he knew, little Giovanni who came to play with him sometimes. "Where are you going in such a hurry?" Rupert asked.

Giovanni paused and gazed at him in surprise. "Haven't you heard?" he asked.

"I have heard nothing," Rupert answered eagerly. "What is this news?"

"Why, the king has lost the royal emerald!"

"Yes, the king's emerald," Giovanni went on. "Yesterday he attended a wedding of the nobility and wore the emerald on the slender golden chain around his throat. In some way the emerald became loosened from the ring that holds it to the chain, and it must have dropped into the road. All the countryside is searching, for the king has offered a reward of ten pieces of gold to the one who finds it. Come, we must hurry."

"But I can't go without asking grandmother," Rupert faltered.

"Then I can not wait. Join us later. Who knows but that you or I might be the one to find the emerald!"

Rupert's eyes sparkled as he hurried back to the cabin at the edge of the woods. How splendid it would be to find the precious royal gem and earn not only the reward of ten pieces of gold, but the gratitude of the king as well. His feet fairly flew over the ground.

But at the cabin disappointment awaited him. From within came the sound of soft groaning. "It is the misery in my bones," his grandmother groaned as Rupert opened the door.

"Once again it has come upon me. I must stay in the house today."

Rupert almost groaned with her. "The king has lost his emerald, grandmother," he said. "He offers a reward to the one that finds it. If I could go and help in the search perhaps I might find it and then we could leave this hut with its dampness and buy a piece of land high up on the hillside."

His grandmother shook her head. "What would the sheep do?" she asked. "Already they are restless in the pen. You must take them into the fields to feed on the green grass and do not forget to take them to water when the sun shines high in the heavens."

Very slowly Rupert drove the sheep from the pen and into the wood and very listlessly he walked after them. If only he could have helped in the search for the emerald! "Other boys have their chances but I never do," he said sadly. "There is always something that I must do—the sheep to herd or the sticks to gather for the fire or the weeds to pull from the garden patch."

But sad and disappointed as he felt, he was gentle with the stupid sheep and when the sun was high in the heavens he drove them toward the brook that flowed through the wood.

Rupert sat down on a large stone by the stream. "If I could only have had a chance to look for the king's emerald!"

Turning his head he gazed down into the sandy bottom of the brook. Suddenly he started and stared into the water. What was it—it couldn't be! He leaped suddenly into the stream and reached down into the water.

His dripping fingers held something—something that was green with delicate threads of yellow, slender strands of gold woven into a crest.

"The king's emerald!" shouted Rupert. "It must have been flung from the chain when the king was crossing the bridge on the highway and the water washed it here! I have found the king's emerald! I would never have had a chance to find the emerald if I had not been following my duty!"

With shining eyes, the king's emerald clutched in his hand, he drove the sheep homeward.—Dew Drops.

The Snowy Day.

There had been a heavy snowstorm all night. In the clear morning, Jimmy looked out and saw the fields piled high with great drifts.

"You'd better not go to school today, Jimmy," said his mother, across the breakfast table.

"Oh, mother—please! I've never missed a day yet."

"All right, dear, you can try. But the drifts are dreadfully deep; I wish father were here to drive you."

So after breakfast Jimmy got on his knee-rubber boots. His mother tied his scarf around his neck, gave him his primer, a box of lunch, slipped a soft pair of shoes into his pocket for indoors wear, she kissed him good-by and he started out.

All the way up the hill he made the first tracks. There was not another boy or girl in sight, only smoke going up from the chimneys in the still air. Mr. Jackson had been over and built the fire in the schoolhouse, and in a few minutes the teacher come on snowshoes.

There was nobody else there all day! Jimmy and the teacher had the loveliest time. Lessons were soon done and, after they ate their lunches at noon, she read him stories ond helped him draw and paint. She even let him work his sums on the big blackboard.

At night, when they came home from school, the breaking-out teams were going by.

"I'll shovel a path for you, Miss Kilburn," offered one young fellow, jumping off his sled.

"Give you a ride home, Miss Kilburn!" called another.

The big snow-plow was in front.

"Come, get on here," said the man driving it, to Jimmy.

So Jimmy rode home on the snow-plow behind two spans of horses, and the man let him hold the reins.

"Oh, mother," said he, coming into the house with his eyes shining, "I like snowy days best of all!"—Greta Gaskin Bidlake, in The Presbyterian Advance.

Why the Evergreen is Always Green.

There was once growing on the bank of a small stream a fig bush and an evergreen vine. This was an ugly red bank and it seemed that nothing would make it beautiful. Now, this was when the evergreen was only green in the summer and the fig bush had beautiful pink flowers. The fig bush was very much discontented and said, "I will not do anything to try to make this old ugly bank beautiful."

But the evergreen said, "I will grow and grow and cover the bank with pretty green leaves."

"You will never be able to do it; besides who will see it?" grumbled the fig bush. "I am not going to blossom my prettiest because no one ever sees us."

But the evergreen went to work and began to grow. It worked and grew until the whole bank was covered with its beautiful green leaves. And it was really beautiful.

"Now that you have done that, what are you going to do? It doesn't do any good," growled the fig bush.

"I am going to climb to the other side and spread my vines there," replied the little evergreen vine.

"Why, you will never be able to grow to the other side," said the discouraging fig bush.

"But I shall try," said the vine.

"Yes, I will help you," said an old oak tree that was growing on the other side.

So the little evergreen vine went to work. She stretched and grew and grew. The old oak tree threw out her roots to meet the evergreen. It seemed at one time that they would not meet and the old fig bush began to laugh. But at last they made it and the evergreen vine was very happy. The vine grew up the roots of the old tree and then all over the bank. The old oak tree was very happy. She told the evergreen vine that she had never had any pretty new green dress to put on at Easter time, like all the other trees, because her dress had been killed by lightning one summer.

"But this Easter you shall have a new dress," promised the evergreen vine. So the vine grew and covered the whole tree. When Easter came, the old oak tree had a pretty new Easter dress just like all the other trees.

The godmother of all the trees and flowers came by and saw the beautiful tree, covered with bright green leaves and she was pleased, and said, "Little evergreen vine, you shall be green all the year. Frost will not be able to kill your leaves."

And to the fig bush the godmother said, "Because you were selfish, your pretty pink flowers will be hid from the world".

And if you look in a fig today you will find its pink blossom on the inside and the evergreen stays pretty and green all the whole year through—Selected.

RAIN AND SHOWERS.

Maude Mumma.

Oh, how we need the rain and showers,
To give a drink to thirsty flowers;
See how each one lifts its head,
To catch the blessings on it spread!

And when tomorrow's sun shall come,
How they glisten—every one;
Filled with radiant life anew
Eager to blush and bloom for you!

"Yam, Too."

Billy looked after his mother, with big, half-timid eyes. Aunt Edith and Uncle John were almost strangers to him yet for all his little life he had lived in the West until now. Mother had been called away from the house just as they were about to sit down to supper.

"Oh, you darling!" cried nine-year-old Sue, as she hugged her small cousin. "Mother, please let me have his chair right next to me."

"Yes, dear, Billy may sit between us."

It was a very good supper, and little Billy was oh, so hungry. There was a great platter of lamb stew, one of his favorite dishes, and there were peas and mashed potato, and a dish of big moist sweet potatoes, which Uncle John, who served them, called "yams".

Sue tied on Billy's Peter Rabbit bib with motherly fingers, and Uncle John piled the little boy's plate with good things. At first Billy ate rather shyly, but he was so hungry that his plate was soon emptied.

"What can I give you, Billy?" asked his uncle.

"Some more yam, please," said Billy shyly.

"Good for you," said Uncle John, as he selected a nice, fat, golden-brown sweet potato from the dish. "I raised these yams in my own garden, Billy."

Billy looked expectantly at the platter of meat, but he said nothing.

"Well, Billy boy, what can I do for you?" asked his uncle, who had just helped himself to another sweet potato.

"Some yam 'tew, please," murmured Billy.

"You'll have some yam, too? Good!" said his uncle "I'm glad you like them."

"Are you sure mother lets you eat so much sweet potato, darling?" asked Aunt Edith. "Wouldn't you rather have mashed potato?"

"No thank you," said little Billy. "I —I don't want any potato—I want some yam, please."

"Let him have it, how could it hurt the child, Edith?" asked Uncle John.

It was Sue, who had been three and a half years old herself, not so very, very long before, who suddenly discovered that Billy's lip was quivering and he was not eating his yam.

"What's the matter, darling?" she whispered. "Tell Sue. What was it you wanted?"

"I—I wanted yam—yam 'tew," he said, with a catch in his breath. And then it all flashed over Sue.

"Why, of course, you darling!" Sue's blue eyes signaled mother, over Billy's head. "He wants some lamb stew—we —we just didn't understand."

"Why, of course," repeated Aunt Edith quickly, "how stupid we were! John, he would like some stew!"

"But he said—" Uncle John began, then stopped short at the look in Aunt Edith's face. (How could they have forgotten that little Billy couldn't say all his words plainly yet?) "Let me have your plate, old man!"

Under the tablecloth Sue's hand found Billy's chubby fingers and squeezed them tight. "After supper," she said, "we'll have some fun with the bean-bag game, won't we, Billy?"—By Bertha Gerneaux Woods, in Christian Advocate.

CLOSING THE DOORS.

I have closed the door on Doubt,
I will go by what light I can find,
And hold up my hands and reach them out
To the glimmer of God in the dark, and call,
I am Thine, though I grope and stumble and fall,
I serve, and Thy service is kind.
I have closed the door on Fear.
He has lived with me far too long.
If he were to break forth and reappear,
I should lift up my eyes and look at the sky,
And sing aloud, and run lightly by;
He will never follow a song.

---

I have closed the door on Gloom,
His house has too narrow a view;
I must seek for my soul a wider room
With windows to open and let in the sun.
And radiant lamps when the da yis done,
And the breeze of the world blowing through.

GOD'S WORD IN ACTION.

The promise of God that "My Word shall not return unto me void" is being marvelously fulfilled in the work of the Pocket Testament League.

This work which was launched as a Bible Revival Movement twenty years ago by the famed evangelists, J. Wilbur Chapman and Charles M. Alexander, has been going on in many parts of the world with untold blessing to those who have gotten the spirit of it. The movement is a simple and practical way of interesting people everywhere in reading a portion of God's Word every day and in carrying a Bible or Testament with them wherever they go. In response to this call millions have joined the Pocket Testament League and branch offices have been established in many countries.

Wherever the Pocket Testament League has been introduced and its simple condition kept, wonderful results have followed, revivals have broken out and Christians have been strengthened and led in to definite Christian service. Carrying a testament in one's pocket is found to be not only an excellent way of taking advantage of the opportunities to read it during the day, but also provides a splendid medium for personal work. The League opens at once a direct avenue of service whereby one may do his part in making known to others God's plan of salvation through the Word.

The Disciples of Christ have adopted this plan of the Pocket Testament League as a part of their department on Evangelism and have had marked success with it. About 15,000 of its members have joined.

A portion of a letter from one of our active workers reads: "You will be glad to know that 4,073 new members of the Pocket Testament League are reported for the year 1927 in our Women's Home Missionary Society, making a total membership to date of 33,464. It is a joy to cooperate in a work so evidently used of God for the extension of His Kingdom." This society has set as its goal 50,000 members for the League.

We could recite numerous incidents where God has wrought wonders with His Word. Join now and become an active worker. Tell your friends about it and adopt the plan in your local church.

Literature, information and membership cards will be supplied gratis by writing to the national headquarters, The Pocket Testament League, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

WILLIAM E. STONE.

At the annual meeting of the Board of Trustees of Saint Mary's School, held on Tuesday, May 29, 1928, the Rector made reference to the death of the late Mr. WILLIAM E. STONE, who for almost 25 years had been a teacher in the school. The Trustees requested the Rector to have his appreciation printed in the Church papers just as given.

An Appreciation.

On Saturday, January 14, 1928, Mr. William E. Stone passed away to his rest after a sharp but short illness of only one week. I trust it is not out of place for me to say that his death leaves in my heart a continuous sense of keen loss. If I should try to say in words what his friendship meant to me it might seem to one who did not know him, his rare worth and rare charm, the language of exaggeration. His loss to the school is irreparable in the sense that no one can do what he did for almost 25 years with such beautiful fidelity to duty and such distinction of refinement. We thank God for his services; for the memory of his stainless name; for the example of his life and for the hope of a happy reunion in the day of Jesus Christ.

A telegram was received from the Rev. Mr. Knickerbocker, representative from the Province of the Northwest, announcing that the Diocese of Minnesota had, at its Convention held a few days before, voted to assume its share of the deficit. This amounts to $10,800. The Presiding Bishop stated that the bishops of only three dioceses which had not so far contributed toward the deficit have written that they cannot make any contributions toward this fund; that the bishops of all other dioceses have written that they will contribute, and that it was his hope and expectation that this deficit, which was reported to the General Convention in 1925, would be entirely liquidated before the opening of the General Convention of 1928.

The situation as of May 29, 1928, was:

|---|---|
| Deficit as of December 31, 1925 | $1,534,303 |
| Assumed by dioceses and districts | 1,417,650 |

VIRGINIA

Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, Bishop.

Virginia Theological Seminary.

Commencement exercises were held at the Virginia Theological Seminary, Alexandria, Va., on June 6, 7 and 8. The Rt. Rev. John G. Murray, D. D., made the address at the Annual Missionary Service Wednesday evening. Thursday morning there was an early service of Holy Communion. The Rt. Rev. Clinton S. Quin, D. D., addressed the graduating class at 11:30 A. M., following the regular commencement exercises. An Alumni meeting and Alumni dinner concluded Thursday's program.

Ordination service was held Friday at 11 A. M. The ordination sermon was preached by the Rev. H. H. Covington, D. D.

Reopening of Colonial Church.

Old St. John's Church, near West Point, Va., was reopened for service on Sunday, May 27, after having been closed for repairs for nearly a year.

The church, which was erected in the early years of the Eighteenth Century, stood abandoned and desolate for many years, until it was partially restored, and opened for service in 1926. It was closed again in 1927 because the building was found to be in imminent danger of collapse.

The work of preservation has now been completed and the venerable old building now stands with new roof, the walls strengthened, the interior replastered and repainted, and will stand, it is hoped, for many generations.

The preacher at the reopening service was the Rev. John Y. Downman, D. D., rector of All Saints' Church, Richmond, who, forty-five years ago was the rector of St. John's Parish, in which the old church stands. Other clergymen taking part in the service were the Rev. Coakley C. Graves, rector of St. John's Parish, and the Rev. G. MacLaren Brydon, Executive Secretary of the Diocese.

Dr. Peter Resigns.

During the past week the Rev. George Freeland Peter, D. D., has resigned as rector of St. James' Church, Richmond, and has accepted a call from the Bishop of Washington to become Canon of the National Cathedral in Washington. Last Sunday, in a short announcement to his congregation of his decision and of his reluctance in breaking old ties to accept this larger field of service, Dr. Peter enumerated a few of the forward steps of the church during his thirteen years as rector. Statistics show —Baptisms, 366; Confirmations, 460; transfers accepted from other Protestant Episcopal parishes, 359; total number of persons confirmed together with those received from other Protestant Episcopal parishes, 819. The enrollment of the Sunday school numbers, 475, this being the next to the largest Sunday school enrollment in the diocese. For the year 1927 St. James' Church contributed for General Missions at Home and Abroad, between $18,000 and $19,000. Dr. Peter has devoted valuable, earnest service to St. James' Church and he will be greatly missed by his congregation.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

New Canon for Washington Cathedral.

The Rev. George Freeland Peter, D. D., rector of St. James' Church, Richmond, Va., during the past thirteen years, has accepted a call to become Canon of Washington Cathedral. The return of Dr. Peter to Washington is in reality coming home, for born in historic Tudor Place, Georgetown, most of his active ministry has been spent in the national capital.

He was chaplain to the late Rt. Rev. Henry Yates Satterlee for several years and was connected with the Pro-Cathedral at St. Mark's Church. Later, he became assistant rector at St. Mark's when the Rev. Dr. William Levering De Vries, now chancellor of Washington Cathedral, was rector of the church.

The Rev. Dr. Peter was associate rector to the Rev. Dr. Randolph Harrison McKim, rector of Epiphany Church, and from there he went as rector to Wheeling, W. Va. From there he was called to St. James' Church in Richmond.

He was educated at Columbia College, the University of the South, the General Theological Seminary and Hampden-Sidney College, Virginia, and in his student days, attended Oxford University, England.

Dr. Peter was married to Mrs. Lulie Whitlock Nolting, July 20, 1916, and they have one son, George Freeland Peter, Jr.

The new Canon of Washington is the son of Armistead and Martha Custis (Kennon) Peter and is a descendant of the Martha Custis and Lee families. He is a great-great-great-grandson of Mrs. Martha Washington; a cousin of Gen. Robert E. Lee, as well as being a descendant of Lord Baltimore, and is a grandson of Mrs. Beverley Kennon of Tudor Place, Georgetown. His father was the well known physician of Georgetown.

The Rev. Dr. Peter has two brothers and one sister, all living in Washington—Armistead Peter, Jr., of Tudor Place; Walter Peter, architect, and Miss Agnes Peter.

Lay Services.

The Laymen's Service Association will continue the good work inaugurated last summer and endeavor by lay services to keep all churches in the Diocese open on Sundays during the summer. Ten such services have already been conducted by the Association and a pilgrimage to St. Peter's Church, Poolesville, Md., is planned for June 10. Members of the Woman's Auxiliary and any others interested in the rural work are invited to assemble in front of the Cathedral on that day at 9 A. M. and drive to Poolesville. All are requested to bring lunch. Services will be had at 11 A. M. and again at 3:30 P. M. with conferences in the early afternoon for men, women and young children. The rectorate of this church has been made vacant by the recent death of its rector, the Rev. George C. Shears.

St. Alexander's Holy Eastern Orthodox Catholic and Apostolic Church, which holds services regularly every Sunday in rented quarters, held a service on May 30 in Epiphany Church, in memory of all American, Serbian and Russian sailors and soldiers who have made the "Supreme Sacrifice". The Rev. Father Viachislav Gindlin, rector of the parish in Washington, was the celebrant, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. Robert Shores of St. Margaret's Church. The services were said in the ancient Russian liturgical language and interpreted in English.

St. Andrew's Parish, which is under the jurisdiction of the metropolitan-archbishop Platon, is undertaking an elaborate program of expansion and Americanization. The parish is preparing to purchase a new church building, is establishing a social service bureau and forming several parochial societies. A parish school and old people's home will be opened in the near future.

The Orthodox Catholic Church at large expects to open a seminary for the training of priests in Washington this fall.

The Rev. Henry Lubeck, of New York City, honorary canon of Washington Cathedral, has been in Washington for a visit of more than a week and has been the preacher at Epiphany Church and leader of a quiet hour for the Woman's Auxiliary during that time.

Rt. Rev. A. S. Lloyd, D. D., Suffragan
Rt. Rev. Herbert Shipman, D. D., Suffragan.

To Confer on Church Follow-up Problems for Anglicans in This Country.

As a representative of the Rt. Rev. William T. Manning, D. D., Bishop of New York, the Rev. Dr. L. Ernest Sunderland sailed on the night of June 2 on the Red Star Liner, Arabic, for England, to confer with authorities of the Anglican Church on Problems of Church follow-up for migrating members.

The Episcopal City Mission Society, of which Bishop Manning is President and Dr. Sunderland Superintendent, has, through its workers at Ellis Island and elsewhere, been receiving for years immigrants from the Anglican Church, assisting them at the port of entry and referring them to the nearest Episcopal Parish in the community of their destination. In discharging this responsibility, the Diocese of New York, through its City Mission Society, has been acting for the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States.

"In the last four years," stated Dr. Sunderland last night, "the facilities of this Society for referring these immigrants to Episcopal parishes all over the country has been considerably increased. There is need, however, for closer working relationship with authorities on the other side, so that immigrants coming here may always find us, who are ready to assist them, and may feel a welcome when they reach the towns chosen for their new homes."

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., Coadjutor

Special Service for Guild for Nurses.

A special service for the Baltimore Branch of St. Barnabas Guild for Nurses was held on the evening of Sunday, May 13, at Emmanuel Church, the Rev. Hugh Birckhead, rector. In the chancel were the Rt. Rev. Edward T. Helfenstein, Bishop Coadjutor, and the Rev. S. Tagart Steele, Jr., Chaplain of the Guild. The First Lesson in the service was read by Dr. A. J. Lomas, Superintendent of the University of Maryland Hospital, the Second Lesson by Dr. Winford H. Smith, Director of Johns Hopkins Hospital. A special musical program was rendered by the choir and the rector preached on "The Ministration by Women".

Annual Meeting of the Church Service League.

The annual meeting of the Church Service League of the Diocese of Maryland was held at the Pro-Cathedral on Tuesday, May 22. Holy Communion was celebrated by Bishop Murray, and the Bi-yearly United Thank Offering of the Woman's Auxiliary was presented. This amounted to more than $4,000, making a total of more than $20,000 to be presented from Maryland at the General Convention. It is hoped to raise this up to $30,000 before fall.

Luncheon was served at one o'clock, after which the many departmental organizations of the Service League made their reports for the year. An address on "Religion in College Life" was delivered by Mr. Lewis B. Franklin, D. C. L., Vice-President and Treasurer of the National Council of the Church.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rt. Rev. Thomas J. Garland, D. D., Bishop.

Ground Broken for Resurrection Mission.

Ground was broken Saturday afternoon, June 2, for the first unit of a group of church buildings to house the newly-organized Protestant Episcopal Mission of the Resurrection in the Englewood section of Northeast Philadelphia.

Englewood is a new section in the city that is being rapidly developed as a residential district. It is between Frankford and Holmesburg in the vicinity of the Old Forrest Home. Bishop Garland, as a result of the 1926 campaign of the Episcopal Church to provide for the needs of its institutions and missions, purchased for the Resurrection Mission a large piece of ground, which will permit room for the erection of a church, parish house and rectory, and Saturday afternoon the first step was taken in providing building needs.

The congregation of the Resurrection is now worshipping in a private residence. The Rev. A. R. Van Meter, Dean of the Germantown Convocation and Executive Secretary of the Diocese, represented the Bishop at this ceremony. The Rev. L. N. Caley, Chairman of the Diocesan Department of Missions, turned the first spade-full of earth. The clergy and members of the parishes in the Germantown Convocation took part in the ceremonies. The Resurrection Mission is in charge of the Rev. C. Sydney Goodman, rector of Emmanuel Church, Holmesburg.

Another mosquito? Not if you use Flit. Flit spray clears the house of every mosquito and disease-bearing fly in a few moments. It quickly reaches the cracks where roaches, bed bugs and ants hide and breed, destroying their eggs. Fatal to insects, harmless to you. Will not stain.

Do not confuse Flit with ordinary insecticides. Greater killing power insures satisfaction with Flit. One of the largest corporations in the world guarantees Flit to kill insects, or money back. Buy Flit and a Flit sprayer today.

THE PRAYER BOOK REVISION

By the Rev. Canon G. Osborne Troop, Toronto, Canada.

(The proposed revision of the Prayer Book of the Church of England has precipitated in the Old Land one of the most violent religious controversies of recent years. Just why evangelical Churchmen object to the proposed changes is here clearly set forth by Canon Troop):

AS a lifelong loyalist and lover of Old England and of England's Church, I am naturally keenly interested in the proposed revision of the English Book of Common Prayer. With all due respect for the Archbishops and Bishops, who have by a very large majority recommended the new Book for adoption, I share the conviction of Bishop Knox and other leading evangelicals that the Bishops' proposal is a hopeless attempt to face in two opposite directions at the same time, and to speak with two contradictory voices. The matter under discussion is of vital interest, not only to England, but to the whole English-speaking world.

The crux of the whole situation is found in the Holy Communion; and Evangelical Churchmen view with gravest apprehension alterations in the Communion service, which, in their judgment, tend toward an abandonment of the Scriptural position and the restoration of the Sacrifice of the Mass. I have, therefore, concentrated attention upon the great subject of the Real Presence of our Lord Jesus Christ. Everything centres here, and in a very real sense our Christian liberty is at stake.

The Real Presence.

The consideration of this sacred subject must inevitably lead us into the region of age-long controversy; but the present writer can truthfully affirm that he is not contending for party triumph, but simply for the Truth as it is revealed in Christ Jesus our Lord. The true evangelical is not a party man. He is a follower of Christ, first, last and all the time. To him Christ's Word is final, as revealed in the Sacred Scriptures. Beyond that Word there is for him no appeal. He stands or falls with Christ as his all in all. He can do no other.

What then does Christ Himself tell us of His Real Presence? It is very remarkable that while He was here upon earth, and before His death and resurrection, He gave the great promise—"Where two or three are gathered together in My name, there am I in the midst of them". It is obvious that, in the nature of things, the Presence promised in these words must be understood as a spiritual presence. Again, in the famous discourse on Himself as the Bread of Life, when He solemnly tells us that "Except we eat the Flesh of the Son of Man and drink His Blood, we have no life in us". He is careful to explain that "It is the spirit that quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothing; the words that I have spoken unto you are spirit and are life".

Stronger language could not be used than is found in the definite statement: "The flesh profiteth nothing." Even if we were able literally to eat the Flesh of the Son of Man, and to drink His Blood, it would do us no good whatever. If we would "profit" we must feed upon Him spiritually, not in the mouth, but in the heart, which we can only do by faith.

Presence in the Heart.

It thus becomes clear that when we turn to the Holy Communion the Presence of the Lord Jesus is not to be looked for in the consecrated Bread and Wine, but, as Hooker so well expressed it, "in the heart of the believer". To this the Church of England commits itself in the carefully chosen words of administration. It is matter of common knowledge, though not always borne in mind, that the words of administration in our present Prayer Book consist of two distinct sentences. These sentences were in previous editions of the Prayer Book used separately, but are now combined. The first sentence is a definite prayer referring to the offering of the Body of Christ once for all upon the cross:

(a) "The Body of our Lord Jesus Christ, which was given for thee, preserve thy body and soul unto everlasting life."

(b) "Take and eat this in remembrance that Christ died for thee; and feed upon Him in thine heart, by faith, with thanksgiving."

These last words may be reverently paraphrased to bring out their meaning:

"Take and eat this Bread in remembrance that Christ died for thee, and feed upon Him, not in thy mouth, but in thine heart, by faith, with thanksgiving."

The words used in giving the Cup follow the same lines, and need not be further quoted.

To make assurance doubly sure that the Real

The Right Furniture.

For the past ten months this feature in the Southern Churchman has been offering very interesting and helpful information on Church and Sunday-School requisites.

Many churches—their ministers and active lay workers—are constantly alert for new methods and better ways of doing the best work.

A resume would most likely bring back the many advantages in those printed articles together with its allied advertising.

Visual Education and Light.

Improvement time is well at hand and many churches and committees are working on projects to develop or beautify God's House or rebuild to suit their present needs.

Such articles as Rugs, the latest designs of Art Linoleum for Church and Sunday-school Rooms. New Church Furniture; Pews, Chairs, Hymn Books; Hymnals for Church and Sunday School use and Book Backs to keep them in good condition.

Every church needs an Announcement Board. The latest type is one made of cork, giving the best service and longest life.

Object Lessons are always impressive in Sunday-school work leaving a lasting memory in one's mind. These indelible lesson helps can be had on many subjects to help explain and impress the Bible truths. Two splendid Teachers' helps are the "Objects of the Holy Lands" and "The Flowers of Palestine". Seeing is believing; that's the value of these many useful object lessons and talks.

It is indeed worth while to ask yourself, "Is our Church or Sunday School equipped with all the suitable material for proper active Christian Work and is it used to the best advantages"?

As this feature is comparatively new, many interesting subjects on the latest developments in the Church and Sunday School world have not been touched upon, but, in later articles we will give the readers more constructive ideas to have at their command when needed.

Our problems are different than yours, but we invite correspondence of this nature to develop that cooperation of readers and advertisers, who are more than willing to serve you. Address the Church Equipment Service of the Southern Churchman, 628 East Main Street, Richmond, Va.

Where Will You Spend Your Vacation

Centenary Hall has running water, hot and cold, in every room, bath rooms on every floor, electric lights, steam heat if necessary, and all the windows are screened. It is located in the Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia, 1,300 feet above sea level, in the midst of beautiful scenery, in a delightful climate. Twenty thousand gollons of pure mountain spring water flow into the buildings by gravity every day from nine mountain springs. The table is as good as is usually found in the best hotels, the superintendent of the culinary department is a skilled hotel manager, the work is done by students working their way through school, and the cost is about one-half of what is usually charged for what is given. If you are looking for a delightful place in the mountains to spend your vacation at a very low cost, write to

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

There are needs in our nature not fully satisfied here; there are prayers not completely answered while we are on the earth. Every hunger and thirst of our souls is prophetic. What we now receive is but an earnest of an inheritance yet held in reserve for us. Here we see the riches of the glory of God as the belated traveler coming over the hill sees the sparks rising from the chimney of his home, a glimmer of its light in the window, and catches faint snatches of the children awaiting his coming. It is satisfying to see it, to know that the light and the warmth are in preparation for him. But when he gets into the home and stands in the full blaze of the light and warmth of the hearth every need of mind and body is fully satisfied. We are on our way to our Father's home where there awaits us the exceeding and eternal weight of glory.—Selected.

That which is not honest with men is not honorable with God.

"O God! how beautiful the thought,
How merciful the blessed decree;
That grace can e'er be found, when sought
And naught shut out the soul from Thee."

One man's happiness can never be built out of another's misery.

Blessed Lord, teach me to be generous, teach me to serve Thee as Thou deservest, to give and not to count the cost, to fight and not to heed the wounds, to toil and not to seek for rest, to labor and not seek reward, save that of feeling that I do Thy will. Amen.

Words fail us when we begin to describe God's goodness to us. How could we put into words what the promises of Christ have meant to us? What a note of confidence has been put in our lives ever since we appropriated them! Are our lives as serene as theirs should be to whom God's word has been pledged?—B. T. Badley.

There must be a serene commitment of the soul to the strong keeping of the Eternal God. He committed Himself to Him that judgeth righteously. This is the way of peace, as this is the way of victory. If ever the enemy is to be conquered this must be the mode of the conquest.—J. H. Jowett.

They who have the Giver have all gifts.

Let the dawn of morning be to you as the beginning of life, and every setting sun be to you as its close; then let every one of those short lives leave its sure record of some kindly thing done for others, some goodly strength or knowledge gained for yourself.—John Ruskin.

If we desire a definition of holiness, it would be something more than a play on words to say that it consists in the perfect possession of those qualities which are wholesome for the whole body of faithful people.—The Guardian.

DANGER

Perhaps it is fortunate for the Church that the triennial convention this year will meet after the political parties have nominated their candidates for the Presidency. Apparently, there is determined and widespread purpose to thrust the Protestant denominations into politics.

A clergyman at convocation or convention of his denomination is forced into a cruelly embarrassing position when a resolution is presented endorsing or denouncing, directly or indirectly, an aspirant for high political place on the prohibition issue or because of religious faith. The most conscientious clergyman, however strong and clear his principles and opinions against intermingling of Church and State, injection of politics into religion or questions of religion into politics, must consider the effect of his vote on his own congregation and community. He is confronted with what is declared a moral issue and compelled to realize the harm he may do to his own denomination, his individual charge and the public by appearing to place himself on the side of immorality or of a religious organization regarded by many sincere people as a menace to our liberties and institutions.

We may not know how many scores or hundreds of faithful, devout, men are thus practically coerced to vote contrary to their judgment. Resolutions are adopted and the Protestants of the United States are put in serious danger of repeating the mistakes and incurring the disasters of the Roman Catholic Church in Europe, the Puritans in Old and New England and the Church of England in Virginia. All these experiences have proved that the great body of the laity resent and resist ecclesiastical interference in secular and political affairs. History tells us the Church of Rome probably would have retained dominance and Luther would have commanded small following if Pope Clement had concentrated attention on purifying his Church and making his clergy, of all grades, loyal soldiers of the Cross instead of meddling in politics, and trying to govern kings and nobles with excommunications. Cromwell might have made his commonwealth permanent and a huge blessing to the world if the Presbyterians had not insisted on Church regulation of politics and had been less rigid in regulating personal habits of the masses. New England Puritans brought overthrow of their power when they undertook to require by law invariable and universal attendance at church. In Virginia the Church of England and the Episcopal Church lay years at point of death because they had been established by law as State Churches.

Logic unchecked by common sense leads to extreme conclusions and unguided by faith in the Almighty and our finer emotions, instincts and cravings leads to darkness and hopelessness. Perhaps the strongest evidence of the existence and continuing power of God and of the share of His divinity we have is the survival of our confident belief in so much we cannot prove and which logic based entirely on the material seems to disprove. We can persuade ourselves easily and logically that almost any issue involves a moral question demanding decisive action. Good Episcopalians in Virginia in the Eighteenth Century considered the teachings of the Baptists immoral and destructive and concluded that it was a Christian duty to lock Baptist preachers in jails. Fifty years ago the "foot-washing Baptists of the South Carolina mountains—many of them entirely sincere men—assembled in convention, decided, with flawless logic, that it was an inherent right of the citizen to make his corn into whiskey and his fruit into brandy and to have his cattle run free wherever there was grass. Therefore, they adopted resolutions to expel from membership anybody reporting a moonshine distillery or voting for the "fence law", requiring owners of cattle to fence them in. Early in the last century the Episcopal Church in Virginia decreed denial of the Sacrament to all who attended a horse race or a public ball or theatrical performance. The decree became a dead letter and encouraged the habit of disregarding Church ordinances and the Church itself. Many clergymen at the North in the fifties demonstrated logically that slavery was a moral issue on which there could be no compromise or conciliation. They were potently instrumental in forcing horribly tragic determination of a political complication which could have been adjusted peacefully and fairly. Of course, there was fault on both sides of the Potomac. The tragedy illustrated fearfully the ease of self-deception and the vast harm that may be done by sincerely pious, well-meaning individuals and organizations using logic to stimulate their own prejudices and passions.

Conditions force us to general tolerance and use of common sense in our business and social relations. When we buy or sell or seek employment or employ labor we do not ask of religious beliefs nor opinions on the Eighteenth Amendment. We do not as hosts or guests regulate our invitations or attendance by Church membership nor approval or disapproval of prohibition. Good citizens discountenance violations of the moral laws that are based on the Commandments, respect for which is necessary not only for the service of God, but for preservation of civilization and society, and avoid contact with cheats, tricksters and liars who may evade the statutes. It is the duty of the Church to labor to elevate and purify public sentiment and conduct and to teach strict allegiance to the civil authorities and existing laws of the land. When a religious organization undertakes to control opinions or to intrude, on any pretext, in politics, it enters an endless labyrinth of peril, renews past errors, invites repetition of past failures and evil results. It strengthens the foes of religion by giving them new occasions for scoffing and derision, new material on which to base charges of "ecclesiastical tyranny", and arouses resentment among many thousands who instinctively revolt against attempts to dictate to them how or for or against what or whom they may vote.

Doubtless the Pharisees had convinced some of themselves, and many others, that payment of tribute to Caesar was a moral question. They met from the Highest and Holiest of all Authority a stinging, epigrammatic lesson on the separation of religion and politics. Some of us can recall old-fashioned Episcopal clergymen so sensitive on this subject that they never expressed a political opinion or even voted until the emergency of the reconstruction period made voting an urgent, unquestionable duty.

The churches have burdens enough to carry, obstacles enough to encounter, in trying to do the work given them to do and clearly and always before them, bringing people to love and obey God and seek salvation of their souls through Christ. When they go beyond the standards of Christian and godly life and conduct established by the Scriptures, common sense usage and common sense they are on ground which plain facts and lessons of history tell us is dangerous for churches and people alike.

The twentieth of the thirty-nine Articles of Religion, adopted 1801, seems to decide the case so far as the Episcopal Church is concerned:

"Wherefore, although the Church be a witness and a keeper of Holy Writ, yet, as it ought not to decree anything against the same, so besides the same ought it not to enforce anything to be believed for necessity of salvation."

SUNDAY

(A Message From The Reverend Dyson Hague, Toronto, Canada.)

I THINK the great thing for us to remember about Sunday is that it is the Lord's Day. It is stamped with God's Image and superscription as a totally different day from the other six. It is sacred, sanctified, divine. It began at the creation when God Himself blessed the seventh day and sanctified it for our sake, and for the glory of His Name (Gen. 2:3), and it rose into newness of life with Christ at the resurrection (John 20:19 and Rev. 1:10). With the coming of the summer one is impressed with the fact that Church Christians will have to make a firmer stand if they are going to keep the Lord's own day for Christ and Church and Country. "Sunday," said Emerson, "is the core of civilization." "Sunday," said Disraeli, "is of all divine institutions the most divine; the most valuable blessing ever conceded to man." It's not only the core of civilization, it's the core of Christianity. Voltaire knew that. He is said to have remarked that there was no hope of destroying the Christian religion until the Sabbath was abolished. There is little change, thank God, in our country of secularism abolishing the Lord's Day, but there is a subtler peril. It is that stream of alien and worldly influence will lead men to forget its origin, and its object; its claims and its value. The first and great thing is for men to remember that Sunday is an essentially different day from any other day in the week. Like the Bible amongst books, it stands in a class by itself. Compared with the six other days, it is altogether high, holy, heavenly. It's the Lord's Day. It's not a thing of Jewish tradition. From creation it was made by God Himself, for the physical, mental, moral and spiritual good of man as men. Never was the day so sorely needed and, as the summer days come on, it comes with a high call to parents and teachers to strenuously guard the day and pay the price of its observance. For, after all, it rests with the members of the Church. It is they who have got to pay the price of self-sacrifice, obey the call of duty, and stand out against the spirit of the age. For the great mass of people today who go off in their autos, or desert the churches for parks and riversides, or lounge on their sofas or easy chairs to listen to some orator or musicians in Washington or Chicago are nominally members of the Church. It is Church people who have capitulated to the spirit of the world without putting up the semblance of a fight for the Lord and His cause. A fine story is told of a leading politician who was asked by some of his constituents to meet them on a Sunday afternoon for conference. He replied, "I regret that I am unable to comply with your request for a Sunday meeting. I must have one day in which I am at liberty to think of the claims of God and the soul". It was Gladstone, who gave to the gramophone years ago the famous message: "I owe my life to the Sabbath Day with its blessed surcease from toil." To honor it and hold it will mean a fight and perhaps a sacrifice, especially on the part of the young, but it's worth it. To have only sacred music, to cut out secular visiting and Sunday travel, to make it a conscience rule to attend God's House, to hear God's Word, and worship Him—these are part of the price. It would be a great thing if we all would remember what the little boy said to his father: "Father, is it really Sunday if we don't go to Church?" It is said that in the days of the persecutions of the primitive Church, the one standard question put to Christians as a test of their religion was "dominicum servasti", "Hast thou kept the Lord's Day"? And it is said that the answer nobly given, which meant death if not torture, was "Christianus sum intermittere non possum", "I am a Christian. I cannot give up observing it". Oh, members of our beloved Church, try and realize for the Master's sake that to remember the Sabbath Day and keep it holy must mean sacrifice, especially on the part of the young. But it's worth it.

PLAIN BIBLE STUDIES

Prepared by J. T. Bougher. Reading Terminal, Philadelphia, Pa.

Note: In this new series of studies effort will be made to set forth in brief form wondrous things that God would have us know as told in His own eternal words.

Lesson.—No. 39.

Topic.—THE VARIOUS NAMES AND TITLES OF CHRIST JESUS OUR LORD.

A subject of great interest is that of the different names and titles of our Saviour. In fact, so wonderful is the person and work of the beloved Son of God, it would seem that the Holy Spirit in causing the Bible to be written, used this method as one means of expressing His greatness and glory.

We shall dwell briefly upon but one of these titles, "the Bright and Morning Star", and leave to the reader the interesting study and pictured meaning of each of the names shown below. The characteristics of the morning star enables us to readily grasp the significance of this name as applied to our Lord as we remember it is the brightest of stars and shines most brilliant when the night is darkest, and is also a harbinger of approaching morn.

The world is passing through its night of sin, and to the true believer our Saviour is becoming increasingly precious. Dispensationally, we know that the night is far spent, and this title appearing as it does in the last message of the Holy Book, affords a special interest to believers, who as "pilgrims of the night", eagerly await the dawn of their eternal morn,

SHORT FAMILY PRAYERS

Reverend Joshua Peterkin, D. D.

TUESDAY MORNING.

ALMIGHTY and everlasting God, we, Thy dependent creatures, come before Thee to thank Thee for the many mercies Thou hast bestowed upon us.

We adore Thee for the gift of Thy Son, Jesus Christ, by whose gospel life and immortality are brought to light, and we are instructed in those things which concern our salvation. We bless Thee for the pardon of our sins through faith in His atoning blood. We thank Thee for the guidance of Thy Providence and the consolations of Thy Spirit, as well as for Thy written word, and all the other means of grace which Thou hast afforded us.

Grant, we beseech Thee, that we may this day perform with diligence and fidelity whatever work Thou hast given us to do, and that amid all our worldly labours we may preserve a spiritual frame of mind. May we remember, too, that in the midst of life we are in death; and may we live habitually under the influence of this solemn truth.

Save us from the sins which most easily beset us. Leave us not to our natural inclinations, which so often prompt us to evil, but put Thy Spirit within our hearts, and enable us to cultivate a Christian temper, and abound in every good work. Strengthen our faith, we beseech Thee, and impart to our souls that peace which this world can neither give nor take away.

May we bear adversity with patience, and in prosperity may we be watchful over ourselves and moderate in our enjoyments, being always ready to share with others the blessings Thou hast bestowed upon us. Inspire us with zeal in the fulfilment of our duties, with integrity in our dealings, and with a spirit of kindness toward all men.

We pray for Thy blessing on all our relations and friends, that being endued with wisdom and spiritual understanding they may know and do Thy holy will.

Have mercy on the poor and the afflicted, strengthen the weak, succor the tempted, and guide the ignorant into the way of knowledge.

We offer up these, our imperfect prayers, in the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord and Saviour. Amen.

Our Father, &c.
grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, &c.

TUESDAY EVENING.

Almighty God, maker of all things and judge of all men, we Thy creatures who live on Thy daily bounty, desire to come before Thee with our evening sacrifice of prayer and praise.

Pardon, we beseech Thee, whatever evil we have either said, or thought, or done this day. Enable us, also, to examine ourselves by the light of Thine unerring word, and vouchsafe unto us true repentance and faith in Jesus Christ.

Grant unto us the assistance of Thy Holy Spirit, that we may amend our ways, and walk in newness of life. Let us not live with our hearts set upon vain and unprofitable things, but may we be useful in that state of life in which Thou hast placed us. May we be full of meekness and patience, kindness and forbearance, benevolence and charity. May our faith prove itself by our works, so that we may abound in the fruits of righteousness, which are by Jesus Christ, to the praise and glory of Thy name.

We also beseech Thee to bless unto us the various events of Thy providence, and so to order all things that they may work together for our eternal good.

We may not know what a day may bring forth. O sanctify to us our prosperity and our adversity; our sickness and our health; and whatever the changes Thou mayest be pleased to send, may we consider them as coming from Thy fatherly hand, and humbly submit ourselves to Thy holy will. May we be enabled to preserve cheerful and contented minds; and being reconciled to Thee, our God, may we enjoy peace within ourselves, and be in charity with all men.

These our imperfect supplications, we present before Thee, in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Our Father, &c.

The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, &c.

SECOND SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY

By Berkeley Minor

Collect.—O Lord, who never failest to help and govern those whom Thou dost bring up in Thy steadfast fear and love, keep us, we beseech Thee, under the protection of Thy good providence, and make us to have a perpetual fear and love of Thy Holy Name; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

FIVE of the six usual parts of a collect are here; the first, the attribute, being omitted. The address is simply, "O Lord!" evidently God the Father, as there is the usual fifth part, the mediation, through Jesus Christ our Lord. The second part, the ascription, is an acknowledgment on our part of God's never-failing care to help and govern those whom He brings up in His steadfast fear and love. The third part, the petition, is double, asking for that protection of His "good providence", which the ascription speaks of and that we may "have a perpetual fear and love of His Holy Name"; and it ends, as always, with the Amen.

In this collect God's government of His loved ones is made prominent in the ascription. In our weakness and insufficiency to guide our wandering feet wisely, to dwell upon this government is very helpful and consoling. This lack of power to guide our feet wisely is often dwelt upon in Holy Scripture, e. g. (Jer. 10:23): "It is not in man that walketh to direct his steps"; (2 Cor. 3:5): "Not that we are sufficient of ourselves to account anything as from ourselves; but our sufficiency is of God." Our Book of Common Prayer dwells often on the powerlessness of God's people to keep in the right way without guiding grace, in which it follows the Psalter, which abounds in such passages. The fourth petition in the "Te Deum Laudamus" is "Govern them (Thy people), and lift them up forever". In the "collect for grace" (in Morning Prayer) we pray "that all our doings, being ordered by Thy government, may be righteous in Thy sight". In the collect for Second Sunday in Lent (in the ascription) we acknowledge "that we have no power of ourselves to help ourselves", ask Almighty God to "keep us both outwardly in our bodies and inwardly in our souls; that we may be defended from all adversities which may happen to the body, and from all evil thoughts which may assault and hurt the soul"; and the petition of the collect for Fifth Sunday in Lent is, "that by Thy great goodness they (Thy people) may be governed and preserved evermore, both in body and soul". In the ascription of the collect for Fourth Sunday after Easter is again an acknowledgment that Almighty God alone can "order the unruly wills and affections of sinful men".

I have said that the "Psalter abounds" in such passages, showing the great need of God's people not only for guidance but for governance. Some passages from the Psalms showing this will interest us, e. g., Ps. 5:8, where David asks God to lead him: "Lead me, O Lord, in Thy righteousness, because of mine enemies; make Thy way plain before my face." Says the Cambridge Bible (Dr. Kirkpatrick): "It is a prayer for guidance which is the main object and central thought of the Psalm."

Many hymns contain such prayers for guidance, e. g.: "Lead, Kindly Light" and "Guide me, O Thou great Jehovah". The Twenty-third Psalm shows David's entire dependence on the Lord, "my Shepherd", and the many paraphrases of this beautiful Psalm show how many devout souls have felt the same dependence and sympathize fully with the Psalmist's need of guidance, such as poor, helpless, foolish sheep constantly need at the hands of their good Shepherd, who careth for His sheep and lays down His life for them (John 10:11). In the Eighth Psalm we find David singing sweetly on two themes specially, the dominion of man over the works of God's hands and God governing all. The Psalm begins and ends with the government of God, and its excellence: "O Lord, our Governor, how excellent is Thy name in all the world." The Cambridge Bible (Dr. Kirkpatrick) says of this beautiful song: "It has been suggested that David composed it as a shepherd on the plains of Bethlehem. With all its marvelous depth of meaning, it certainly possesses a striking freshness and simplicity . . ." "The appropriateness of this Psalm, as one of the Proper Psalms for Ascension Day, is obvious. It is in the Ascension of Christ that we see man, in the person of his personal representative, crowned with glory and honor" (so the C. B.). Verse twenty-three of Psalm 37 says: "The Lord ordereth a good man's going, and maketh his way acceptable to Himself. Though he fall, he shall not be cast away; for the Lord upholdeth him with His hand." Even if he fall, so loving is the Lord, He will not leave him fallen; but will uphold and restore him. But, oh! let us not presume upon such kindness; only just find comfort in a belief in the final perseverance of His saints. Note, too, how often in the Psalter His chosen people are compared to sheep, e. g., Psalm 77:20: "Thou leddest Thy people like sheep, by the hand of Moses and Aaron," and Psalm 77:14: "So we that are Thy people, and sheep of Thy pasture shall give Thee thanks forever"; and the One hundred and nineteenth Psalm, verse one hundred and seventy-sixth (its last verse), says: "I have gone astray like a sheep that is lost; Oh, seek Thy servant", so familiar to us by our use of it in the general confession at Morning and Evening Prayer.

THE Epistle for the Second Sunday after Trinity is 1 John 3:13-24. The first portion of this Epistle dwells on the hatred the Christian must expect from the world, and the love he owes to his fellow-Christians. Love coupled with fear was made prominent in the ascription and petition of collect, but there it was fear and love addressed to Him and His Holy Name; here in the Epistle both His love for us, who laid down His life for us, and our love for the brethren, which should make us willing to lay down our lives for them, are urged. Our love for a Christian brother is not often exposed to so severe a test as this, to lay down life for him; yet it is well for us at times to consider the matter, and at least commune with ourselves and with God as to how we may have grace to make such sacrifice, were occasion to offer. Some have attained grace to imitate our blessed Lord Himself in laying down life for enemies; many missionaries have done so, and many have put themselves in places so dangerous as to show their perfect willingness to die for His cause, and for the hostile heathen, to whom they often offer the Gospel at the imminent risk of their lives. A notable example of such sacrifice of life for enemies' sake, is that of Bishop John Coleridge Patteson. He labored among the islands of Polynesia and did much good. He feared he might be killed in retaliation for islanders, kidnapped and carried off as slaves by traders in such nefarious business; and so it came to pass. Miss Charlotte Yonge's account of her young kinsman's death is very touching. He was about forty-five years old. He had said that he hoped, if he should be killed, no steps would be taken to punish those who killed him; for he was sure they would do it only as vengeance on the white men who had injured them, and by mistake.

While the Christian is rarely called upon to lay down his life for a fellow-Christian, yet the opportunities offered to show his love for the brethren in other ways are numberless, and so St. John in an emphatic, rhetorical question asks how can the love of God be in him, who, having this world's goods, and seeing his brother in need, shuts up his bowels of compassion from him? And that class to which the Apostle refers here, those who have this world's goods, must not be limited to the rich or the well-to-do; but includes all who have any portion of this world's goods, however small. The brother in need has a claim on us for some portion of our goods, and the less we have of such, and the more we devote to such pious uses, the more pleasing is it in His sight, as is shown by His recorded approval of the poor widow's offering. The necessity of some degree of self-denial in giving, if it is to be pleasing in God's sight, or productive of any growth in grace, cannot be emphasized too strongly. Giving what costs us nothing is of no profit to the giver, spiritually. Thomas Hood's definition of true charity (or love) is excellent: "When poverty giveth to want, that is charity." The inspiring motive must be love, the same love in kind, however small in degree, with which God so loved the world that He gave His only-begotten Son . . . that we might not perish, but have everlasting life. Doubtless this is one of the chief dangers that threaten the Christian, who, in spite of many warnings both in Old and New Testaments, but especially in the New, allows himself to be handicapped in the heavenly race by too large an income. It is hard to give a sufficiently large proportion of his means to feel it, and such self-denial and discipline are absolutely essential to growth in grace. The man who has, say, an income of $10,000 a year, and gives to pious uses one-tenth of it, would be thought by many to be giving liberally; yet what is left gives him all, and more than all, that he needs, or can reasonably want, and is a sad hindrance to holy living, and to that holy dying which belong only to Him who by His grace is enabled to deny himself and take up his cross and follow Him (Mark 8:34).

Let us consider for a moment that passion, the opposite of love, of which St. John speaks in our Epistle, which begins: "Marvel not, my brethren, if the word hate you." The word is used in the Scripture, both Old and New, of various degrees of dislike, and, sometimes, of no dislike at all, only a less degree of love, as in that remarkable saying of Jesus (Luke 14:26), that a man cannot be His disciple, if he "hate not his father, and mother, and wife and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also"; clearly meaning that the Christian's love of Christ must surpass and overshadow all other loves as far as love surpasses hate. This hatred of the world, which we must expect according to our Lord's teaching, if we live His life, has in these more civilized times been changed mostly into dislike and contempt; active persecution is rarely seen now; even a friendliness toward Christianity on the part of the world, seems in some measure to prevail now; a patronizing attitude is very common from the wise according to this world toward those who seek "heavenly wisdom's narrow way", that wisdom which St. James says (Chapter 1:5): "If any man lack, let him ask of God that giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him," a wisdom in comparison with which God has called worldly wisdom, foolish (1 Cor. 3: 19); "for the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God . . . ." Our Lord's words (according to St. John 15 et seq.) are very significant in these days, especially when the churches are so honey-combed with worldliness: "If the world hate you, ye know that it hated me before it hated you. If ye were of the world, the world would love his own; but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you . . ." and again (Luke 6:22 and 6:25): "Blessed are ye when men shall hate you . . ." And, "Woe unto you, when all men shall speak well of you; for so did their fathers to the false prophets". A persecuted Church (as in those Apostolic times, and for long years after) is, and must necessarily be, a Church not of the world, a Church entirely free from worldly members; for none such will enter it, or remain in it under the fires of persecution. But the world now as always loves its own, and self-indulgence of many of its members. How shall the Church be purified and sanctified, and win that hatred of the world that St. John expects and speaks of here? Judging by its history since its foundation in the First Century of our era, the only periods in which it has been in any way worthy of its vocation, have been periods of its persecution. When freed from persecution, and in a sense prosperous, it has invariably become corrupt, and often become a persecuting Church, casting out of its pale many of whom neither she nor the world was worthy. Her only hope would then seem to be in a return of persecution or in a return of Him, "the Church's one foundation", Jesus Christ our Lord. At His first Advent He found the Church of God so hopelessly corrupt, that it was doomed. It may be so when He comes again, as St. Paul says He will (1 Thess. 4:16-17): "For the Lord Himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive, and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord." And St. John, speaking of this First Resurrection of the dead in Christ, says: "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: over these the second death hath no power; but they shall be priests of God, and of Christ, and shall reign with Him a thousand years. Only the dead in Christ are so blessed, whether in the visible Church or cast out of it, as many have been by a corrupt and persecuting Church. Only such are described in the following verses:

"For the vision of the Bridegroom
Waits the well-beloved Bride,
Severed only for a season
From her well-beloved's side.
For the hour when morn ascendeth,
And the shadows disappear;
For the signs of heavenly glory,
She is waiting, waiting here.

For the coming of the Bridegroom,
Whom, tho' yet unseen, we love;
For the King of saints returning
In His glory from above;
For the shout that shakes the prison,
For the trumpet loud and clear,
For the voice of the archangel,
She is waiting, waiting here.

For the light beyond the darkness,
When the reign of sin is done;
When the storm has ceased its raging,
And the haven has been won;
For the joy beyond the sorrow,
Joy of the eternal year,
For the resurrection splendor,
She is waiting, waiting here."

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed—"Thy word have I hid in my heart" (Psalm 119:11).

This week the following verse was submitted by Mrs. J. P. S., of Memphis, Tenn.:

"Casting all your care upon Him; for He careth for you."—1 Peter 5:7.

Who will send one from the far-away places, as well as very near us?

The Great Commission

A VISIT TO THE NORTHEAST MISSION.

W. Leigh Ribble, Porto Alegre, Brazil.

Nearly fifty miles north of the City of Porto Alegre rises a great plateau, three thousand feet high, which covers the northeastern part of the State of Rio Grande do Sul and extends northward hundreds of miles along the coast of Brazil. This upland, the Serra do Mar, is almost entirely devoted to cattle raising and consequently is sparsely settled. There are few villages and the houses of the cattle-men, or gauchos, are far apart. There are but few good roads on the Serra and traveling is chiefly done on horseback. Due largely to their isolation and the difficulties of travel, the people have been cut off from adequate spiritual ministration for generations.

Our work on the Serra is known as the Northeast Mission. It covers that part of the Serra in the extreme northeast portion of the State of Rio Grande do Sul and also embraces the village of Praia Grande, which lies at the foot of the plateau within the State of Santa Catharina.

The Northeast Mission got its start twenty years ago when a Sr. Baptista dos Santos, then living in the village of Sao Francisco, requested a clergyman of the Brazilian Episcopal Church to come up and baptize his children. As a consequence a mission station was established at Sao Francisco. Sr. Baptista has contributed greatly to the expansion of the work on the Serra. He is a devoted member of the Church and has imparted this same devotion to his fourteen children, who are distributed in many places and have formed the nuclei of several congregations.

Sr. Baptista has moved several times, but wherever he has gone the Brazilian Church has been established. Thus he made possible the founding of missions at Sao Francisco, Cedro, Lageado and Praia Grande. In recent years he moved to the shores of Lake Sombrio, several leagues from Praia Grande, and is now asking the Church to follow him there.

Some time ago, I had the good fortune of being able to accompany Bishop Thomas and Archdeacon Cabral, when the Bishop made a visitation to the Northeast Mission.

We first visited the village of Sao Francisco where a Communion service was held in our little chapel, which was well attended by one hundred people.

Heavy rains prevented our departure from Sao Francisco for three days. During our enforced stay there, we visited our little parochial school, which is in the charge of a lay-reader. This school, in spite of handicaps, has been running successfully for five years and at present has an enrollment of fifty pupils.

As soon as the weather permitted, we left Sao Francisco on mules furnished us by Church members. After a four-hour ride, we reached Cerrito and went to the fazenda of Sr. Manoel dos Reis, where we were expected for service. This service was held that night and was attended by twenty people. The region around Cerrito is very sparsely settled and most of the congregation, having come from a distance, were forced to spend the night at the fazenda.

Casinhas was our next destination. Accordingly, in the morning we made an early start and arrived in Casinhas at noon. Half-way, we were met by a party of horsemen, who had ridden to greet us and to escort us to the fazenda of Sr. Lopez dos Reis, where we were to be entertained. Arriving we were met by a crowd of fifty people who had come to the fazenda for service. At 3 P. M., the Bishop and the Archdeacon held a Communion service in the house of Sr. Lopez.

The next morning, escorted by two gauchos, we set out for the village of Lageado, a day's journey distant. Before leaving Casinhas we stopped to inspect a little chapel which was built secretly as a surprise for the Bishop. The Casinhas people had hoped to have it ready for service but were unable to do so. Soon after we left the chapel a torrential rain set in. For four hours we rode on in the downpour and in spite of our coverings we were drenched. Finally we caught sight of a lonely fazenda and decided to seek its shelter at once. On the Serra every fazenda is open to the wayfarer. No invitations of shelter are given and none are asked. Every traveler in need can go to the nearest fazenda and be assured of a warm welcome. Accordingly, without asking permission, we rode up to the fazenda and put our animals into the stables. The owner immediately received us most cordially and, taking us into the house, saw that our wants were cared for. Though we were strangers, the best rooms of the house were placed at our disposal and were allowed to lack nothing that the fazenda could supply. A good example of gaucho hospitality!

The next day we rode on and at noon arrived at the house of Sr. Paulino da Luz, one of the many sons-in-law of Sr. Baptista dos Santos. Here we stopped to rest awhile and later went on to Lageado accompanied by the household and some of the members of Sr. Paulino. Every member of the party was on horseback and our cavalcade made an impressive sight as it wound its way among the hills to Lageado. In two hours we reached Lageado and put up at one of the hotels there. After supper, the Bishop and Mr. Cabral conducted a service in the hotel which attracted a crowd of more than two hundred people.

In the morning a Communion service was held in the house of a daughter of Sr. Baptista, after which we rode back to the home of Sr. Paulino at Cedro. That night a service was held at the house. During the service five people were confirmed and five baptized.

The Bishop's next engagement was at Praia Grande, one hundred miles distant. Three days were required to make the trip. At the end of the first day, we camped beside a small stream. Near us were encamped two young gauchos who were conducting a train of pack-mules, loaded with merchandise, from Praia Grande to Lageado. It developed that the man in charge of the train had expected to be confirmed at Praia Grande, but was forced to leave on business before the Bishop's arrival. He requested to be confirmed there beside the road. Praia Grande is far from Porto Alegre and difficult to reach. Due to the uncertainty of his future visits to a point so remote, the Bishop decided to grant the request of the young man.

Early the next morning, just after sunrise as the sun mounted higher, I was struck by the beauty of the stream and the hills around us and it seemed that the place was ideal for such a service. Somehow, we all felt God very close to us that morning.

Soon after the service, we bade the young man goodbye and resumed our journey. That night we camped beside the river Camizas. Hearing of our arrival, a local doctor paid us a visit and invited us to stop at the house of his daughter for service on our return. So insistent was he that the Bishop agreed to do so.

The next day, we made the dangerous descent of the Serra without mishap and reached Praia Grande after nightfall. The following afternoon, as we have no chapel in Praia Grande, service was held in the house of our lay-reader. In spite of bad weather the services attracted a large and interested congregation. The Bishop confirmed a class of six people. The class was an interesting one in that it consisted of two married couples and a daughter of each couple.

In the morning the tedious return journey was begun. By riding hard all day we managed to reach before dark the house of the doctor's daughter, where we had promised to stop. As we rode up to the house, we were greeted by the singing of a hymn and entering found a crowd of forty-five people who had been awaiting us for hours. After supper the Bishop held service alone as Mr. Cabral was indisposed. Several children were baptized and one couple was married. It was the first time that the Episcopal service had been held in this locality and our visit, meeting with such an enthusiastic response, opened up the possibility of establishing a new preaching point there.

The next day, we continued our journey to Sao Francisco and, after a ride of ten hours, reached the village thoroughly worn out. Thus our visit to the Serra came to an end. Its apparent results may be summarized as follows: Twelve services were held; six hundred people heard the Gospel; ninety received Communion; there were twenty-four baptisms and thirteen confirmations.

It is useless to say that trip made a great impression on me, as I am still new to the field. Everywhere we were heartily welcomed and found the people of the Serra eager for the Gospel and the ministrations of the Church. I could easily see that our opportunities in the Northeast Mission was unlimited and I confidently believe that had we the men and the money we could sweep the field. The work is in a flourishing condition and the credit is largely due to the consecrated efforts of the Venerable A. V. Cabral, who has had charge of the work for many years.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

SIGNIFICANCE CAN HARDLY BE OVER-ESTIMATED.

Mr. Editor:

I do not think the laity, as a whole, begin to realize the situation regarding the proposal to drop the Thirty-nine Articles of Religion from our Prayer Book.

This is another move by the Anglo-Catholic party in the Church, whose significance can hardly be over-estimated.

I have watched the Catholic workings for years and especially since 1914 (in the attempt to change the name of our Church to "The American Catholic") and the following year, 1915 (The Panama Conference Controversy) and after seeing what I did at our General Convention at New Orleans in 1925, am fully convinced they are infringing more and more on the rights and privileges of Evangelicals and Protestants in the Church.

There is and has been for years, a decided tendency to introduce more and more of the Roman Catholic ideas into the Church, and we wonder what will be the end.

Believing the overwhelming majority feel as I do, and that we have been silent long enough, I am sending this calling your special attention to this danger (for I feel that we are already on the very edge of the precipice) that you may mention this to those interested.

These Articles of Religion are the one outstanding bulwark that we have against the medieval and Romanish tendencies in the Church, as indicated by repeated items in our Church papers, such as The Southern Churchman and The New York Churchman.

Perhaps we Laymen do not read our Church papers closely enough to realize how things have drifted in recent years, and right here, beg to suggest reading them more in this crisis and threatened upheaval and especially just now and prior and during our next triennial Convention in Washington this coming October.

The Anglo-Catholic Party is waging a very bitter fight, their intent being apparently to change our services as near as possible to the Roman ritual.

The present service is most beautiful. Is loved and revered by many (if not all) of our devoted Churchmen and Churchwomen and to make some of the proposed changes would, I am sure, create serious dissenson, cause heavy loss in membership, drive away many prospective members, and I really think disrupt the Church.

There is a great deal more I could say and some things I could talk better than I could write.

Silence and Patience have long ceased to be virtues, and I am at last writing this after all sober reflection, much reluctance and deliberation.

Hoping and praying that this break may be averted, I am, with all good wishes.

APPRECIATION.

Mr. Editor:

Pages, five, six and seven of last Southern Churchman (April 14) please me so much that I write this to tell you so. God bless the Southern Churchman! It takes me back some fifty or more years in old Virginia. "Macte virtute esto." H.

Book Reviews

THE PERMANENT VALUE OF THE TEN COMMANDMENTS: By H. J. Flowers, B. A., B. D. Morehouse Publishing Company, Milwaukee. Cloth. Pp. 283. Price, $3.00.

This book sprang out of sermons, addresses and lectures delivered to ordinary congregations of Christian people. With the removal of the purely preaching matter and the expansion somewhat along the historical and critical side, the matter and method have not been otherwise changed.

The Decalogue has been put in its historical context and the social significance of the institutions defended by it, such as the Sabbath, property, the family, and so on, has been shown. The matter gathered from many sources is put in a form that will be useful to preachers as well as to laity interested in the growth and meaning of Old Testament religion and morals.

THE LIFE ABUNDANT; A MANUAL OF LIVING: By the Rev. Robert B. H. Bell, M. A. Cloth. Pp. 186. Published by the Morehouse Publishing Company, Milwaukee, Wis. Price, $1.75.

Dr. Bell's healing missions throughout the land will prepare a welcome for this book, which may be said to be a well-fitted accompanient to his spoken messages.

Unquestionably, the call for an ebullent faith, springing from the imparted joy of the Lord; the testimony of praise through the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, are imperatively sounding out the challenge to a deeper walk with God. We may have our different methods of approach to this end. Dr. Bell has his. We may question some of his theological positions; but the earnestness of his appeal outweighs any differences.

His "Manual of Living" section is admirably presented. We opine that no such attempt has yet been made by a teacher of spiritual healing. In former days, faith for bodily needs was thought to exclude all dietetic regulations and hygienic precautions. If the ancients regarded the human frame as a vile encumbrance, none too soon to be consigned to the grave, modern believers in divine life for the body, rightly esteeming it the temple of the Holy Spirit, saw no place for the wholesome consideration of the physical economy in relation to the laws by which it is governed. There is every reason why we should know about our glands, our nerves, our organs, our digestive processes and eliminations. And the author has presented a most valuable contribution in the list of the precious salts of which we are composed, auxiliary to blood, muscles, cells and bones. By this means he shows us what foods are best calculated to supply these organic elements. Few of us know that magnesium is a part of us. Here we find that the citrus fruits, tomatoes, sundry grains and figs are serviceable. This is illustrative of the others.

Then we are helped by his contention that the mind is a factor in health or disease. The very fluids of the body are changed in color and composition by its action. Even a criminal, inwardly tortured by a sense of his guilt will betray himself by the odor of his perspiration. So, worry, fear, grudges, sensitiveness, putrifying grievances, hatreds and undying animosities turn the sweet juices of our lives into the gall of bitterness and the decay of living organisms.

When the author declares that "the secret of His (Jesus) success was His imaginative mind" we fear he loses the very point of what might be his strongest appeal. For St. Peter tells us that our Lord's healing work was through the anointing of the Holy Spirit and of power, divinely conferred (Acts 10:38). And so far as our present privileges and potentialities are concerned, unless we are knit indissolubly into the Body of Christ by the same spiritual conferment as qualified Him, so that His life, that of the risen and glorified Head, flows through us, we may have some kind of healing, but it is not His own. The tendency of modern healing movements is to mix psychological processes with those distinctly and Scripturally spiritual. They are not capable of assimilation. The Apostle makes this clear in the second chapter of First Corinthians. And the believers who know the fellowship of the Spirit will be keen to discern this distinction. Coue, the little chemist of Nancy, France, whose healing achievements were the admiration of the world, repudiated any relation of his work to divine sources. He did allow, "You may say, 'By the grace of God', but I see Turks and Hindoos healed by my system, as well as Christians". So we may affirm that the Cosmic Life, the Universal Life, the Life of the Oversoul, or any other cult may be effective; but it is not the "abundant life" our Lord is pledged to impart. What gives unction to our faith is not that Jesus once did live on earth; but that He now lives in His sovereign relation to His own, able to bestow life through the illimitable power wrought by God in His resurrection. See Eph. 1:18-2:10.

THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS AND GRACE ABOUNDING: By John Bunyan. Special Tercentenary Edition. American Tract Society, New York. Cloth. Twenty-three full-page illustrations. Pp. 651. Price $2.00 postpaid.

This very attractive edition contains The Pilgrim's Progress, first and second parts, and Grace Abounding. The "Christian" of Pilgrim's Progress is Bunyan of Grace Abounding. The one is necessary for the complete understanding of the other. The Pilgrim's Progress, next to the Bible, is said to be the most widely read and circulated book in the world. Bunyan ranks with Milton and Shakespeare as a master of English diction. He is unsurpassed in delineating with skill and sympathy the life and experiences of the common people. He is unique in interpreting the struggles of the human soul to realize through defeats and victories the higher life. He touches the universal note of human experience, and attunes the soul to the infinite.

DIOCESAN COUNCILS AND CONVENTIONS

HARRISBURG.

Religious Education and Christian Social Service were the dominant themes at the twenty-fourth annual convention of the Diocese of Harrisburg, held in St. Stephen's Church, Harrisburg, on May 8-9.

Before the convention was opened a Laymen's Conference on Social Service was held under the leadership of Mr. Clinton Rogers Woodruff, of Philadelphia. He urged the endorsement of the $50,000,000 Welfare Bond issue, which is now receiving the consideration of the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

The convention opened with shortened Evensong. The annual Churchmen's dinner was held in the Pythian Castle, the Rev. Oscar F. R. Treder, D. D., acting as toastmaster.

The Rev. B. Talbot Rogers, D. D., of Sunbury, Pa., advocated the establishment of Church Industrial Schools in every Province of the Church in America.

The closing address was made by Bishop Darlington.

The elections resulted as follows:

Secretary—Rev. A. M. Judd.

Treasurer—Richard M. H. Wharton.

Chancellor—General Charles M. Clement.

Registrar—Rev. A. A. Hughes.

Standing Committee—The Ven. Paul S. Atkins, Rev. Alexander McMillan, Rev. Clifford G. Twombly, Rev. Oscar F. R. Treder, D. D., Rev. Lewis Nichols, Thomas J. Brown, Thomas H. Hammond, Abram Bosler, John Lloyd, Jr., and F. K. Lukenbach.

Deputies to the General Convention—Rev. A. M. Judd, Ven. Paul S. Atkins, Ven. Charles E. McCoy, Rev. Lewis Nichols, General Charles M. Clement, Sunbury; Herbert W. Hartman, Lancaster; Richard M. H. Wharton, Harrisburg; Thomas H. Hammond, Williamsport.

Alternate Deputies to the General Convention—Rev. B. Talbot Rogers, D. D., Sunbury; Rev. W. E. Kunkel, Jersey Shore; Rev. Herbert Cannop, Selinsgrove; Rev. Charles E. Berghaus, Marietta; A. Thomas Page, Williamsport; John Langdon, Huntingdon; E. P. Brinton, Lancaster; James H. Spotts, Lancaster.

The Rev. Frederick P. Houghton, of Lancaster, and the Rev. Oscar F. R. Treder, D. D., of Harrisburg, were elected to vacancies in the Executive Council.

The Rev. Harwick A. Lollis, of Huntingdon, was elected to a vacancy on the Board of Examining Chaplains.

The next convention will be held in Trinity Church, Williamsport, the Ven. Charles E. McCoy, rector.

SPRINGFIELD (ILL.)

The fifty-first annual Synod of the Diocese of Springfield met at St. Paul's Church, East St. Louis, May 9-10.

More than three hundred people were in attendance at the opening of the Synod, when the Bishop was the celebrant. Never before had a Bishop of the Diocese been able in his annual address to render such an inspiring account of gains, spirituality and otherwise as was the privilege of Bishop White for the past year.

Mr. Franklin H. Spencer, of Christ Church, Springfield, was elected Secretary of the Diocese, and the Rev. H. F. Selcer, rector of St. George's Church, Belleville, was appointed by Mr. Spencer as Assistant Secretary. Mr. S. Raymond Tingley, of St. Paul's Church, Alton, was elected Treasurer. All members of the Standing Committee were re-elected, and these are the Rev. J. G. Wright, of Grace Church, Greenville; the Ven. Edward Haughton, rector of St. Paul's Church, Springfield; the Rev. Jerry Wallace, rector of Christ Church, Springfield; the Rev. Robert H. Atchison, rector of St. Paul's Church, Alton; and Messrs. H. M. Andre, of Trinity Church, Jacksonville; F. N. Morgan, St. Paul's Church, Springfield; D. G. Swannell, Emmanuel Memorial Church, Champaign; and P. E. Hatch, of Christ Church, Springfield.

Elected deputies to the General Convention are: the Rev. Edward Haughton, the Rev. Jerry Wallace, the Rev. Robt. H. Atchison, the Rev. Raymond M. Gunn and Messrs. H. M. Andre, F. N. Morgan, D. G. Swannell and J. W. Schultz (of Mt. Carmel).

The Bishop announced the appointments on the Bishop and Council of the Diocese as follows: Executive Secretary, Mr. Franklin H. Spencer; Chairman of the Department of Missions, the Ven. Edward Haughton; Chairman of the Department of Religious Education, the Rev. Robert Y. Barber; Chairman of the Department of Christian Social Service, the Rev. Jerry Wallace; Chairman of the Department of Publicity, the Executive Secretary; Chairman of the Finance Department, Mr. Pascal E. Hatch; Chairman of the Field Department, the Rev. Robert H. Atchison.

The Trustees of the Diocese are: Mr. W. S. Troxell, Mr. D. G. Swannell, Dr. I. W. Metz, Mr. Pascal E. Hatch and Mr. J. H. Holbrook.

The Bishop and Synod recommended a change in the name of the Orphanage of the Holy Child to that of the Home of the Holy Child and referred the matter to the Board of Trustees.

NORTHERN INDIANA.

The thirtieth annual council of the Diocese of Northern Indiana was convened in St. Paul's Pro-Cathedral, Mishawaka, on Wednesday, May 9.

At 7 A. M. there was a Requiem for Bishop White, the celebrant being Dean Rogers, who was assisted by the Rev. Cleon E. Bigler, of Kokomo.

At 10 A. M. the procession entered the Pro-Cathedral. The Conciliar Eucharist was sung, with full ceremonial, the Bishop of the Diocese being the celebrant; the Rev. Forest B. B. Johnston, Deacon; the Rev. Wm. E. Hoffenbacher, Sub-Deacon; the Very Rev. L. C. Rogers, Chaplain; the Rev. A. L. Schrock, Master of Ceremonies; the Rev. E. E. Smith, of Trinity (Hungarian) Church, South Bend, Thurifer; the Ven. H. R. White, of South Bend and the Rev. J. Raymond Lemert, of Indiana Harbor, Chaplains to the Presiding Bishop.

The Bishop of the Diocese first greeted the Presiding Bishop and welcomed both Bishop and Mrs. Murray to the Diocese, and then read his annual address, which was later referred to committees for consideration. Sections from his address are of general interest, particularly his "Program of Advance Work" and "General Convention".

Transaction of business as provided by Rules of Order followed.

Elections resulted as follows:

Standing Committee—The Very Rev. Lewis C. Rogers, the Rev. W. J. Cordick, the Rev. W. J. Lockton, the Rev. C. H. Young, S. T. D., the Rev. Edward L. Roland.

Deputies to General Convention—Clerical (Deputies): The Very Rev. L. C. Rogers, the Rev. A. L. Schrock, the Rev. C. H. Young, S. T. D, the Rev. J. E. Foster. Lay (Deputies): H. P. Conkey, M. V. Starr, W. G. Elliott, H. J. McSheehy. Clerical (Alternates): the Rev. W. J. Lockton, the Rev. Peter Langendorff, the Rev. W. J. Cordick, the Rev. C. E. Bigler. Lay (Alternates): R. C. Schermerhorn, C. H. Reding, John Sweeney, Harry Hall.

Bishop and Council (for a term of three years)—Clerical: the Rev. E. L. Roland, the Rev. A. L. Schrock, the Rev. C. H. Young, S. T. D. Lay: G. R. Sawyer, H. P. Conkey, J. A. Johnson.

The Presiding Bishop addressed the Diocesan Council in the afternoon.

On the preceding day (Tuesday) at the meeting of the women of the diocese, election for delegates to the Triennial resulted as follows:

Mrs. George F. Hitchcock, Plymouth, Diocesan Auxiliary President; Mrs. Jennie Meade, East Chicago; Miss Alice Goldthwaite, Marion; Mrs. W. J. Cordick, Plymouth: Alternates: Mrs. W. J. Lockton, Elkhart; Miss Nellie Mullinex, South Bend; Mrs. D. J. Campbell, Mishawaka; Mrs. Robert Happ, South Bend; Mrs. C. E. Bigler, Kokomo.

DELAWARE.

"When the Revision of the Prayer Book was inaugurated the resolution creating the Commission stated that there was to be no revision which involved change of doctrine. I cannot see that the dropping of these Articles does involve a change of doctrine. But that is not for me or others who would drop them to determine."

"If those who desire them to be retained think this involves a change of doctrinal position of this Church I personally will vote for their retention, and I predict that the General Convention will do the same, because that has been the experience in matters of this kind in the past. The General Convention is very careful of people's conscientious scruples"—such was the general sentiment running through that portion of Bishop Cook's annual address which dealt with the question of the Thirty-nine Articles. The address was delivered at a joint session of the convention and the annual meeting of the Diocesan Woman's Auxiliary.

The convention met in St. Andrew's Church, Wilmington, May 8-9.

The work of the Department of Religious Education is increasing so that the Bishop said it would be necessary to employ a Religious Educational Secretary for the Diocese.

At the service for the Presentation of the Lenten Offerings the banner was again awarded to the school of Immanuel Church, Wilmington. This school had raised over eight dollars per capita during the year.

A very large Thank Offering was given by the women at their Corporate Communion. One member, Mrs. P. B. Lightner, of Immanuel Church, New Castle, by personally visiting each home in the parish with a little bag into which she let each woman pour the contents of her blue box, has during the year increased the amount of the United Thank Offering of the parish from an average of about twenty-five dollars to well over two hundred dollars.

Elections resulted as follows:

Standing Committee: the Rev. Charles W. Clash, the Rev. Joseph H. Earp, the Rev. Jenjamin F. Thompson, A. Felix du Pont, Victor C. Records.

Secretary—Hon. Charles M. Curtis.

Treasurer—Frederick Bringhurst.

Registrar—George W. Hollett.

Chancellor—Hon. Charles M. Curtis.

Examining Chaplains—the Rev. Charles W. Clash, the Rev. George C. Graham, D. D., the Rev. Rupert B. Mathews, D. D.

Trustee—Hon. Charles M. Curtis.

Constitution and Canons—the Rev. Frederick T. Ashton.

Executive Council (to succeed those whose terms had expired)—the Rev. Frederick M. Kirkus, D. D., the Rev. Richard W. Trapnell, D. D., the Rev. Joseph H. Earp, A. Felix duPont, Walter J. Laird and Walter Hullihen, Ph. D.

Deputies to the General Convention—Clerical: the Rev. Richard W. Trapnell, D. D., Eighth and Shipley Streets, Wilmington, Del.; the Rev. Frederick M. Kirkus, D. D., 1106 Adams St., Wilmington, Del.; the Rev. Alban Richey, D. D., Concord Ave. and Tatnall St., Wilmington, Del.; the Rev. Joseph H. Earp, New Castle, Del. Alternates: the Rev. Benj. F. Thompson, Dover, Del.; the Rev. P. L. Donaghay, Middletown, Del.; the Rev. Charles A. Rant, Claymont, Del.; the Rev. George C. Graham, Fourth and Rodney Sts., Wilmington, Del. Lay Delegates: Hon. Richard S. Rodney, New Castle, Del.; George A. Elliott, Esq., 1 Red Oak, Wilmington, Del.; J. Wiley Trought, Laurel, Del.; Hon. William H. Boyce, Dover, Del.

Lay Alternates: Hon. Edmund S. Hellings, 508 West Nineteenth St., Wilmington, Del.; Macmillan Hoopes, Brindley Road, Wilmington, Del.; J. Thompson Brown, Montchanin, Del.; Harry V. Holloway, Ph. D., Dover, Del.

The next annual convention will be held in St. Luke's Church, Seaford, Del., May 7, 1929.

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA.

Meeting at Kanuga Lake, near Hendersonville, N. C., the Diocese of Western North Carolina, assembled May 9-10, the Woman's Auxiliary in session at the same time and place, under novel and, for the future of the Church's life, somewhat prophetic conditions. Special visitors were the Rt. Rev. Kirkman G. Finlay, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese of Upper South Carolina; Mr. Robert S. Barrett, of Washington, Associate Field Secretary of the National Council; Canon A. A. Abbott, D. D., of Cleveland; Mrs. L. F. Kent, President of the Woman's Auxiliary of Alaska, and Mrs. John R. Wheeler, President Woman's Auxiliary, Diocese of Tennessee.

At a joint session of the two conventions, Bishop Finlay spoke of the definite progress made towards the Church's ownership of the Kanuga Lake property, that half of the sum requisite had been secured in the Carolinas, and that this summer the four hundred acre property was in the use of the Church with its well-equipped and attractive hotel, four annexes, thirty-nine cottages, and thirty-acre lake. Programs have been announced for young people's camps, summer schools, Woman's Auxiliary conferences, and a clergy conference; that there will be demonstrated this summer at Kanuga Lake the use the Church can make of an assembly ground for Church training and conferences.

The convention endorsed plans for a survey of the institutional and mission property of the diocese, and provided for supervision of mission insurance. The convention gave a vote of loyalty to Bishop Finlay as President of the Kanuga Lake Camps and Conferences in this fine undertaking.

Bishop Horner, in his address, dwelt upon the increasing necessity for self-dependency of the diocese with the continuous dropping of the amount that the National Council afforded for the advance of the four notable church boarding schools, and the missionary enterprises in the diocese. These last yet represent more than two-thirds of the churches of the diocese, with only ten parishes out of seventy churches self-supporting. The Bishop closed his address with an appeal for the value of the Lausanne Conference, calling attention to the recent message of the Bishop of California, and referred to the Lausanne Conference on Church Unity as "the most significant event in the Christian world of the past year".

Mr. Robert S. Barrett urged the work of the whole Church from the standpoint of a layman of long life abroad and subsequent chosen travel contact with the Church's Mission. The responsibility of the Church, he said, is not to be weighed in Council whether diocesan or national. "The pay-as-you-go plan has its dangers; it is a reversal of our Lord's plan: Go in the power of a sustained faith."

Elections:

Executive Council: the Rev. A. W. Farnum, the Rev. S. R. Guignard, the Rev L. A .Jahn, Mr. Harry M. Roberts, Dr. Philip Moale.

Deputies to the General Convention—Clerical: the Rev. J. W. C. Johnson, the Rev. G. Floyd Rogers, the Rev. Sanders R. Guignard, the Rev. S. B. Stroup. Lay: Wm. L. Balthis, Haywood Parker, H. V. Smedberg, John H. Pearson.

Alternate Deputies—Clerical: the Rev. J. Preston Burke, Albert New, L. A. John, R. R. Harris. Lay: Sheldon Leavitt, C. R. Thomas, S. E. Elmore, Michael Schenck.

Standing Committee—Clerical: the Rev. G. F. Rogers, J. W. C. Johnson, S. B. Stroup, C. P. Burnett. Lay: Haywood Parker, W. L. Balthis, Kingsland VanWinkle, John M. Shoolbred.

Delegates to the Triennial of the Woman's Auxiliary are: Mrs. F. W. Thomas, President; Mrs. R. E. Simpson, U. T. O. Custodian; Miss Martha Justice, Mrs. J. W. C. Johnson, Miss Clara Holmes.

COLORED COUNCIL OF DIOCESE OF GEORGIA.

Three outstanding advances marked the twenty-third annual meeting of the Colored Council of the Diocese of Georgia, which met in St. Augustine's Church, Savannah, May 8, 9 and 10. First was the awarding of a scholarship to a Savannah girl for training in Christian social service at the Bishop Tuttle Training School, Raleigh, N. C.; second was the recognition of the splendid work of the Laymen's League, which made donations of $75 to the building fund of a rural chapel at Pennick, Glynn Co.; $25 for the children's work at St. Luke's Mission, Hawkinsville, and $29 for advance work at Blackshear; and third, the completion of the new St. Mary's Church, Augusta, where the Rev. E. F. Barrow has recently become vicar. The Rev. W. B. Crittenden, D. D., Secretary of the Field Department of the National Council, was the visiting speaker, and besides the Bishop of the Diocese, President of the Council, made his annual address, others who addressed the Council and the members of the Woman's Auxiliary were: the Rev. David Cady Wright, D. D., rector of Christ Church, Savannah; Mr. George W. Urquhart, Chairman of the Lay Readers' Association, Chatham Co.; Mrs. J. W. Griffeth, Executive Secretary of the Diocesan Department of Religious Education, and Miss Edith D. Johnston, Diocesan Director of the Publicity Department. The following members of the Council also made addresses: the Rev. J. Clyde Perry, rector of St. Athanasius' Church, Brunswick; J. S. Peterson, President of the Laymen's League; Miss Cornelia McDowell, Director of the Council's Christian Social Service Committee, and Miss O. H. Lee, Publicity Agent of the Council.

The Rev. J. Henry Brown, Vice-President of the Council, when making his annual report, gave a resume of his ten years' service as Archdeacon of the Colored Work of the Diocese. He stated that in that time the Negro Communicants had raised for self-support the sum of $100,000, and that $9,500 had been given to the Church's Program. Three chapels have been built and six men have been ordained to the ministry. In ten years' time the Woman's Auxiliary has given to mission work $2,000. Gifts made by the Woman's Auxiliary at this year's meeting were $25 for the building fund for the Pennick chapel, $25 towards the children's chapel at Hawkinsville, and $10 for a young student in the Bishop Payne Divinity School. The work among the Negroes in the Diocese of Georgia is one of the best organized in the South, and the Colored Council which legislates on its own business affairs, has a forward-looking program closely allied to the programs of the Diocese and the General Church.

LONG ISLAND.

The Convention of the Diocese of Long Island held, at the Cathedral of the Incarnation, Garden City, May 22 and 23, was declared by Bishop Stires at the time of adjournment to have approximated an ideal diocesan convention.

At the celebration of Holy Communion, with which the convention opened, the Bishop was celebrant and preacher.

The convention confirmed a change in the Constitution, passed a year ago, by which each mission congregation in the diocese was given representation by one lay delegate in the convention. Many of the missions, anticipating this action, had chosen and sent a lay representative, and these were seated as soon as their credentials were approved. Senator Wm. J. Tully announced that his voluntary pledge of $100,000 toward the National Council's deficit, made at New Orleans in 1925 as a thank offering for Dr. Stires' acceptance of our bishopric, had been completely made good. In his annual address the Bishop dwelt with especial appreciation upon the successful campaign of last October when more than a million dollars was raised for the new St. John's Hospital. He presented the unique and tremendous missionary opportunity and responsibility manifested in the unparalled increase of population in the diocese, especially in the counties of Queens and Nassau. He declared that the time would soon come, surely not later than the next convention, perhaps even sooner, when a suffragan bishop must be chosen for the diocese; and a second suffragan would probably be necessary a year or two later. In this connection the Bishop disclosed his hope that an endowment of a million dollars could soon be provided, one-half the income for the support of the Episcopate, the other half for use in meeting the great problem of building and supporting new churches in the rapidly developing sections of the diocese.

After completing his address and resuming the chair, Bishop Stires announced that since his address had been prepared he had come to the conclusion that the election of a suffragan bishop need no longer be delayed; if the convention was sympathetic to the request, he was prepared to put it forward. The Rev. Dr. J. Clarence Jones immediately moved that the convention proceed at once to the election of a suffragan. When this motion had been passed, Mr. Mortimer W. Byers, lay delegate from the Church of the Messiah, Brooklyn, inquired whether the Bishop would not be willing to nominate a man who would be acceptable to him for the new office. This was at once recognized as a startling proposal. The Bishop, with the breathless attention of the convention, replied that he would by no means infringe upon the convention's right to nominate, or upon the right of every member to vote for whom he would; yet if the Convention desired him to do so he would have the courage to make a nomination. Thereupon the convention by an almost unanimous vote requested the Bishop to nominate a candidate; and the Bishop in a very few words named the Rev. George P. Atwater, D. D., rector of Grace Church, Brooklyn Heights. It was promptly voted to close the nominations, and it was with difficulty that a few conservative members prevented the convention from electing by acclamation. After solemn prayers had been offered by the Bishop, the ballot was taken, and it was announced that Dr. Atwater had received all except four of the votes cast. Dr. Atwater was deeply affected by this sudden and overwhelming honor, but pleaded that he must have time to consider the matter in all its aspects before making his answer. Was ever a bishop in the Anglican Church chosen with such promptness and unanimity?

The routine business of the convention brought out a good deal of discussion. Various amendments to the canons were adopted, the most important of which made the members of the Diocesan Council subject to election by the convention instead of appointment by the Bishop. A new form of constitution, presented a year ago, not intended to contain any new provisions, was nevertheless questioned as to certain phraseology and referred for further study. The budget presented by the Finance Committee was adopted after considerable discussion. Committees were appointed to make provision for the meeting of the Provincial Synod in Garden City in January next.

The Rev. Duncan M. Genns, rector of St. Thomas', Brooklyn, presented a petition to General Convention against the confirmation of the vote of 1925 to omit the Thirty-nine Articles from the Prayer Book. A motion to table this resolution was promptly offered, but lost sixty-one to ninety-one. The Rev. Dr. Jones made a forceful speech against the petition, but when the vote was taken the resolution was carried eighty-six to seventy-eight.

The election of Deputies to General Convention resulted in the choice of the Rev. J. Clarence Jones, S. T. D., the Rev. Robert Rogers, Ph. D., the Ven. Roy F. Duffield, B. D. and the Rev. Charles A. Brown; and of Messrs. Wm. J. Tully, Raymond F. Barnes, Wm. M. Baldwin and Frank Gulden. The Rev. Dr. Jones and the Hon. Townsend Scudder were reelected to the Standing Committee, and the deputies to the Provincial Synod were also reelected. On the Diocesan Council the Rev. Wm. Grainger was substituted for the Rev. Sanuael C. Fish.

BETHLEHEM.

The fifty-seventh annual convention of the diocese met in the Church of the Good Shepherd, Scranton, on Tuesday evening, May 22, 1928. Mr. Harold D. Deemer, a prominent business man of Wilkes-Barre and a vestryman of St. Stephen's Church, was elected Secretary. The Rev. Dr. Walter Archbold was made Assistant Secretary. The rest of the officers were reelected. The Rev. George McKinley was elected to the Bishop and Executive Council to fill an unexpired term.

Election of Deputies to the General Convention:

Clerical—The Rev. Robert P. Kreitler, St. Luke's Church, Scranton; Dean Howard W. Diller, Trinity Church, Pottsville; the Rev. Frederick A. MacMillen, Christ Church, Reading; Dean E. G. N. Holmes, Trinity Church, Carbondale.

Lay—Mr. R. P. Hutchinson, Rodney A. Mercur, Esq., L. B. Jones, Chancellor, Major W. R. Coyle.

Alternates, Clerical—Dean D. Wilmot Gateson of the Pro-Cathedral; the Rev. Dr. F. L. Flinchbaugh, St. Stephen's, Wilkes-barre; Archdeacon Harvey P. Walter; the Rev. Dr. Thomas E. Winecoff, Good Shepherd, Scranton.

Alternates, Lay—Mr. Wingfield Martin, Col. C. J. Smith, Mr. A. N. Cleaver, Mr. Leonard Peckitt.

The Archdeacon was elected by the convention to attend the sessions of the General Convention to study and learn at first hand what the missionary program of the General Church shall be for the next triennium, so that as Chairman of the Field Department of the Diocese he may be able more accurately to present it to the people of the diocse.

The Committee on the Church Pension Fund reported that all pension assessments for the clergy of the diocese were paid up to January 1, 1928. This happy report was made possible by the Bishop and Executive paying up a number of back assessments, so that the grants of the Pension Fund might not be prejudiced in the case of the death of any clergyman.

Because this was necessary a resolution was presented, requesting the Bishop not to receive a clergyman from any other diocese until he can present a certificate that all his pension assessments in the past years have been paid.

The Social Service Department presented a resolution petitioning the members of the convention to work and vote for the fifty million bond issue to provide more adequate room for the State's indigent and insane people. Every one of the institutions are dreadfully overcrowded. Next November the people will be asked to vote on "Amendment 10". The resolution was unanimously adopted.

The recommendation of the Bishop that the convention take under consideration the founding of a home for old people in the diocese, was favorably received and the Bishop was asked to appoint a committee. The Social Service Department was appointed to look into the matter of place, buildings, maintenance, necessity, endowment, etc., of such a home.

A beautiful tribute appeared in the report of the Finance Committee in regard to the death of Bishop Talbot. This was the first convention for thirty long years in which his genial presecnce was absent.

The author of the tribute, Rodney A. Mercur, Esq., the former Chancellor, was asked to read it to the convention while the members of the same were standing, after which the Bishop read the prayer for All Saints' Day.

A fine pre-convention program was presented. May 21 a largely attended mass meeting was held, at which Mr. Leon C. Palmer, Executive Secretary of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, spoke on the "Imperative Need of the Church "Lay Evangelism". The Rev. Royden K. Yerkes, D. D., of the Philadelphia Divinity School, spoke of "Religion—What is the Norm"? He said the Catechism outlines it, but not in the proper order. It should be The Lord's Prayer or worship.

The Creed or a reason for worship;

The Ten Commandments or Christian Conduct.

On Tuesday morning the different Departments of the Bishop and Executive Council held mass meetings. Miss Jane Milliken, Superintendent of Teacher-Training of the Diocese of Maryland, and Miss Zettan Gordon spoke for the Department of Religious Education. Miss Miliken asked, "What should a cirriculum do for the Child"? Teach him to worship God, a reasonable faith and right relations to his fellowmen. Miss Gordon spoke of the coming Summer School of the diocese and her book display on religious educational literature. For the Social Service Department, Miss Agnes Penrose, of the Church Mission of Help, Diocese of Albany, spoke of "Case Work in Rural Communities". Mr. George R. Bedinger, Executive Secretary of the State Organization of Public Charities, told of the tremendous necessity for more buildings and better equipment to care for the State's unfortunate wards. Hence vote for the fifty million bond issue. The Field Department had the Rev. J. Franklin Clark and the Archdeacon of the Diocese speak of the General and Diocesan programs of the Church's work.

Bishop Thomas, representing the Philadelphia Divinity School, was a guest of the convention and made an address on the necessity for better boys, better equipped, better prepared for the Church's ministry. He outlined the new vision of Religious Education for Divinity students and hopes that soon the course can be lengthened to four years in the seminaries.

MINNESOTA.

Following a resolution adopted by the Bishop and Directorate just preceding the seventy-first annual council of the Diocese of Minnesota, held in St. Paul's Church, Winona, May 23 and 24, urgent reference to the matter in Bishop McElwain's annual address and an appeal from Bishop Burleson, of South Dakota, representing the National Council, the Rev. F. D. Butler, rector of the Church of St. John the Evangelist, acting for the Bishop and Directorate, presented a resolution to the Council to pay in full Minnesota's share $12,000 of the National Church deficit of the last Triennium, and to also raise an additional $8,000 to pay off loans which the diocese has been compelled to make the last two years and to create a revolving fund to care for the diocesan missionary pay roll. The resolution was unanimously adopted and at least one-fourth of the total of $20,000 to be raised was pledged from the floor of the Council. This was undoubtedly the outstanding feature of the Council.

Deputies to the Triennial General Convention were elected as follows: Clerical—the Rev. Dr. Phillips E. Osgood and the Rev. Addison E. Knickerbocker of Minneapolis, the Rev. Frederick D. Butler of St. Paul, and the Rev. Guy C. Menefee of Rochester. Lay—Henry S. Gregg and John C. Wade of Minneapolis, William H. Lightner of St. Paul, and Herbert C. Theopold of Faribault. Clerical Alternates—the Rev. Douglas H. Atwill of St. Paul, the Rev. Frederick D. Tyner and the Rev. Don F. Fenn of Minneapolis, the Rev. Arthur Chard of Hastings. Lay Alternates—John R. Van Derlip and George A. N. King of Minneapolis, C. M. Morse of Winona, and C. A. Rasmussen of Red Wing.

Newly-elected members of the Bishop and Directorate for three years were the Rev. Messrs. P. E. Osgood, F. D. Butler and John Temple, and Messrs. J. D. Bronson, C. B. Lyon and E. H. Davidson.

The entire Standing Committee was reelected. Mr. John C. Wade was elected Diocesan Treasurer for the eighth year, and the Rev. Walter B. Keiter Secretary for the seventh year.

On the invitation of St. Clements' Parish, St. Paul, the seventy-second annual council will be held in that church on the last Wednesday of May, 1929.

A missionary mass meeting was held in St. Paul's Church on the evening of the first day of the Council at which Bishop Burleson of Sioux Falls, S. D., gave a splendid presentation of missionary work in the domestic field, and the Rev. Frederick G. Deis, of New York, gave personal experiences of his work while a missionary in China.

THE PRAYER BOOK REVISION.

Presence is not to be looked for in the consecrated elements we have only to recall our Lord's Own Words, as recorded by both St. Luke and St. Paul, when He gave the Cup:

"This Cup is the New Covenant in My Blood," which can only mean:

The New Covenant.

This Cup represents the New Covenant, which is sealed in My Blood. No reasonable student can possibly believe that the Cup is transubstantiated into the Covenant. St. Luke and St. Paul thus clear up the meaning of the shorter sentence used by St. Matthew and St. Mark: "This is My Blood."

We must interpret the shorter sentence by the longer and not the longer sentence by the shorter. Nor should we overlook the startling words of our Blessed Lord as recorded in St. John 5:57 (R. V.): "As the living Father sent me, and I live because of the Father; so he that eateth Me, he also shall live because of Me." Here we are clearly taught that our Saviour would have us feed on Him, as He fed on His Father, which could only be in a heavenly and spiritual manner. This is further illustrated by the familiar words of the prophet Jeremiah: "Thy words were found, and I did eat them; and Thy words were unto me as the joy and the rejoicing of my heart."

The Real Presence, therefore, in the heart of the feeding believer is a constant and abiding reality, as truly with the enlightened Christian in his home and in his business life, as in the Church or at the Lord's Table. Christ is with us at the Holy Communion as the living Master of the Feast, not as a lifeless sacrifice upon an altar. The Church of England, in complete harmony with the Scriptures, knows no altar except the Cross.

The Holy Spirit's Presence.

All this is summed up for us in Christ's great promise: "I will pray the Father and He shall give you another Comforter that He may be with you forever, even the Spirit of truth, whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth Him not, neither knoweth Him, but ye know Him, for He dwelleth with you, and shall be in you." The Holy Spirit is Christ's only Vicegerent upon earth. He has come, not to take the place of an absent Christ, but to bring the Presence of the living and glorified Redeemer into the heart of every believer.

The Holy Spirit is Himself, in perfection, the Real Presence of our ascended and reigning Lord. "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ," says St. Paul, "he is none of His." And the great Apostle adds: "The Spirit Himself beareth witness with our spirit that we are children of God; and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ, if so be that we suffer with Him, that we may be also glorified together."

The Holy Spirit is also the believer's viaticum. He is dependent upon no other; for the Spirit goes with Him through life and through death, all the way Home. He sheds abroad in our hearts God's love in Christ, which casts out all our fears. How eminently practical this Presence is in our daily life is expressed in the beautiful words of John Keble:

"There are in this loud, stunning tide
Of human care and crime,
With whom the melodies abide
Of the everlasting chime:
Who carry music in their heart
Through dusky lane, or wrangling mart,
Plying their daily task with busier feet
Because their secret souls a holy strain repeat."

Bishop Guerry Dies.

The Rt. Rev. William A. Guerry, D. D., Bishop of South Carolina, died the night of June 9 at the Roper Hospital in Charleston, as a result of a bullet wound received on June 4. The bullet struck his lung and caused pneumonia infection.

The Rev. J. H. Woodward, who fired the shot and immediately turned the fatal pistol upon himself, was a supply minister at St. Mark's Church in Brunswick, Ga., and a retired minister of the Diocese of South Carolina. He is supposed to have been demented for several years.

Bishop Guerry was born in Clarendon County, S. C., on July 7, 1861. As a youth he studied at the Porter Military Academy. At the University of the South he received both his B. A. and M. A. degrees in 1884. From the same university he received his B. D. degree in 1888 and his D. D. degree in 1907. He was ordained deacon in 1888, and priest in 1889 by Bishop Howe. On September 15, 1907, he was consecrated Bishop by Bishops Tuttle, Weed, Gailor, Cheshire, Horner, Bratton and Strange. After serving one year as bishop coadjutor of the Diocese of South Carolina, he became its Bishop in 1908. In 1889 he married Miss Anne McBee. He served as rector of parishies in the cities of Florence, Marion and Darlington, South Carolina. From 1893 until his consecration as Bishop, he served at the University of the South as Chaplain and Professor. From 1917 to 1926, he served as President of the Provincial Board of Social Service of the Fourth Province. Bishop Guerry was much interested in the work among the Negroes and, in 1918, obtained an assistant in his diocese for this work, in spite of opposition, in which Mr. Woodward, who was in the end to cause his death, was very active.

The present move for the unity of all denominations of Christ's Church was a subject close to Bishop Guerry's heart, and in this interest he inaugurated his League for Church Unity, which he stressed should promote peace and visible unity among all Christian people without involving uniformity of religious rites and ceremonies.

The funeral was held in St. Michael's Church, Charleston, Tuesday afternoon, June 12.

After services conducted by the Rev. Albert Thomas, rector, assisted by visiting bishops, Bishop Guerry's body was placed to rest in the churchyard of St. Phillip's nearby.

The clergy of the diocese and the senior wardens of the parishes composed the honorary escort at the funeral. Thec lerical members of the standing committee of the church and officers of the diocese were the active pall-bearers.

Laity and clergy throughout the State shared with members of the family the deep grief at the death of the leader of the church in the diocese for twenty years. From this state and others an almost countless number of messages of condolence poured in upon the bereaved family.

ATTENTION, CHURCHMEN!

A Message From the Presiding Bishop to the Men of the Church.

My Dear Brethren:

On October 5 to 9, immediately preceding General Convention, there will be held in the City of Washington the Forty-second National Convention of Brotherhood of St. Andrew, to which all Churchmen, irrespective of Brotherhood membership, are invited. This gathering will be in the nature of a National Conference on Evangelism, and the program is being planned in close cooperation with leaders of our National Commission on Evangelism. It is my earnest hope and prayer that many of you will use this opportunity to gain new inspiration and information for the effective discharge of your responsibilities in the spread of Christ's Kingdom on earth.

The principles of definite prayer and personal service for which the Brotherhood stands represent duties that are not peculiar to this organization but are incumbent upon all of us, and the function of the Brotherhood is to provide a method and plan for the practical fulfilment of these universal Christian obligations.

Consecration of life and a mobilization of our forces for the task of evangelism is a present positive need of the Church. This need cannot be met by the efforts of the clergy alone; there must be general cooperative enlistment and active endeavor of the laity. It is therefore my very positive conviction that there is a real work for the Brotherhood to accomplish in the Church at the present time, and I earnestly hope that Brotherhood members, deputies to General Convention, and Churchmen univerally will avail themselves of the spiritual privileges afforded through attendance upon the Brotherhood Convention, and receive such inspiration as will prompt them to faithful, persevering endeavor for God and fellow man.

Faithfully yours,
John G. Murray,
Presiding Bishop.

Reduced Railroad Rates.

Delegates to the Brotherhood Convention purchasing tickets should ask for certificate (not receipt) to General Convention, the Brotherhood not being listed separately, but included in the General Convention. This certificate. when duly validated, entitles the holder to half-fare on the return trip.

Dates of sale have been fixed to allow Brotherhood Convention delegates to reach Washington by October 5.

Attendance Banners.

Two Attendance Banners will be awarded, one to the diocese and one to the Chapter, for the largest number of registered delegates in attendance upon the Convention in proportion to the distance traveled. In computing this award, the number present will be multiplied by the distance traveled, so that Chapters and Dioceses at a distance will stand on an equal footing with those nearby.

The Junior Convention.

Parallel with the sessions of the Convention for men there will be a separate Convention for Junior Brotherhood members and other boys, with an equally a /tractive program. Two Junior Attendance Banners will be awarded, on the same basis as the Seniors. Special announcement of the Junior Convention will be sent on request.

For further information about the Convention address the national office of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, 202 South Nineteenth Street, Philadelphia, or

Brotherhood Convention Committee,
925 Fifteenth St., N. W.,
Washington, D. C.

General Headquarters, Hotel Mayflower, Connecticut Avenue at DeSales Street, is Washington's finest hotel. Senior business sessions and conferences will be held there. All rooms have outside windows and private bath. Prices per day European plan for our Convention:

Hotels Mayflower and Cairo are ten minutes walk apart, with St. Thomas' Church and Parish House in between.

On Arrival Seniors please go direct to Mayflower, Juniors to St. Thomas', to register for the Convention. Mt. Pleasant Street cars go to both. Get off at DeSales Street for the Mayflower, at Que Street for St. Thomas' and Hotel Cairo.

For the greatests uccess of the Convention all guests are asked to live at either the Mayflower or the Cairo rather than at other hotels. Previous Conventions have proved that community life is both helpful and enjoyable.

We cannot guarantee you proper accommodations unless you reserve them well in advance.

Elected Bishop.

A cable from Japan, on June 11, announced that the Rev. Yonetaro Matsui has been elected Bishop of the Diocese of Tokyo to succeed the late Bishop Motoda. The Bishop-elect is rector of St. Paul's Church in the City of Tokyo, one of the churches which was originally established by the Church Missionary Society of England, and formerly a part of the English Diocese of South Tokyo.

Mr. Matsui received his preliminary education in Japan and took post-graduate work in theology at Wycliffe College, Toronto, where he was graduated in 1898. His congregation is one of the self-supporting congregations of the Nippon Sei Ko Kwei.

Half-Million Gain in Church Rolls.

From the Washington Evening Star we print the following encouraging statistics:

There is no stunt in the growth of the Churches in the United States. The Churches persist in showing good gains in membership, according to Dr. John T. Brabner Smith, Chicago, Ill., in charge of secular press publicity of the World Service Commission of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

The figures for the larger Churches and groups of Churches are as follows: Catholic, three bodies. 18,854,691 members, a gain of 183,889 in 1927; Methodists, sixteen bodies, 9,119,575, gain 150,910; Baptists, fourteen bodies, 8,-712,607, gain 41,712; Lutherans, twenty bodies, 2,656,158, gain 67,879; Presbyterians, nine bodies, 2,597,136, gain 13,-580; Protestant Episcopal, 1,190,938, gain 17,269; Disciples of Christ, two bodies, 553,641, gain 6,617; United Brethren, two bodies, 413,818, gain 3,-187. The grand total membership of all denominations is 48,594,163, with a total gain of 573,723.

Membership in Churches, Dr. Smith said, is not dying and, while not a test of Christian religion, it is a complete answer to pessimists, who deny the growth of the churches who believe in Jesus Christ.

"The net growth is not large, but it must be remembered that the churches suffer terribly by the loss of thousands of members by death and removals. In spite of this tremendous loss, which is made up by increase by conversion and reception into membership by confession of faith, the Church grows and increases steadily in members and power," says Dr. Smith.

VIRGINIA

Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, Bishop.

St. Mark's Parish, Culpeper.

Little Fork Church, which celebrated its sesqui-centennial last summer (1777-127), was repaired and opened for worship in 1870, under the rector-ship of the Rev. George W. Peterkin, afterwards Bishop of West Virginia.

Chancel floor, windows and pews were restored; communion table, pulpit, reading desk and railing were given; and services regularly held, the first since the Civil War.

The old church received further repairs in 1915 to foundation, walls and roof and windows; and monthly services were regularly held every summer from June to September, inclusive.

This summer a quaint triangular cornice which had been removed from the reredos at some unknown date, and stored in the loft of the building, was restored to its place; the decalogue, Creed and Lord's Prayer in antique letters of gold leaf, were placed on four tablets in the reredos, in places where these must have been in 1777; and all the wood-work was painted white.

On the evening of June 2 the first wedding held in the old church, far as is known, since 1848, brought together a happy group of friends, filling the building, when Margaret Robinson Lewis, daughter of James R. Lewis, a vestryman of St. Mark's Parish, was married to James Marion Dyer, of Culpeper County.

Rt. Rev. B. D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. C Thomson, D. D., Coadjutor

St. Paul Normal and Industrial School.

The fortieth anniversary exercises of the St. Paul Normal and Industrial School, which began Sunday, May 27, with the preaching of the baccalaureate sermon by the Rev. Anson Phelps-Stokes, D. D., National Cathedral, Washington, D. C., and ended Wednesday evening with the alumni reception, brought together one of the largest and most widely dispersed audiences in the history of the school. Some came from Massachusetts, from Florida, and Detroit, Mich. All of the principal Virginia cities were represented as well as nearby towns.

Sixty young people received the honors of the school—diplomas and certificates. The Normal School had twelve graduates from the senior class, who received Normal professional teachers' certificates. Seven members of the Junior Normal class received Elementary certificates. The High School had twenty-four graduates and the trade school eighteen. Sunday night the religious societies rendered a program. Monday night the literary societies debated the question: Resolved, "That the United States is justified in sending Marines to Nicaragua".

Tuesday was "Virginia Day". The principal speaker was Mr. R. Lee Chambliss, Superintendent of Schools for Brunswick County. Thomas J. Bliss, a former student of 1889-90, was the ex-student speaker. Wednesday morning, Class Day exercises were held. Wednesday, 2 P. M., the commencement exercises. The Rev. G. Warfield Hobbs was the commencement speaker in lieu of the Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray, D. D., Presiding Bishop, who was to have delivered the commenceement address, but was prevented from coming by a conflicting engagement. The Rev. Mr. Hobbs paid a glowing tribute to Archdeacon Russell and the result of forty years' work in the school. Diplomas and certificates were presented by Bishop Tucker. Mr. William Anthony Aery, Director of the Hampton Institute High School, also made some very appropriate and encouraging remarks Miss Ella Hudson was the alumni speaker.

The principal's report disclosed that the year was one of the most successful in the history of the school; that the enrollment approximated eight hundred. Other accomplishments noted were the completion of the school's $200,000 building program, new $40,000 Practice School Building under construction, ground broken May 15 for the Girls' Dormitory; gift of $10,000 for administration building, payment of Julius Rosenwald's conditional pledge of $10,000 and also that of the General Education Board of $33,333.36, besides several smaller donations and legacies.

WESTERN NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. Chas. L. Brent, D. D., Bishop.
Rt Rev. D. L. Ferris, D. D., Coadjutor.

The new St. Matthews' Church, East Aurora, N. Y., the Rev. Henry de Mauriac, rector, was formally opened with a dedication service on Sunday, May 27, with the Rev. Floyd Van Keuren and the rector officiating. A pleasing feature of the dedicatory program carried out during the following week was daily evening service, conducted by ministers of the different churches in the village. A parish supper, followed by an organ recital, was held on Wednesday. The Rev. Mr. de Mauriac and his congregation are to be congratulated on the completion of this beautiful church.

Bishop Ferris recently visited St. Mark's Church, Orchard Park, N. Y., the Rev. Paul B. Hoffman, rector, and confirmed a class of five boys.

Columbia University Gives Degree to Hobart's President: At the one hundred and seventy-fourth commencement of Columbia University, Tuesday, June 5, the Rev. Murray Bartlett, President of Hobart College, was one of seven recipients of honorary degrees. President Butler, in presenting the degree, gave the following citation:

"Murray Bartlett, Theologian and Educational Administrator. Born in New York; graduated at Harvard College with the Class of 1892, and in theology from the General Theological Seminary with the Class of 1896; widely experienced in the work of religion and education, both in these United States and in the Philippine Islands; serving with distinction until wounded on the field of battle in the great war; guiding with large ability and wisdom the administration of Hobart College; I gladly admit you to the degree of Doctor of Sacred Theology."

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

Commencement Exercises.

Mt. St. Alban has been the scene of much activity recently, with the exercises and services in connection with the graduation of classes from the two Church Schools there, the National Cathedral School for Girls and St. Alban's School for Boys. Bishop Freeman delivered the address at the commencement exercises of the boys, held in Bethlehem Chapel, and presented the diplomas. The commencement address for the girls was made by the Rt. Rev. Clinton S. Quin, Bishop Coadjutor of Texas. Bishop Quin's daughter ,a member of the graduating class, was the winner of the flag which, according to custom of the school, is given to the honor graduate.

Exercises, on the occasion of this award, usually held in the beautiful outdoors of Mt. St. Alban, were held in Whitby Hall, on account of rain, but with much of the beauty of the ceremony brought inside. The Rev. Z. B. Phillips, D. D., rector of Epiphany Church, presented the flag to Miss Quin.

Bishop Freeman Endorses Central Union Mission.

The Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., by a letter to its Superintendent, praises the fine work of the Central Union Mission, and gives his endorsement to the effort being made to relieve the mission of the indebtedness now resting on its men's building.

The Central Union Mission is a sort of clearing house for some of the social work of all the Protestant Churches, and appeals to all to assist in quickly removing this debt.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rt. Rev. Thomas J. Garland, D. D., Bishop.

Declined Election.

Bishop Garland has sent out a letter in which he says:

Dear Brethren of the Clergy and Laity: The Rev. Henry Knox Sherrill, having declined his election as Bishop Coadjutor of this Diocese, and the official notice of said declination having been sent to me by the President of the Standing Committee, who was the Chairman of the Committee on Notification;

Therefore, in accordance with the provision of Article III of the Constitution, I have decided to call a Special Convention of the Diocese to meet in the Church of The Holy Trinity on Tuesday, October 2, at 9:30 A. M., for the purpose of electing a Bishop Coadjutor.

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., Coadjutor

Portrait of Dr. Eccleston Presented.

A portrait of the late Rev. Dr. Eccleston, rector of Emmanuel Church for many years, was presented to the church on May 16, and will be hung in the Great Hall. An address by his nephew, the Rev. Samuel M. Shoemaker, Jr., brought back a vivid memory of the personality and charm of the "Parson". Judge Harlan's reception of the portrait in behalf of the parish recalled, among other things, the sense of poignant regret all over the city expressed at the time of Dr. Eccleston's death, showing clearly what he had meant to all sorts and conditions of men who came within the radiance of his presence and the love and humanity in his face. The portrait is a vivid and striking likeness. The artist was Mr. Thomas Corner.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.

Declines Election.

The Rev. George P. Atwater has declined his election to be Suffragan Bishop of this Diocese. In a letter dated June 5, addressed to Bishop Stires and the members of the convention, he expressed his deep sense of the honor done him by his election, and sets forth the obligations that bind him to his parish. "The members of Grace Church," he says, "have fulfilled their part of a mutual undertaking with exceptional devotion, while the fulfillment of my share of that enterprise is still in its initial stages. . . . I am convinced beyond the shadow of a doubt that I cannot honorably relinquish my rectorship of Grace Church. Therefore, not by a choice between possible alternatives, but by an obligation which binds me to my present office, I must decline my election

"DOE YE NEXTE THYNGE."

From an old English parsonage
Down by the sea
There came in the twilight
A message for me;
Its quaint Saxon legend,
Deeply engraven,
Hath, as it seemed to me
Teaching from Heaven;
And on through the hours
The quiet words ring,
Like a low inspiration,
"Doe ye nexte thynge".

Many a questioning,
Many a fear,
Many a doubt
Hath its quieting here;
Moment by moment,
Let down from Heaven,
Time, opportunity
Guidance are given,
Fear not tomorrows,
Child of the King,
Trust them with Jesus,
"Doe ye nexte thynge."

Oh, He would have thee
Daily move free,
Knowing the might
Of thy royal degree.
Ever in waiting,
Glad for His call,
Tranquil in chastening,
Trusting through all.
Comings and goings
No turmoil need bring,
His all the future
"Doe ye nexte thynge".

Do it immediate,
Do it with prayer,
Do it reliantly,
Casting all care;
Do it with reverence,
Tracing His hand,
Who hath placed it before thee
With earnest command;
Stayed on Omnipotence,
Safe 'neath His wing,
Leave all resultings,
"Doe ye nexte thynge".

Looking to Jesus,
Ever serious,
Working or suffering,
Be thy demeanor;
In the shade of His presence,
In the rest of His calm,
In the light of His countenance,
Live out Thy psalm;
Strong in His faithfulness,
Praise Him and sing,
Then as He beckons thee,
"Doe ye nexte thynge".

The Privilege and Joy of the Ministry.

Some time ago I visited a young pastor on his first charge. It was a joy and an inspiration to be with him. He serves one of the poorest circuits in the Conference. His salary is very small and his work heavy. But it was not of these I heard. He was bubbling over with good humor and optimism. He mentioned several times how glad he was that he was in the ministry and he said this year had been the happiest of his life as he preached to his people and visited in their homes.

This young man had no criticism for his church. Not one word came from him that would suggest he felt his charge was not good enough for him. He did not seem to know any other charges paid more salary than he was receiving. His mind was on other things. His heart was full of his call to preach the Gospel and the church had given him a big kingdom all his own. To him his field was not a hard circuit, it was a kingdom. Of course he was doing something. Any young man who enters the ministry that way will do something. He has just received twelve new members into the church on profession of faith. It was his first harvest for his Lord and his eyes shone with joy when he spoke of it. The young folks, old folks and children believe in this young man. It was a pleasure to be with this young preacher. May God raise more like him in our Zion.—Dr. J. M. Rowland, in The Richmond Christian Advocate.

Can Human Nature Be Changed?

One of the greatest of those associated with that most efficient of all organizations for the discovery of criminals, Scotland Yard, said not so many years ago, that, in his judgment, there was little if any hope of reforming a criminal. Probably the most of those whose business it is to apprehend the criminal would say the same. Once a criminal, always a criminal. And indeed there is lacking no little evidence to bear this out. If any of us will think back over our associations we will discover that in the great majority of cases the boy has been the father of the man. If the boy be lazy, the man will be lazy; if untruthful, when small, he is very apt to lie always. If selfish and little of nature in the home, or with his playmates, there is generally not much change in after life. If the girl is vain, the woman will be proud and jealous of others like or more favored. However imperfectly, in his confusion at the startling response of Jesus, Nicodemus sensed the import of his interrogation, what it means is this: Can a person of mature years, who has faced life with selfish abandon, be changed so that his whole desire and performance will be directed to living for others? That is a big question.

In seeking to find an answer we have recourse to a threefold evidence.

There are many of us who know what a change has been wrought in our own lives by the incoming of Christ. We know that things have been marvelously altered. Life can never be the same again. The former things have passed away; behold all things have become new. That change has been both unmistakable and radical. Nor can we possibly go against our own consciousness of an undreamed of transformation. Tennyson is scarcely good psychologist when he says:

"For knowledge is of things we see."

It is impossible to deny experience, both in ourselves and in others. Christianity's great appeal is to conduct; and when we see other lives changed, and realize what transformations are wrought there, the weight of evidence is unthinkably strong.

And that brings us to the second evidence we have that human nature can be changed, viz.: the testimony of others. One has only to read the confessions of St. Augustine, the brilliant but sensual youth, who became the greatest apologist for the Church; of St. Francis of Assissi, the rich and gay young man who forsook all for a life of voluntary poverty and helpfulness; of Jerry McAuley, or the Rose of Mulberry Bend; of John B. Gough or John G. Wooley or the ten thousand others who have experienced this revolution of life and have been glad to witness to the change and the moving cause. Indeed, one only need to go into a prayer meeting to hear it at any time. Here are facts with which we must deal. We cannot shun them and lay claim to be careful investigators or searchers for the truth.

To this must be added the testimony of Scripture. The doctrine of a fundamental change of heart and life pervades the whole of the New Testament. Nor indeed is it absent from the old, which declares "God will give you a new heart", though the approach makes it less noticeable here.

The Apostle Paul, the first to express in a recorded form the Christian concept, says: "If any man is in Jesus Christ he is a new creation." Paul is constantly contrasting the life of sin and righteousness, defining the one as a life in the flesh and the other a life of the spirit. He urges men to crucify the old man in order that a new man may come forth. He exhausts language in order to emphasize the change that Christ makes in the life.

Peter exhorts his disciples and Christians everywhere, as children of obedience, no longer to fashion themselves according to their former lusts in the time of their ignorance. While John, writing at the close of the century, declares that whosoever is begotten of God sinneth not, for God keepeth him and the evil one toucheth him not.

It remained, however, for Jesus to express the fact of possible transformation in His own way when He declared that "Whosoever heareth my words and believeth on him that sent me. . . . is passed from death into life". We must never forget Jesus found Himself limited by speech. Words always settle into fixed meanings. The development of truth demands new language forms. Jesus had to use the words at His command, carrying as they did traditional signification. His words here are intended to convey the meaning he would have made plain to Nicodemus, when He said, "Unless one be born from above (or again, or of the Spirit) he cannot see the Kingdom of God"; he has no conception of the joys and the changed purpose and desire that one experiences when he gives over his life to the domination of the Spirit.

Doubtless there are many whose lives have been gradually changed, "transformed from glory unto glory", and who have never known or will know this sudden and amazing transformation the few experience in later life, and most assuredly the former is the normal process. But we are far too apt to lay the emphasis upon the degraded sinner, the outcast of society. We must increasingly take into account the respectable sinners, for the world is filled with them. They do not drink, they do not steal, they abstain from fleshly lusts, at least so far as the world can see; but they are selfish, proud, narrow, intolerant, living for themselves and careless of others, save as the dictates of society demand. They have fine homes and stay there—in a word, they are respectable, and everywhere received as members of society. They give to church and charity when their social standing requires it, but would never think of doing so otherwise. They are the people who are living for what life can bring them rather than what they can give to life.

The change we are discussing here is that which has taken place in a life which swings from a self-centre to a Christ-centre. It is the change which Paul experienced when, after his bitter persecution of those who followed Christ, he wrote: "For me to live is Christ." It is a change from selfishness to unselfishness. Death or life lies here. Christ changes life by giving it a new center, a new dynamic. "I will draw all men unto myself." It is not a case of environment or the reorganization of society or the more just distribution of wealth; it is not even a case of waiting patiently for the race to grow by its own impulsion out of its undeniably selfish mood. It is the experience of a new life of freedom to do the right, and consequent emancipation from the power of sin, through the domination of the Spirit, inspiring and illuminating and giving strength when we face the higher set over against the lower. The spiritual person of whom Jesus is speaking here to Nicodemus is one in whom the Spirit of God can work. Life becomes single now. It has one motive, and that motive is pure and unselfish—it springs from devotion to a person. It is new with the incoming of that person into life. So Jesus stands at the door and knocks that He may come in and change the old into the new. The individual sets his face determinedly in the way of right and unselfish endeavor.

Yes, human life can be changed. It is the same I. But direction and experience are different. My approach to it is on a different plain. I have taken to myself wings and mount where the atmosphere is not thick with the darkness of self. I am following, and the life that leads me on is wondrous fair and bright. I can see and hear now. I have, with the transformation, been given new sight, and new hearing. Sight has been given to the blind and hearing to the deaf, as the prophet long ago foretold. For this new-old self is born both of blood and the Spirit, and the new element is the domination of the Spirit.

Nor is this in any sense an esoteric fact. It is not for the elect, but for those who choose. The lowliest may walk in light with the most erudite. The wretched, broken, sin-soiled life may be clothed in white. One thing only is necessary—surrender to Jesus Christ. But that is necessary. No one has been able to devise any other way. This is more than a way; it is the way. "There is no work of mine for him to do, who is not wholly mine." Herbert Spencer said: "Perfect correspondence would be perfect life," and in that the philosopher has again spoken the truth of the Christian faith. Jesus put it this way: "This is life eternal to know thee, the only true God, and him whom thou didst send, even Jesus Christ." Perfect correspondence would be perfect life.

What a gospel has been entrusted to us! Would that stark conviction might take the place of the vacillation of our time and mood. We hold the truth that will change a world. And there is no other.—Rev. Dr. W. G. Sargent, in Herald of Gospel Liberty.

HOUSES AND HOMES.

It chills my heart to see a room
  Too orderly and neat—
Never a plaything on the rug
  Nor marks of puppy feet;
No open book or magazine
  Left on a window seat.

I like to see a chair or two
  Out of the usual place,
Declaring "Here some happy friends
  Have chatted face to face".
A pipe, a sewing basket, lend
  To all a touch of grace.

Some houses are like men who need
  Love's hand to muss their hair—
A kewpie doll, a catcher's mit
  On a dignified hall chair;
The gloomy house has learned to smile
  And lost that haughty stare.

A house may be the grandest built
  From Jacksonville to Nome—
Hold store of treasures very rare,
  The art of Greece and Rome,
Yet lack the touch of human love
  Which makes a dwelling home.

The Congregationalist.

The Wedding Hour.

In the village during these months past, after the little joiner's shop has been closed in the evening, there has been the sturdy tread of the owner down the side street to the little house at the end. Just there the lane meanders out to the freedom of the fields. The village little ones have often trod that silent path in search of a new opened flower. Older hearts have gone its way to see the sky glory of sunset. It has been the path young joiner Ben has passed with eager feet, to keep fond tryst as a lover may. And now he has taken his maiden as a bride to create anew another circle of the great life. This week has seen their wedding day.

The carpenter was honored guest, with his little mother and their friends. It was all so like the interwoven friendships of another village and another land. So like the scenes of a carefree day at Cana. So like that hour which prompted thoughts that Mother Mary kept close within her heart.

I wonder whether the Master ever went back to the carpenter shop after those days of testing in the wilderness. I wonder whether His hands ever longed for the grip of the saw and the plane . . . whether His feet ever forgot the feel of the brittle shavings. He was ever a builder. He was ever one for turning rough lumber into finished and fitting form. He was ever one for using up all seeming waste. . . . Did He ever go back? Did He ever steal quietly by the closed shop and linger a little in His progress ere He made His way to the hill beyond and to prayer? Did He not often return in spirit to the boyhood scenes when His weary body was otherwhere?

Certain His purpose never was to withdraw far from the commerce of life's need, nor from its social joys. There must often have been laughter round the wayside fire when these friendly, earnest fellows rested from the dust for pilgrimage. Here was a friend being married—He had not forgotten. Why should He not go? True, His was no easy choice. The role of a prophet is no easy role. The role of a prophet who prefers to wear the normal garb of his day, is harder still. The religion of the Master was the religion of a divine heart beneath human clothes . . . of a divine greeting by the glad free human way. The days of the Master were such as His religion would demand. There was only one place He might not go. Only one environment which must be shunned by His disciples . . . that place where He might lose His consciousness of the all-pervading spirit of all Good Life. He sought the growth of beauty, of goodness and of truth. His cause was the cause of Life and Light and Love. Wherever these were, there was the Master of Man.

But this Cana wedding had its meaning deeper even than this. There was the little group of followers of a newfound Teacher, the Teacher Himself, and the friendly circle of the well-loved countryside. How sweetly and simply human it all is. Were these the first joys of the building of a world religion? Were these the scenes that must be interwoven with the propagation of a universal faith? Indeed they were. Sorry that religion, that faith, that fails to feel the meaning of such a quiet simple hour as that when Jesus forgot not the wedding of a friend.

A man of sorrows! Yes, it may be. But the Master too was a man of joy. His thought was never far from the lisp of little children, the shy glances and lingering reticences of youthful lovers, the quiet gladness of home-born hearts. How could it be? In every man He saw the divine life reaching up to come to a consciousness likewise divine. In every human eventuality He was aware of the spirit forces that make for the wonder of a higher destiny.

At the outset of His ministry He must choose. His friends missed not the meaning of His choice. He spake as one having authority, but He walked the paths of intermingled joy and human need.

So it must ever be. The wind bloweth where it listeth and we hear the sound thereof. With the Spirit it is likewise. Glad in humble ways the quietude of God is found; Glad in simple hours of simple, kindly folk. Love is not bound by circumstance, and the Master is the Son of Love . . . no more, no less. As the sun rising in golden splendor to illumine the very filth of earth looses no least moiety of its glory, so Love's golden gleam searches each human turning and brings to birth the warm throb of heart's content.

As I linger again at noon or eventide, and look fondly along the cottage path in its way to the open fields and the hills beyond, it seems I look along the way to Cana. It seems that every human meeting born of Love has within it somewhat of the touch of miracle and is gladdened by the presence of the Spirit Lord of all good life.—J. E. Ward in Canadian Churchman.

The age of doubt would pass—the

Would silently restore the child-hood

USE THEM AS THINE.

F. B. Stone.

Use my lips that they may speak,
Words of life to help the weak.
Words of love to speed the strong,
Words of power to right the wrong.

Bless my hands, use them as Thine,
May they heal with touch divine;
Loving ministry fulfill,
In accordance with Thy will.
Keep my mind pure, keen, alert,
Thinking naught for other's hurt.
Quick to see and use for Thee
Every opportunity.

Keep Thy fire deep in my soul—
Glowing like a living coal.
Setting fire to other hearts
With the power Thy love imparts.

Thus Thy will not mine be done,
Witnessing Thy victory won;
Led by Thee where'er I go,
Giving Thee the life I owe.

To One Who Goes Singing.

Artha Parker made a discovery, a wonderful one destined to change the whole course of her thinking, her life—to transform drudgery into a means towards success.

Artha's days were busy ones. She kept house for an older brother whose wife had died, leaving two little children. And in the first place, if Artha had not been the capable, efficient, conscientious girl she was, Ben's mind would not have turned so quickly to her in the time when he needed a most capable, efficient and conscientious person in his house. Of course, Artha was proud to be chosen, and happy, too; for the funny things that little Ben and Baby Esther did kept her laughing many times when she was tired and discouraged.

It had been Artha's desire to take music lessons, first piano and then later, when she progressed in her knowledge of music, to begin cultivating her very nice singing voice. It was giving up this dear desire that made the worry lines down the middle of her forehead that nobody liked to see on so young a face as Artha's.

"Of course, I'll have to give it up for years and years. And then, when Benny and Esther are old enough to take care of themselves, my voice will be so stiff it will crack the first time I try to use it," she mourned, as she went through the routine of the day, telling Hattie in the kitchen what to have for dinner, the next day's breakfast and lunch, dressing and undressing the babies, dusting, picking up playthings, putting them away and getting them out again.

"There is never any end to this kind of work. You do it and then you do it again, over and over and over."

It was not until about six weeks of her "drudgery" that Artha made her discovery.

"I have not sung since I came into this house," she remembered suddenly one day. It was one of the busiest of all her days. It had rained and the children had gone out on the veranda and gotten their shoes wet three different times. Artha was at her bottom depth of discouragement that day. It seemed to her that she would never come to the end of taking care of little wet shoes and stockings.

"No path seems rough to one who goes singing."

Where had she heard those words? She could not have told whether she had read them or put them together herself. Anyway, it was the message she needed for the moment, and fitted into her thoughts in a wonderful way.

"Maybe if I tried to sing a little—not singing lesson singing, but just my best plain, every day singing—it would help make things easier."

And it worked.

Whenever troublesome times thickened around her, when Hattie was sick and Artha had to cook and serve the meals, when rainy days kept the children inside making incessant demands, when she was the very weariest, Artha made herself sing.

"Pity! Pity!" Baby Esther would exclaim, leaving off some mischievousness to listen.

"Sing it seventeen times more," little Ben would insist, when she came to the end of one of the songs he liked.

"It's mighty sweet of you, sis, to take all this hard work so angelically," big Ben would say, when he was there to hear.

"I'm keeping up my practice," Artha herself realized, joyous over the realization.

Her homekeeping toil had become very dear to her now. She loved every duty. Her enthusiasm made it grow easier and easier and she found little gaps of time in between the flying hours, and knew that she was ready to go on with her music lessons seriously.

"It's your fine common sense," her teacher told her one day, "that is going to make a real musician out of you. You are not afraid of work, and you understand that there is work ahead that has got to be done. You will succeed, yes. You have worked out the problem of success already."—Kind Words.

Polly Speaks.

Little Dorothy Adams and her parrot were the best of friends. And they were just as happy as they could be.

It happened that Dorothy's daddy was a shoe dealer. He sold lots of fine shoes to little children, and to big folks, too And his small daughter, Dorothy, was very fond of shoes; especially, new ones.

On this particular forenoon, Dorothy was reading an interesting book. But Polly didn't like books. She could not read, you know, and she wanted Dorothy to talk to her.

So, to attract Dorothy's attention, she began to talk as fast as any bird could possibly talk.

"Set the table, Dottie!" she called, but Dorothy went on reading. "Naughty bo-o-k! Daddy coming! Daddy bring—shoes! Shoes!"

"No, daddy won't bring me any shoes today," Dorothy finally declared, as she stopped reading for a few seconds.

Polly was delighted, so she went on repeating all the things that her small mistress had taught her to say. She wished Dorothy would put up that book.

From where Polly sat near the wide window, she could see lots and lots of things. She often saw Dorothy at her play, and she almost always saw her when she returned from school. She could see a long way down the street. That it how it happened that she frequently saw Dorothy's daddy coming home to dinner. On such occasions, she would perk her head and call: "Daddy coming! Set the table, Dottie!"

This morning, Polly wanted to talk about shoes all the time, so she kept calling over and over again: "Daddy bring shoes!"

"Now, look here!" Dorothy exclaimed, shaking her finger at her pet. "I'm going to finish this book, Miss Polly, and you're going to keep quiet. Do you know what you are, Polly Parrot? You are a big chatterbox!"

Polly looked at Dorothy, and put her head over on one side. Then with just one eye she gazed at the little girl. Polly didn't know just what a chatterbox was, but she knew Dorothy called her by that name only when she wanted her to be quiet.

Polly kept still for a minute or two, but that was all. "Daddy bring shoes!" she said. Then, "Naughty Poll"!

Dorothy laughed. "You're a darling old Poll," she exclaimed, "but listen!"

Polly looked right at the small finger that Dorothy shook at her, and kept as quiet as a mouse.

"Now, Miss Polly, you must keep quiet. Don't you speak again, unless it's really necessary. Not a word, unit's really and truly necessary."

"Dorothy," said mother as she looked into the room, "when you see daddy coming, set the table, won't you, dear?"

"Yes, Mother," Dorothy replied, as she moved her chair up close to the window.

Polly knew Dorothy very well, but she didn't speak. She just kept her eyes on the road, while Dorothy continued wth her reading. But Polly was getting a bit anxious. It certainly took a long time to read that story. Suddenly, she saw a familiar figure coming up the street.

"Yes," said Polly to herself, "that's daddy! My! I must speak. I just cannot keep still another second."

So she turned her head, and looking at Dorothy called: "Set the table, Dottie! Daddy coming. Daddy bring shoes! Set the table!"

Dorothy looked up in amazement. Yes, sure enough! There was daddy coming, and she hadn't put a single thing on the table. She had forgotten all about it.

"You darling old Polly!" she exclaimed, as she hastily closed her book. "You remembered what I told you, didn't you? And Dottie forgot all about the table. You're a darling old Polly."

Polly was happy indeed. She perked her head once more. "Pretty Poll," she said. "Naugh-ty bo-o-k!"—Margaret B. Elms in Zion's Herald.

Betty's Playtime.

"Oh, dear," said Betty, when mamma called her from play, "somebody's always a-wantin' me to do something!" and she ran into the house with a frown on her face.

"Betty," said mamma, "if you can't obey cheerfully—"

"But I always have to be doin' somethin'," burst out Betty. "I never can play—"

"You may play this whole day long," said mamma, quietly.

"And not do anything else?" said Betty.

"Not do anything," said mamma.

"Oh, goody!" cried Betty, as she ran out and got her doll things, and began making a dress for Cora May, her new doll.

Grandma came into the room while she was sewing.

"Betty," she said, "will you run upstairs and get my spectacles?"

"Yes, ma'am," cried Betty, jumping in a hurry, for she dearly loved to do things for grandma.

"No, Betty," said mamma; "you keep on with your doll things. I'll get grandma's glasses myself."

Betty returned to her sewing, but somehow it wasn't so interesting as it had been. She threw it down the minute little Benjamin waked from his nap and ran to take him.

"Nursing is too much like work," said mamma, taking the baby out of her arms; "you must not do any today."

Betty's cheeks turned rosy. She thought of the times she had grumbled when mamma had asked her to hold the baby. Now she would have given anything to hold him one minute.

Mary Sue, Betty's friend, came by to get her to go on an errand with her.

"I am sorry, but you can't go," said mamma. "Running errands is not play, you know."

When father came home to dinner, Betty started as usual, to open the front door for him. But mamma called her back.

"You forget, Betty," she said in her pleasantest way, "that you are not to do anything for anybody today."

"Then I guess I had better not ask her to drop my letter in the mail box," said Cousin Kate, "it might interfere with her play."

"I'm tired of play!" cried Betty. She ran out into the kitchen. Dinah, the cook, would let her help her, she knew. But for a wonder, not even black Dinah would let her do anything.

"I'se agwine ter a fun-eral," she said, "an' I'se in a mighty big hurry to git off. But, law, honey! I wouldn't hab you interrupted in your play for nothin'!" Poor Betty; she thought the day would never end.

"Oh, mamma!" she cried, as she kissed her at bedtime, "do wake me up early in the morning. I want to get a good start. Helping is so much better than playing all the time."—Selected.

New Life.

When I was a boy, I lived in Canada, and was in the habit of studying my lessons out in the huge kitchen. And, one night, when all was still and I was poring over my books, there suddenly came to my ears a sound that frightened me.

It was a weird, mysterious sound, like the brushing of unseen, ghostly wings upon the bare walls. I trembled in alarm, as I tried to locate the noise—and could not.

Swish—swish—swish! From everywhere, and yet from nowhere, it seemed to come. In a panic of terror, I fled from the room, and sought out my mother in another part of the house.

And she came to the kitchen with me. It was still there. Swish—swish—swish!

After a search she located the source of the strange brushing of unseen wings. The sound emanated from a little pasteboard box, hidden far back on the very top shelf of the pantry. The container was punched across the top with tiny holes. And, when we opened it, there fluttered forth a great, beautiful butterfly.

Some time before, my older sister had taken the chrysalis of a caterpillar, attached to a dead twig, placed it in the box on the pantry shelf, and forgotten it.

And from that sepulchre had arisen to new life and glory the marvel of the vari-colored butterfly.—J. S .Lodge, in Our Dumb Animals.

WOULD YOU LOVE GOD?

Gene Scott Wright.

Would you love God? Then seek His face,
Draw near Him while He may be found;
To prayer and praise give each its place,
Then shall your love to Him abound.

Go to His house each Sabbath,
And kneel at His communion feast;
Turn from the world sometimes away,
From bondage be your soul released.

Companionship the heart awakes—
You cannot love an unknown friend;.
Love ever gives, Love ever takes,
And will go with you to the end.

A treasure sought is treasure found,
No jewels store the careless hand:
In Him both Life and Joy abound—
"Seek, knock, and ask," is His command.

The Three Verbs.

Once upon a time there were three children—two brothers and a sister—and one night a fairy came to them. And the fairy said, "Children, I have got here three verbs—to be, to do and to have—and you can choose which you will take; only, mind this—whichever you choose will have an influence on your after life!" The children, first of all, did not know whether they would like to choose either; it sounded too much like a grammar lesson. But—when the fairy assured them that it had nothing to do with lessons, the eldest boy, who was rather a greedy boy, said: "Oh, I'll take 'to have'—that will just suit me," and the second boy, who was a restless sort of a youngster, said: "And I'll take 'to do'." "Well," said the fairy to the little girl, "There's only "to be' left, so you must have that." "That's all right," said the little maid, "it's the very one I wanted."

When the eldest boy woke the next morning, he was more greedy than ever. He wanted everything he could get, and a great deal more. And he found he got a good many things. If he played at marbles he generally won. He lent his pennies and charged for lending them. Things seemed to fall into his hands in a wonderful way. He saved all his money and got richer and richer. When he grew up he started in business and it prospered. His one thought was always to get, and often he was not very particular how he did get, or who was made poor. So you may be sure that nobody loved him. And at last he died and left all he had for somebody else to spend.

The second boy woke up more energetic than ever. He was out of bed first, and washed and dressed before the others were up. As soon as breakfast was over he began to look about for something to do, and he generally found plenty. Some of it was useful and some of it was mischief. And he grew up to be a very busy man. He was on all sorts of committees and societies, and if there wasn't one he would start one. He came home late at night, and sat up half the night and wore himself out. And at last he died, and had to go and leave it all behind.

When the little girl woke up the thought came to her, "I have to be good, I have to be kind". And she tried to be good and she found it easy, you see, that was what she had chosen.

She didn't mind much about getting things and she wasn't particularly busy, but everywhere she went she carried the sunshine. Everybody loved her and when they were sick or in trouble they sent for her—not for what she said or did, but what she was. They loved to have her near, just like we love to have the flowers and the sunshine. She had very little to give, but they loved her for what she was. And when she died she left the memory of what she was behind and she took what she was with her, too.

Children, the best thing of all is "to be". If you make sure of that, "to have" and "to do" will take care of themselves. Jesus once said that eight sorts of people were to be blessed, and they were all of them people who had learned "to be".—The Sunday School Herald.

Those Punctuation Marks.

"Oh, dear!" sighed Warren, as he came in from school one day; "I wish we didn't have to learn so much about periods and commas and semi-colons and such things, I hate them."

Mamma laid down her sewing and said: "Why do you hate them, Warren?"

"I hate to use them, and, besides, I don't think they are of much use. I don't see why we can't write sentences without putting in any punctuation marks."

Mamma smiled, and then, rising from her chair, she went over to the desk and got out a piece of paper and a pencil. Then she wrote: "The little turkey strutted about the yard and ate corn half an hour after his head was cut off."

"Why, mummie, how funny!" exclaimed Warren when he read it. "How can a turkey walk around eating corn without a head."

"He couldn't," replied mamma, "and yet I have written just what I intended to write. I have, however, left out all punctuation marks."

Then she bent down and punctuated the sentence. It read: "The little turkey strutted about the yard and ate corn; half an hour after, his head was cut off."

"Oh, I see," cried Warren and then and there he resolved to learn all he could about punctuation marks.—The Evangelist.

TO THE LAITY OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

There is in circulation among the laity of the Protestant Episcopal Church a petition, prepared by one of our Bishops, to the General Convention which will assemble in Washington next October, asking that body to refuse its assent to the proposal to eliminate the Thirty-nine Articles of Religion from the Book of Common Prayer, which would mean their abrogation.

"WHEREAS, the last General Convention adopted tentatively a resolution to revise the Book of Common Prayer by omitting the publication in connection therewith of the Articles of Religion; and

"WHEREAS, there is no provision for publishing elsewhere or for recognizing in any other way the Articles of Religion except in connection with the Book of Common Prayer; and

"WHEREAS, the Constitution of this Church has ever since 1801 recognized in this way the Articles of Religion; and

"WHEREAS, the Articles of Religion define the Church and state clearly the historic doctrinal differences between the Anglican Communion and the Roman Catholic Church;

"THEREFORE, we the undersigned adult communicants of the Protestant Episcopal Church do most earnestly memorialize our Right Reverend Fathers-in-God, our Reverend Clerical Deputies and Honorable Lay Deputies, in General Convention assembled in their respective Houses, to vote against the resolution to omit the Articles of Religion from publication in connection with the Book of Common Prayer and to vote against any proposed amendment to the Constitution that would omit reference to the Articles of Religion.

"AND we do further memorialize our Fathers-in-God, the Bishops, to send us a message of assurance that the name, the doctrine, the ceremonies and nomenclature of our Church and her missionary purpose and her fraternal love for all Christian people are and should be as expressed in the Book of Common Prayer.

"So we believe you will bring comfort and peace to the hearts of many, give confidence to those within our Communion and make clear to all men the true Catholic nature and Protestant heritage of our dear Church and revive zeal for the salvation of souls through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen."

We believe that a great majority of the communicants of the Church are opposed to the elimination of these Articles of Religion, established by the Church in 1801, and are likewise opposed to the introduction into the Church of the Mass, Reservation and Adoration of the Sacrament Prayers to the Virgin Mary, Invocation of Saints, Worship of Images and Relics, Auricular Confession, Penance, use of the Rosary, Holy Water and other doctrines and ceremonies peculiar to the Church of Rome.

We therefore heartily endorse this petition and express the hope that all Protestant Episcopalians will signify their approval of it by their signatures and by aiding in the widest possible circulation of it.

Copies of this petition may be procured without cost from Latsch & Arnold, 97 N. Second Street, Memphis, Tenn.

PEMBERTON: Passed into life eternal, in the early morn of May 26, 1928, MRS. MARGARET GIBBONEY PEMBERTON, widow of J. A. Pemberton, Jr., of Fayetteville, N. C., daughter of William and Caroline Kyle Gibboney, of Wytheville, Va.

"In life, in death, O Lord, abide with me."

A TRIBUTE.

Miss Eliza Breckinridge.

In the passing from this world of MISS ELIZA BRECKENRIDGE, who recently died in Roanoke, Va., one finds no plea for mourning. Her days had run their course in all piety and dignity for eighty years and more. Rather one gives thanks for the example of this Thy servant who has departed this life in the true faith of Thy holy name". Miss Breckinridge passed her childhood and middle life at Grove Hill, Botetourt Co., Va., the home of her family for several generations. She then moved to Roanoke, where she lived with her sister-in-law, the late Mrs. Julia A. Breckinridge, and later with her niece, Mrs. W. Gordon Robertson.

Miss Breckinridge's unassuming, yet marked personality, her intellectual gifts, and, above all, the beauty of her Christian character whose "very pulse was God's praise" even in this transitory world will linger as an influence for good.

AN AFFECTIONATE RELATIVE.

REV. HENRY V. SAUNDERS.

THE REV. HENRY V. SAUNDERS, rector of Christ Church, St. Michaels, Maryland, died at a Baltimore hospital, on May 29, after an illness lasting only two weeks. Funeral services were held by the Rev. George W. Davenport, D. D., assisted by the Rev. Dr. Sutton and the Rev. S. R. MacEwan, on Thursday, May 29, in the presence of nearly all the clergy of the Diocese of Easton, parishioners and friends of the deceased.

The Rev. Mr. Saunders was graduated from St. Stephen's College, Annandale, N. Y., in 1905, with the degree of B. A. and three years later from the Virginia Theological Seminary. He was ordained deacon in 1908 by Bishop Paret, of Maryland, and priest in 1909 by Bishop Harding of Washington. He was rector of various parishes in the Diocese of Maryland, and in 1923 accepted Christ Church, St. Michaels, Diocese of Easton, where he remained until his death, a beloved and faithful pastor and friend to every one.

Mr. Saunders held several prominent and important offices in the diocese. He was one of the examining chaplains, a member of the Board of Diocesan Clergy Relief, member of the Executive Council, and chairman of the Committee on Religious Education.

The interment was in St. Michaels, Md.

MRS. NATILLIA HORNER HURXTHAL.

MRS. NATILLIA HORNER HURXTHAL, widow of the late George A. Hurzthal, died at Warrenton, Va., at the home of her sister, Mrs. F. B. Britton, on Tuesday morning, March 27, after an illness of several weeks, at the age of eighty-two.

Mrs. Hurzthal was a devoted communicant of St. James' Church, which she had served faithfully in the Sunday School, Chancel Guild, Parish Aid and Woman's Auxiliary. For some years, while living in New York, she had been a communicant of St. Agnes' Church. She was one of the first members of the Daughters of the King of St. Agnes' Church, and retained her membership in that organization until her death.

Always faithful to her Church and kind and generous to all, she had won the love and respect of all who knew her. By her life all men knew that she must indeed be one of our Blessed Lord's beloved disciples.

"For all the saints, who from their labors rest,
Who thee by faith before the world confessed,
Thy Name, O Jesus, be forever blest.
Alleluia."

MRS. ANNIE CLYMER McKIM.

ANNIE CLYMER McKIM, widow of the Rev. Dr. Randolph Harrison McKim, departed this life on Saturday, May 19, 1928, at her late residence, 1623 K Street, N. W., Washington, D. C. The service, held in the Church of the Epiphany on Tuesday morning, May 22, was conducted by the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., LL. D., Bishop of Washington, assisted by the Rev. Henry Lubeck, D. C. L., and the rector, the Rev. Z. B. Phillips, D. D. The interment was at her old home at Birdsboro, Pa., at which the Rev. A. B. Vossler officiated, assisted by Dr. Phillips.

In the death of Mrs. McKim, the Church of the Epiphany and the City of Washington have sustained an irreparable loss. Gracious and dignified in her bearing, she manifested to the very last the deepest, personal interest in everything pertaining to the upbuilding of the Kingdom of God in Church and Nation, never losing touch with those whose circumstances in later years may have consigned them to a greater or less degree of obscurity. It has been truly said of her, that she was "steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord", but only those who knew her best realized how utterly selfless was her devotion to her Lord and Master in sharing the burdens of others, and instanding firmly for the right wherever duty called. Her interest in the Church, her devotion to its services, her unfailing presence at regular Celebrations of the Holy Communion revealed the source of her inspiration and the far-reaching power of her example. With matchless faith and unflinching courage she set her face to the Light and with entire confidence walked with God, and "was not, for God took her".

"Now the laborer's task is o'er;
Now the battle day is past;
Now upon the farther shore
Lands the voyager at last.
Father in Thy gracious keeping
Leave we now Thy servant, sleeping."

MISS ELIZA W. BRECKINRIDGE.

MISS ELIZA WATTS BRECKINRIDGE entered into life eternal at Roanoke, Va., on the twenty-fourth day of May, 1928, in the eighty-eighth year of her life.

Miss Breckinridge was one of nine children of the late Captain Cary Breckinridge and Emma Gilmer, his wife, of Grove Hill, Botetourt Co., Va., and, although never of a robust physique, she survived all the other members of her immediate family. She was the grand-daughter of General James Breckinridge of Revolutionary fame and who later became prominent in politics, serving as a delegate from his native county in the General Assembly of Virginia for many years and afterwards as Representative in Congress from the Botetourt District. In 1795 he erected the grand old mansion known as "Grove Hill", and this home at once became widely known for its charming Southern hospitality and the resort of men who were prominent in State and National affairs. Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, Clay and many lesser notables spent happy hours in its halls and on its spacious lawns, and their host, having preserved his large and varied correspondence with these men, "Grove Hill" became a treasure house of much historical data of great value. Broad culture, unstinted hospitality and far-seeing, self-effacing patriotism had been the spirit of the place; but this beautiful home with all its treasures was entirely destroyed by fire on October 24, 1909. Miss Breckinridge thus graphically expressed her feelings in regard to this catsastrophe: "But the glory of the Past and the cherished memories of the beautiful lives that had perished could never return. The cry from the heart was always, 'Oh, for the touch of a vanished hand and the sound of a voice that is still'. When its walls fell and the great roof collapsed, it was like a sob from the heart of the Past." This house has been the home of the Breckinridge family for more than one hundred years, and a connecting link between the first and fifth generations of that family in Botetourt County. It may be said that Miss Breckinridge lived through four of her country's wars, and it is a tragic fact that of her five brothers who went out to battle for their country in the Confederate Cause, three of them never returned.

After the death of her mother in 1893, Miss Breckinridge moved with her sister-in-law, the late Mrs. Julia Breckinridge, to Roanoke, and these ladies later made their home with Miss Breckinridge's niece, Mrs. William Gordon Robertson, until the time of their respective deaths.

Nurtured in a home of such rare culture and refinement, Miss Breckinridge exhibited to a marked degree all those qualities of mind and character naturally derived from such a source. A devoted Christian, she was a regular attendant at the services and other meetings of St. John's Church, of which she was the oldest member in point of age and service, until an unfortunate accident occurred last fall deprived her of this comfort. Possessing a sublime faith in the mercy and wisdom of God, in times of trouble or adversity she resigned herself uncomplainingly to His tender mercies, finding comfort and consolation in the firm belief that He knew best and that He would never forsake her. Being of a naturally cheerful disposition, with a bright intellect and a great fund of sparkling humor, she was a charming companion, always showing a deep and sympathetic interest [illegible] others and thus endearing herself to every one with whom she came in contact. The large congregation which attended the funeral service at the church and the gorgeous display of beautiful flowers bore evidence to the love and esteem in which she was held by her many friends. As a student of literature, she was a lover of good books and took special delight in the study and interpretation of the Bible and Shakespeare. During the latter years of her life she spent much time in copying short gems of poetry or other quotations in her own inimitable hand-writing and sending them to her friends—a small but loving tribute which was greatly appreciated by those who received them. An ardent lover of Nature, she derived great pleasure from its beauties and was always greatly interested in the various flowers and trees of the countryside. Her life was like a beautiful flower, which, though often buffeted by the cruel winds of adversity, cast a fragrance of love and joy on all who came within its reach, and although now transplanted to the fields of Paradise, the influence of her beautiful character will live on to make this world much sweeter for her having lived in it.

"Fold up the Tent!
Above the mountain's crest.
I hear a clear voice calling, calling clear,
To rest! to rest!
And I am glad to go,
For the sweet oil is low,
And rest is best!"

IN MEMORIAM.

Phillip Francis du Pont.

Entered into rest at his residence at Wilmington, Del., Thursday, May 17, 1928. The funeral services were conducted by the Rt. Rev. Phillip Cooke, Bishop of Delaware, assisted by the Rev. F. T. Ashton, rector of Christ Church, Christiana Hundred. The interment was in the du Pont Cemetery, overlooking the Brandywine and beneath the ancient trees of which all members of this great family have been laid to rest for over a hundred years.

Phillip du Pont was the oldest son of Dr. and Mrs. Alexis du Pont and was born in Louisville, Ky., in 1879. His family later moved to Wilmington and resided at their beautiful country seat, "Rencourt", Greenville, Del., where he grew to manhood and where he was living when the writer first knew him, just before his marriage.

He was educated at the University of Virginia, where he was a student and where he made an excellent and enviable record as student and man.

He married Elizabeth Braxton Horner, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Frederick Horner, U. S. N., of Marshall, Va., and sister of Mrs. John S. Bunting of St. Louis, and of Frederick C. and Leonard S. Horner of New York. Besides his widow, he is survived by two daughters, Mrs. Richard D. Morgan and Mary Jane du Pont.

Phillip du Pont was a splendid man a gentleman of culture and ability, a loyal and genial and true friend, a devoted husband and father, sparing neither time nor expense in the care and comfort of his family.

He was wildly and variously read in general literature and in some periods he was an authority. Well acquainted with the best things in human letters, his finely equipped library always showed upon their shelves the best editions of the best masters.

The present writer, who also officiated at his wedding, knew him long and pleasantly, and well recalls many a long walk over the attractive roads or through the fields that lay all around his beautiful home, talking of kindred enthusiasms in literature with the best things of which his mind was so variously enriched. We do not know of any one who knew the works of Robert Louis Stevenson better than he, or who could quote more readily from his poems or recall more aptly chosen bits of his prose. He was the author of several small volumes of verse which were privately printed and many of which his best friends will long cherish, reflecting, as they do, the spirit of the writer.

He was beloved by his chosen friends who knew him best. He cared but little for the glare of noon-day popularity and the superficial interests of society and the hurry and drive of mere material interests. He loved his family and his beautiful home, which he carefully planned, delighted in a day's hunt in the fields or down the Chesapeake. He was a devoted and loyal and affectionate father, and his kindnesses were as numerous as they were nameless, his left hand not knowing what his right hand did.

He was confirmed in Christ Church, Christiana Hundred and died a communicant of that Church.

His going seemed most untimely, so young and so capable of great good in years to come. A bad attack of influenza earlier in the spring had left him weak and finally complications set in that called for a major operation, which he was not able to survive.

We mourn his going, the best service to humanity was hardly more than begun. Our thoughts of love and sorrow and regret are with his lovely wife and daughters in tender consideration for whom we grieve, and our prayers rise to our Heavenly Father that eternal light and rest and peace may be his portion even forevermore.

as Suffragan Bishop of Long Island." Bishop Stires, in a letter which accompanies that of Dr. Atwater, says: ". . . I am fully convinced that his decision is actuated solely by the very highest motives. I am compelled to confess that at present he cannot come to our aid. . . ." Bishop Stires intimates in the same letter that at an appropriate time he will request a special convention to "consider what we ought to do". There is great regret throughout the diocese at Dr. Atwater's decision, but only increased respect for him, in view of the reasons he gives.

FLORIDA.

Rt. Rev. F. A. Juhan, D. D., Bishop.

Wayside Witness.

Florida has recently been blessed with a Crusade of Wayside Witness in Jacksonville and vicinity through a week's visit of six young Evangelists of the English Church Army. These consecrated and spirit-filled young Englishmen came to the Diocese by the invitation of the Bishop and the Chairman of the Commission on Evangelism, the Rev. Charles W. Frazer. Captain Frank Bloxham, the Captain of the group, has his five associates only arrived from England the week previous to their Jacksonville Crusade.

While in Jacksonville from April 28 to May 4, inclusive, the Church Army conducted services in the churches three times daily and in addition to these services many of the institutions of the city, both penal and philanthropic, were given the privilege of sharing in the Crusade. Daily noon-day meetings were also held in Heming Park, a thronging thoroughfare in the heart of the city.

WEST MISSOURI.

Rt. Rev. S C. Partridge, D. D., Bishop.

Consecration.

Consecration of Trinity Church, Marshall, the Rev. W. J. Gratton, minister-in-charge, took place on Sunday, June 10, with Bishop Partridge as officiant and preacher. The mission at Marshall has had a continuous and active existence since 1872. It is now housed in a substantial and well-appointed church, built five years ago, during the incumbency of the Rev. W. T. Travis, now rector of St. Simon's Parish, Chicago. Discharge of last obligations for the cost of building was recently made through receipt of a gift of five thousand dollars from the American Church Building Fund Commission.

New Clergy.

Work is being strengthened and developed at a number of parishes and missions by the advent of four new clergy now beginning or about to begin their labors in the diocese: the Rev. Oliver F. Crawford at St. Mark's, Kansas City, and Trinity Church, Independence; the Rev. B. G. Whitlock at St. Augustine's Church, Kansas City, and St. Matthias', St. Joseph; the Rev. W. G. Harter at Calvary Church, Sedalia; and Mr. Benjamin H. Smith, who is to be ordained on the Festival of St. John the Baptist for work at All Saints', Nevada, and Trinity Church, Lamar. Seven new clergy began work in the diocese during 1927.

Personal Notes

At the recent commencement of Roanoke College, June 5 ,the degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred upon the Rev. George P. Mayo, Principal of the Blue Ridge Industrial School, Dyke, Va., and the Rev. George McLaren Brydon, Executive Secretary of the Diocese of Virginia, Richmond, Va.

The Rev. Edward Gabler, formerly of the Cathedral of the Incarnation at Garden City, Long Island, has accepted a call to become rector of Christ Church, Washington Parish. He expects to assume his duties at Christ Church, July 8. The Rev. Calvert E. Buck has recently resigned this position, to become Superintendent of the Episcopal Eye, Ear and Throat Hospital.

The Rev. Samuel B. Chilton has accepted the charge of St. Peter's Parish, New Kent County, Va., in addition to his present charge of St. Paul's Parish, Hanover County, Va.

The Rev. Mr. Bram will be in charge of Christ Church, Milford, Del., during the summer, and will return for his senior year at the Virginia Seminary in the fall.

The Rev. Joseph M. Waterman, Vicar of the Church of the Resurrection, Baltimore, Md., will be in charge also over summer of Christ Church, Baltimore.

ORDINATIONS.

The Bishop of Minnesota ordained Mr. Paul Hamilton Baker as a Deacon in St. Mark's Church, Minneapolis, on Whitsunday, May 27, 1928. The Rev. Dr. Osgood presented the candidate and preached the sermon.

On Sunday, May 20, at 11 o'clock, a triple ordination was held at the Church of the Prince of Peace, Baltimore, Md., the Rev. Christopher P. Spalding, rector, by the Most Rev. John Gardner Murray, the sermon being preached by the Rev. Jackson L. Cole. All three men have been serving as deacons in the Diocese of Maryland, and were advanced to the Priesthood in this service and will be placed in charge of parishes. Paul G. Linaweaver has been serving at St. Matthew's, Oakland. He was presented by the Rev. T. S. Will. John Wilson Hunter has been in charge of St. Barnabas, Sykesville. He was presented by the Rev. C. P. Spalding. Brinley R. Madge, who was presented by Dean Berryman Green, has been working at Deer Creek Parish, and will now have charge of St. Mark's, Highland, Howard County.

The Rev. John Raymond Crosby, in charge of Grace Church, Hulmerville, Bucks County, Pa., was advanced to the priesthood by Bishop Garland in the Church House Chapel, on Saturday morning, May 21. The Rev. Richard J. Morris was presenter, and the ordination sermon was preached by the Rev. James M. Bullitt.

BACK TO THE PRAYER BOOK

Mr. Editor:

In my humble opinion, the Diocese of Virginia, indeed the Church at large, is greatly to be congratulated on the sane and safe personnel of the delegation elected at the last Council to represent Virginia at the coming General Convention. They go imbued with the spirit of Virginia—Virginia churchmanship, if you please—in all matters vital to the best Protestant interest of the Church, and, unless I am much mistaken, will do much to correct the false position, through neglect, indifference or worse, into which the old Diocese had fallen—such as favoring prayers for the dead, omission of the Articles from the Prayer Book, etc. It will be heartening to many of us to get the record straightened out in such matters—vital to the Church's retaining her Protestant name and nature.

Judge Marsilliot has done a great work for the Protestant Episcopal Church in arousing the laity and many of the clergy to see the impending danger in the omission of the Articles from the Prayer Book.

I doubt mightily if we have yet caught the true purpose and intent of these disrupters of our Church's peace—even the Anglo-Catholics. That purpose is, I believe firmly, to eliminate the Articles, and then get rid of the Protestant name and nature of the Church. Thus having paved the way, they can set themselves vigorously to work—these Anglo-Catholics, with the LIVING CHURCH in the forefront as usual—to eliminate the Prayer Book, and substitute therefor an American Missal, running pari passu with the Roman Missal, differing with it in no wise in rites and ceremonies, and only differing where it must perforce in language, one being printed in English while the other is in Latin.

If you think this a pipe-dream, test the matter by getting one of the Service Books of one of the 300 churches which to-day, as currently stated in the Church Papers, are having Mass every Sunday in the Protestant Episcopal Churches in the United States.

While this is being done see how Virginians—old-time Prayer Book lovers—are neglecting this dear old book which has admittedly made the Church in Virginia and steeled and nerved the men who made the Commonwealth. As proof of this neglect or intentional omission notice at your next service the omissions and mutilations of the Prayer Book at that service. Look (in vain) for the Prayer Book in the assembly rooms of your Episcopal Sunday Schools in the city. Much more might be said and will be in my next letter in proof of my statement.

Think on these things, and meantime let us who do really love the Prayer Book (and their name is legion)—let us adopt as our slogan the heading of this article, "Back to the Prayer Book" and do our part earnestly to rescue the dear old book from the fast-approaching oblivion towards which it is headed, unless something is done to halt its downward progress in that direction.

What Is Our Reading?

She read the Journal and the News,
The Green Book and the Red,
She kept the serials of the month
Securely in her head.
She read the sporting page, she knew
Each athlete by his name.
She read of baseball, football, golf,
Familiar with each game;
She looked the funny pages through;
She watched the mails to seize
The magazine she liked the best,
Whose columns most did please;
But—in her house there was a Book
With pages never turned,
Whose messages of hope and truth
Were still by her unlearned.
And still she reads, and laughs and cries,
O'er stories of the hour,
And lets the Book, dust-covered, lie
Unopened in its power.
—Susan Hubbard Martin in Sunday School Times.

The Will of a Natural Philosopher.

October 22, 1886, Dr. Wigand, the natural philosopher, died at Marburg. Before his death he said to his wife: "Let all the world know that my death was the blessed death of a natural philosopher saved by faith in the Lord." At the grave his pastor read the following words from the will of the deceased: "It is my wish and will that the Apostles' Creed be spoken at my grave and that testimony be borne in my name that with the help of God I have believed all these articles of faith, and that, though I was skilled in criticism, neither the way I was led in life nor science trouble me or caused me to doubt even one part of this full Christain truth, and that in this faith alone I have found all the mysteries of my life fully and satisfactorily solved."

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

For The Southern Churchman.

MY HOMELAND.

Eugenie du Maurier Meredith.

The sun may shine in other skies,
With radiance more bright;
The constellations' guardian eyes
Watch through the tropic night:

In other lands, by other seas,
My wandering feet oft roam;
But 'midst strange songs and melodies
My heart will sing of home:

Though silver streams, like threads of light,
Haste purling to the sea,
And mountain peaks, in pride and might,
Stand like eternity:

Though weary feet by stranger fires
Find transient peace and rest,
Yet memory fond my heart inspires;
The dear homeland is best!

AN ELEVATING CHOICE.

When I'm a grown-up man, I'll do
The things I've always wanted to.
I'll hunt rhinoceros and deer,
And go barefooted all the year.

I'll live in tents and swim all day,
And give my dress-up things away.
I'll never, never do the chores!
I'll always eat my meals outdoors.

And call for one whole choc-late cake
The very minute that I wake.
But, still, 'twould be such lots of joy
To be an elevator boy.

Fly up and down from floor to floor,
And, oh, what fun to slam the door!
I guess that's what I'd do some day—
When I'm a man, grown-up and gray.

—Daisy D. Stephenson, in the Churchman.

MISLEADERS

The Present Faculty at the Virginia Seminary.

It is rather hard to frame specific charges against the teaching of our Virginia Seminary, unless you are a student listening daily to the Professors. When, however, one of the Professors (Dr. Bell) delivers a specially prepared paper before the Church Congress and makes in it this statement, "The cross no longer a device for the appeasement of God becomes our supreme earthly instance of that enduring atonement for sin which makes God the perpetual sacrificial Saviour of the world", it looks to me like a categorical denial of the blood ransom of Christ. Appeasement and propitiation are synonymous. St. John says: "If any man sin we have an advocate with the Father and He is the propitiation for our sins." I don't believe God is an "enduring atonement". The Scripture says: "This man after he had offered one sacrifice for sins forever," etc. If you deny the blood atonement, the life ransom of Christ, you take the heart and motive power from the Christian religion. Without this all the rest is impotence itself. Jesus Christ came to make an appeasement to God for our sins. He Himself says He came for that: "The Son of man came . . . to give His life a ransom for many."

Besides this Christ says: "By their fruits ye shall know them." Luke White, a comparatively recent graduate of the Seminary, says before the Church Congress: "Jesus was essentially a human being born into the world like any other human being is born, the product of the love of man and woman." Another at a Clerical gathering suggests that the Creed be rewritten and the articles on the Virgin Birth and the Resurrection of the Body be left out. Of course, you ought not to hold an institution responsible for the vagaries of one or two of its graduates, but when you see and hear the same thing from most of them and the Seminary never utters a protest, it does look like acquiescence on the part of the Seminary in this expression of erroneous doctrine. The above statement of Professor Bell regarding the atonement, and the Seminary's failure to protest Unitarian teaching on the part of so many of its graduates, caused the Richmond Convocation to lay upon the table a resolution offered at its recent meeting to endorse the teaching of the Seminary. Until the Seminary gives evidence of a change in its teaching, neither the Convocation nor the Clericus will be able to pass such a resolution unanimously.

We must keep up the work of protest and contend for the faith which we know is true, and call on the Virginia Seminary to displace some of its present faculty who do not seem to us to believe in some of the most vital truths of the Bible, which they were appointed to teach.

"Enlighten our minds more and more with the light of the everlasting Gospel. Increase in us true religion. Nourish us with all goodness and of Thy great mercy keep us in the same through Jesus Christ our Saviour Who art with the Father and the Holy Ghost one God, World without end."

Langbourne M. Williams.

PUBLICITY

"Easy come, easy go" is a pithy old proverb intended to apply to money. It applies with equal truth to the publicity, which is one of the crazes, temptations, causes of demoralization and destruction, of this time.

The craving to be a little or much more prominent than the average, ordinary mass of our fellows is natural. It is an element of the ambition which is one of the awakening and driving forces of life, the force that has brought to the world vast good and, when misdirected, vast evil. Selfish ambitions backed by vigorous minds and determination have brought gigantic crime and caused suffering and woe to countless millions through successive generations. Similar ambitions in small and narrow minds or in restricted spheres, or lacking strong force to sustain them, have resulted in some harm, much absurdity and speedy oblivion.

Among people of slight capacities the struggle to escape obscurity is sometimes funny, sometimes tragic, often very pathetic. We may see evidences of it every day, everywhere, in all ages and ranks. A child becomes pert and "forward", seeking to be more important than other children. A young man impatient of steady, hard work, or incapable of it, eagerly advertises blatant skepticism, iconoclasm, contempt for sacred things, insolence, endeavoring to leap into prominence; or ostentatiously gets drunk or poses as a "bad man", preferring the distinction of a bad reputation to no distinction. Girls, discontented with the ordinary level of decency and propriety, attire themselves with flagrant immodesty and in language and manners imitate the poor painted creatures of the street, striving to attract attention, mistaking notoriety for admiration. Men and women plan and scheme and spend and endure tortures of suspense and humiliation, trying to place themselves in "high society" and to be conspicuous in flashy and vulgar newspapers. Politicians cringe to popular crazes, thunder and mouthe, betray friends, fawn on foes, forsake principles, to attain offices and achieve paragraphs in print. In almost every village doddering old men demand deference and flattery for something they are supposed to have done, or said, or been, years before and which new generations have forgotten. Even in the churches some preachers endeavor by eccentricities or radicalisms of doctrine or demeanor to have themselves talked or written about, pictured, and given prominence to which neither their talents nor labors entitle them. Outside the Church young and old men and women, for money and fame, much or little of either, scoff loudly at all the real beauties and substantials of life, or, on the other hand, affect such absorption in transcendentals and serenities that they can waste none of their precious thought on realities. Profound professors, doctors, pretentious scientists, proclaim new and incomprehensible theories of creation, biology, psychology, and write ponderous books and magazine articles with apparent trust that because nobody can understand them, everybody will revere them.

Very far above all these and well-deserving the far greater newspaper space given them, are the actors and actresses, baseball players and prize-fighters who win the space and publicity by actual hard work, self-denial, courage and endurance. Yet, their fame, too, is speeding, fleeting. Who remembers the foremost figure on the American stage six years ago, what pitcher headed the National Baseball League in 1920, or who was heavy or light-weight champion of the ring in 1915? When we look back over newspaper files of a hundred, fifty, fifteen, years ago, most of the names appearing most frequently and prominently are strange to us or awaken dim memories. The immortals of the last nineteen hundred years—persons whose names and work are familiar throughout civilization—are hardly more than a hundred of all the billions who have lived and died in that time; and some of these are immortally infamous.

"Fret not thyself because of the ungodly," nor because of the distinguished or conspicuous, or even the justly eminent. "Life is the verb to do," not the desire to be talked about or noticed a few days or months or years. The vast majority of us are doomed from birth to obliteration in this world, at the best to be remembered briefly by our names on tombstones, or in books, records or newspaper files which nobody will be reading in, say, the year 2000. It is what we do that will live on the earth and after the earth is gone and the heavens have been rolled up as a scroll. Let us be cheerfully content and hopeful and trustful in obscurity and under the sentence of oblivion. The humblest and poorest and least known of us may do or say tomorrow something that will be yielding good fruit for the will of God and the blessing of humanity centuries hence. Much of the piety, the real achievement, the righteousness and nobility, of today originated with the words or deeds of men or women of centuries ago who are long since forgotten; and much of the evil of now comes from roots planted further back than any of us know. It is what we do that will live while we are destined to go hence and be forgotten here. And while we are doing we may laugh, charitably and good humoredly and pityingly, at the multitudes striving, by fair means and foul, by soul racking, nerve straining, labor, or by ostentation, folly, absurdities, affectation, extravagances, villainies to be noticed and advertised.

Alfred B. Williams.

WHERE THERE IS NO VISION

Reverend C. Leslie Glenn

Secretary for College Work in the Department of Religious Education of the National Council.

RELIGIOUS conditions in the American Colleges are more alarming than most people suspect. Visitors to our colleges see them at Commencement time when an inspiring religious service, or at least an invocation and a blessing, are part of the proper order of events; Bishops and prominent clergymen always can get a hearing and awaken student interest; parents whose sons and daughters return for the brief holidays do not find any particular difficulty in taking them to church on Sunday morning. College religion is sometimes judged by these occasions, and its more normal aspect never studied. Rumors do occasionally reach the outside world of a complete absence of church attendance, except where it is compulsory, of a general lack of interest in the missionary enterprise, except in the less sophisticated colleges, and of an amazing idealism that scorns almost all forms of organized religion. In general, however, people are not alive to the seriousness of the problem.

It is dangerous to generalize because there are notable exceptions to everything that could be said, but certain facts stand out and certain results in the Church's life are clearly seen from the present college situation.

To begin with, conditions vary widely. One is apt to find, for example, a large college which has never heard of companionate marriage. In some parts of the South, church attendance is almost a habit. Here the Church seems to flourish in a community that welcomes it, which is quite the opposite of the situation in the Northwest. There is in many places a conventional Christianity which never touches student morals at such points as cheating in examinations, fraternity politics and dirty athletics, as contrasted in other places with an intense moral earnestness that rather looks down on religion as being sentimental. A group of outstanding students writing a Christian Creed for Students left out all mention of the Church because they felt, as one of them put it, that "there was more of Christ's spirit in the Labor Movement than in the Church".

In contrast to this, another group of students said that they did not like to go to conferences of the Student Christian Movement, where all that was discussed was war and peace, industrial relations, and campus ethics, but preferred to attend Church conferences where they learned songs and had a good time and saw Bishops and other clergy in a more informal way. (This was said in all seriousness.) Students vary, as do people outside of college, depending upon their religious leadership.

The important fact is that there is no religious leadership in the colleges themselves, with few exceptions. Whatever may have been the religious impulses that led to the founding of the great Eastern colleges, they have long ceased to play any important part in the policy of the colleges. Faculties, for the most part, are apt to be anti-Christian in the field of psychology, sociology and philosophy. There is even at times a mild persecution, as for example, that of a Professor of Psychology who threatened with failure in his course any girl who cut her class to go to a Good Friday three-hour service. No girl cared especially about going to the service, and they regarded as rather silly the attempt to keep them away.

Disloyalty to God.

A girl writes to a friend: "In Sociology today, I wrote a page and a half of exactly what I do not believe. I gave in order the reasons why religion is a destructive factor in the advancement of moral standards: 1, It holds to ancient, traditional and outworn codes. 2, It excludes scientific enlightenment. 3, It forbids individual liberty. 4, It binds people together by emotional bonds which leave no place for reason. . . For last week I got ninety-one for saying that religion is a glorified form of magic. Is this disloyal to God?"

This is an example of the anti-religious point of view that many students must memorize and on which they must pass examinations. There is nothing wrong with it, since it represents the sincere conviction of the professor, and the college is fearlessly open to all points of view. The solution is not to forbid this, to teach only the Christian point of view, and to return to obscurantist education. The solution is to give the Church a fair opportunity to present its answer to these questions. Students ought to face all the facts, and the difficulty today is, that the Christian facts and philosophy are not being presented along with those against them. Because the Church is not effectively represented on our college campuses, students do not have an opportunity to consider all of the facts of life. They are not being challenged by Christianity.

The tragedy of the present situation is that there are not enough men and women on our campuses who really are facing undergraduates with the implications of the Gospel. There is not enough sacrificial living which owes its motive to Christ, and students do not see what He means for them. "How shall they believe in Him of whom they have not heard?"

In our Church, there is an average of one full-time clergyman on the campuses for every five hundred and seventy-four students. This means that each one is expected to reach twice as many people as the average parish priest, in a field which is more difficult, since people are not bound by family ties. There are twenty-six colleges having over one hundred Church students in which no work at all is done.

Outstanding Men Needed.

It should be said, in this connection that student work requires an outstanding man. No program or machinery or plant will make up for a man. It may be possible in a parish to work without inspiring leadership, but with students it cannot be done. They see things either black or white—there is no gray. A parish may survive a mediocre man, because its families are rooted in the soil, and there is a love for a Church that can outlive the incumbency of a rector, but this is not true in student work.

In student work, the Church is reduced to the essentials of the Gospel. The appeal must primarily be a religious one. The paraphernalia of the Church has no attraction, as the Church has learned at great expense. Dormitories are built and it is found that Episcopal students don't care anything more about living together than do red-haired students; recreational centers are built and it is found that Church students would just as soon play on the Y. M. C. A. pool table as on the Episcopal pool table; it is hoped that the erection of more beautiful church edifices will draw the students, and yet some of the oldest colleges in the East are surrounded by lovely Church buildings, empty of students. Nothing can be done without a person plus God.

Men and women, consecrated personalities, are the one essential factor in student work. Whether as president of a college, as a professor, as rector of the local church, the quality of the life in contact with the students is the only thing that counts.

There is an inspiring group of such people in the Church's student work, but they are hopelessly in the minority. The religious condition in our colleges is a direct result of the smallness of this group and the failure of the Church to make possible a larger number of workers.

The full effect of the Church's lack of effort in the colleges is not yet seen. One hears on every side from Christian faculty members and from others in touch with the colleges, that the results will be more drastic than any one can realize. The president of one of our Church Colleges says that the Episcopal Church today is being supported by men whose sons and grandsons don't care a snap of their fingers about it.

It may well be asked what will be the attitude of the graduates of our women's colleges. The tone in them is more agnostic and more critical of religious institutions than it is in the men's colleges. Will the increased numbers of educated women mean that the higher proportion of women in the Church will be reduced? What of the great Teachers' Colleges all over the country out of which are coming the Public School teachers of the next generation?

One result which is already clear is the quality and quantity of candidates for the ministry. Only two of the Church Seminaries are full. Of the men in the Seminaries this year, only two-thirds have college degrees. Less than two-thirds were brought up in our Church. Less than four per cent of them went to Church Schools, and this is not the fault of the schools, but of the colleges to which their graduates go afterwards.

The slight influences of the religious work at the colleges in sending men into the ministry is shown by the fact that only fifteen per cent of them decided to enter the ministry while at college. In a day when nearly every man can go to college if he wants to, eighty-five per cent of the Church's ministry is thus being recruited from sources outside the colleges, because in the colleges there is no challenge to full-time Christian service.

Perhaps those students who lose their faith in college come back to the Church afterwards, but it is generally a long time afterwards, when their children are old enough to go to Church School and some one must bring them. Can the Church afford to wait until they return? Doesn't the Church need men between the ages of eighteen and thirty-five? It does not have many college men between those ages. The young college graduate, who is just beginning his business or professional career, is not the most active member of our home parishes. It is because the Church has lost him in college.

It is time that the Church stopped this waste of young life. It is conceivable that it may some day be too late. The Church can not permanently go on with the enormous loss that occurs each year in the communicant list at the college age. It is a race with catastrophe.

It is time that Church people insisted that the Church minister to their sons and daughters at college. Working with students is not impossible. We need not be resigned to the loss of the majority of those who attend college. We may well hope to hold them if only we care enough to go with them.

The religious situation in our colleges is alarming today because we have not gone with them; because there is no challenge. Students don't hear the word that they are ready to respond to, the demand of the Master for their lives.—The Spirit of Missions.

SHORT FAMILY PRAYERS

Reverend Joshua Peterkin, D. D.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

O GOD, our Father, look down upon us this morning in mercy and love. We pray Thee to fill our hearts with thankfulness for all blessings, especially for the redemption of the world by our Lord Jesus Christ. And we beseech Thee give us that due sense of all Thy mercies, that we may show forth Thy praise not only with our lips but in our lives, by giving up ourselves to Thy service, and by walking before Thee in holiness and righteousness all our days.

We pray Thee, O Lord, to bless us during the day now begun. Teach us to live as true disciples of Christ, desiring to do His will, and to follow His example in all things. May Thy word be our counsellor and guide. May we continue in Thy fear all the day long. May we have grace to deny ourselves and to take up our cross and follow our blessed Master. Suffer us not by any carelessness of conduct to bring reproach upon our Christian profesison. May we go about doing good, and be useful to all around us as we have opportunity.

We beseech Thee to look favorably upon our country. Guide those in authority, and give them true wisdom. Make us a happy people, fearing and loving Thee. Give unto Thy Son the heathen for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for His possession. Bless Thy servants who are gone forth into distant lands to proclaim the message of salvation. Endue them with Thy Holy Spirit; prosper them in all their labours, and give them many souls as their reward.

And O, Thou Lord of the harvest, we pray Thee to send forth more laborers into Thy harvest. Enable them both to sow the seed and reap the fruit of their labours.

And now, O Heavenly Father, as Thou hast promised to hear the prayers of those who ask in Thy Son's name, fulfill the desires of Thy servants as may be most expedient for us, granting us in this world knowledge of Thy truth, and in the world to come life everlasting. Amen.

Our Father, &c.
The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, &c.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

Almighty and most merciful God, we are sure that Thou dost know all things and understand the secrets of every heart. We pray Thee, therefore, to grant unto us such blessings as Thou seest we chiefly need.

We beseech Thee to bring our minds into full obedience to the Gospel of Christ. Take away from us all ignorance and hardness of heart, all undue love of this present world, and all evil and inordinate desires.

May we humble ourselves as little children in Thy sight, and receive in simplicity and sincerity all the teachings of Thy holy word. May we be patient and contented, thankful for every mercy; and may we desire, above all things, the continuance of Thy favour. Make us sincere in our speech, strict in our integrity, faithful in every trust, and diligent in every duty.

May we have such knowledge of our infirmities that we may the more patiently bear with the infirmities of others; and may we have courage to exhort one another daily, lest any of us be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin.

And now, O Lord, wherever we have failed this day in the performance of our duty, we humbly implore Thy pardon in the name of Jesus Christ. We ask also the assistance of Thy Holy Spirit, that we may be kept by the power of God, through faith, unto salvation.

Take us under Thy protection this night. May the promises of the Gospel be our consolation, in our lying down, and in our rising up; and under the influence of a good hope, through grace, may our hearts ever be filled with thankfulness and our lips with praise.

We ask every blessing in the name of Jesus Christ, our only Mediator and Redeemer. Amen.

Our Father, &c.
The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, &c.

THE SURRENDERED LIFE---IN CHRIST

Conducted by the Reverend Frank Cox

PROFESSOR ERNEST SELLIN, the great archaeologist of Berlin University, said recently to a scholarly friend as together they were examining the buried records of Palestine: "As we examine together these buried records of Bible truth it is as if I heard a voice that sayeth, 'The Word of God endureth forever'."

This is a hopeful sign. For some time the leaders of the Christian forces in too many places have been uncertain as to their basis of authority. The leaders of a past day had no such uncertainty. They may have felt their own unworthiness, but underneath they felt buoyed by the Eternal Word of God that could not fail. With the Word as a standing ground they could move the world. Today, on the contrary, many Christian leaders are advocating a change of front with every shifting wind of human opinion. Man's thought is to become the arbiter. We must adjust our message to meet the appeal of the modern mind. The tragedy of that idea is that while the Word of the Lord will not suffer, the people, who have been led away from it, will.

Some even go as far as to suggest that we make Experience the basis of our authority. What an authority! Changing, shifting experience, never the same! What bitter awakening awaits the man who makes such shifting sand the foundation of his life.

Whenever men are driven back to bed-rock fact they turn to the Word of God, and whenever we come in contact with fact we find that it never contradicts the Word. These buried cities, good, cold facts are changing the unfettered speculation that passed as historical criticism of the Bible not so long ago. Man's fine-spun theories about the Scripture receive hard usage at the hands of these facts out of the past, but the Scripture emerges with undimmed lustre. Another archaeologist, writing a few years ago in a secular magazine, announced that not one discovery had disturbed the Bible and that he for his part did not believe that one ever would.

So when calamity overwhelms and when the dreams that men have built up of their own self-sufficiency and greatness lie humbled in the dust, then the forgotten Scripture speaks to the heart with a new authority. After all, a humbled and contrite heart is of more value in Bible study than the sharpest brain. The heart often sees what the head forgets.

It is well enough for men in the day of their prosperity to bow the Bible out of court and to pretend to tell it just how it may go, but God has more than once written history in the dust. Proud races have passed but the Word of our God endures. We find that true in a chastened Germany. These men who fondly imagined the possibility of a German Bible to take the place of their father's stay are silent, and the wiser have seen the light, and are returning to the Word of God.

It is so when the man has gotten down to the bed-rock facts of his own life, when with defeat staring him in the face, or unconquered habits taking their toll of his life unchecked, that he comes to feel the real value of the Book. When he comes to the place where self-righteousness lies shattered, and he knows himself to be "chief of sinners", then the promises of God's Word break forth with new life. Other things may alter, sin remains. The same foul things that haunted men when the Pyramids were new, are troubling them today. God's Word remains the only book that can deal with sin. "I, even I, am He that blotteth out, as a cloud thy sin, and as a thick cloud thy transgression."

That we may be strong, let us return to the foundation on which our fathers built. Then once more we may expect to see the enemy being scattered like chaff.

The seas shall waste, the skies to smoke decay,
Rocks fall to dust and mountains melt away,
But fixed His Word, His saving power remains,
Thy truth shall last, Thine Own Messiah reign.

THE TRUE CHURCH

By the Right Reverend J. C. Ryle, D. D.

I WANT you to belong to the one true Church: to the Church outside of which there is no salvation. I do not ask where you go on a Sunday; only ask, "Do you belong to the one true Church?"

Where is this one true Church? What is this one true Church like? What are the marks by which this one true Church may be known? You may well ask such questions. Give me your attention, and I will provide you with some answers.

The one true Church is composed of all believers in the Lord Jesus. It is made up of all God's elect—of all converted men and women—of all true Christians. In whomsoever we can discern the election of God the Father, the sprinkling of the blood of God the Son, the sanctifying work of God the Spirit, in that person we see a member of Christ's true Church.

It is a Church of which all the members have the same marks. They are all born again of the Spirit; they all possess "repentance towards God, faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ", and holiness of life and conversation. They all hate sin, and they all love Christ. They worship differently, and after various fashions; some worship with a form of prayer, and some with none; some worship kneeling, and some standing; but they all worship with one heart. They are all led by one Spirit; they all build upon one foundation; they all draw their religion from one single book—that is the Bible. They are all joined to one great centre—that is Jesus Christ. They all even now can say with one heart, "Hallelujah"; and they can all respond with one heart and voice, Amen and Amen.

It is a Church which is dependent upon no ministers upon earth, however much it values those who preach the Gospel to its members. The life of its members does not hang upon Church-membership, and baptism and the Lord's Supper—although they highly value these things, when they are to be had. But it has only one Great Head—one Shepherd, one chief Bishop—and that is Jesus Christ. He alone, by His Spirit, admits the members of this Church, though ministers may show the door. Till He opens the door no man on earth can open it—neither bishops, nor presbyters, nor convocations, nor synods. Once let a man repent and believe the Gospel, and that moment he becomes a member of this Church. Like the penitent thief, he may have no opportunity of being baptized; but he has that which is far better than any water-baptism—the baptism of the Spirit. He may not be able to receive the bread and wine in the Lord's Supper; but he eats Christ's body and drinks Christ's blood by faith every day he lives, and no minister on earth can prevent him. He may be excommunicated by ordained men, and cut off from the outward ordinances of the professing Church; but all the ordained men in the world cannot shut him out of the true Church.

It is a Church whose existence does not depend on forms, ceremonies, cathedrals, churches, chapels, pulpits, fonts, vestments, organs, endowments, money, kings, governments, magistrates or any act of favour whatsoever from the hand of man. It has often lived on and continued when all these things have been taken from it; it has often been driven into the wilderness or into dens and caves of the earth, by those who ought to have been its friends. Its existence depends on nothing but the presence of Christ and His Spirit; and they being ever with it, the Church cannot die.

This is the Church to which the Scriptural titles of present honor and privilege, and the promises of future glory especially belong; this is the body of Christ; this is the flock of Christ; this is the household of faith and the family of God; this is God's building, God's foundation, and the temple of the Holy Ghost. This is the Church of the first-born, whose names are written in heaven; this is the royal priesthood, the chosen generation, the peculiar people, the purchased possession, the habitation of God, the light of the world, the salt and the wheat of the earth; this is the "Holy Catholic Church" of the Apostle's Creed; this is the "One Catholic and Apostolic Church" of the Nicene Creed; this is that Church to which the Lord Jesus promises "the gates of hell shall not prevail against it", and to which He says, "I am with you always, even unto the end of the world" (Matt. 16:18: 28, 20).

This is the only Church which possesses true unity. Its members are entirely agreed on all the weightier matters of religion, for they are all taught by one spirit. About God, and Christ, and the Spirit, and sin, and their own hearts, and faith, and repentance, and necessity of holiness, and the value of the Bible, and the importance of prayer, and the resurrection, and judgment to come—about all these points they are of one mind. Take three or four of them, strangers to one another, from the remotest corners of the earth; examine them separately on these points: you will find them all of one judgment.

This is the only Church which possesses true sanctity. Its members are all holy. They are not merely holy by profession, holy in name, and holy in the judgment of charity; they are all holy in act, and deed, and reality, and life and truth. They are all more or less conformed to the image of Jesus Christ. No unholy man belongs to this Church.

This is the only Church which is truly catholic. It is not the Church of any one nation or people: its members are to be found in every part of the world where the Gospel is received and believed. It is not confined within the limits of any one country, or pent up within the pale of any particular forms or outward government. In it there is no difference between Jew and Greek, black man and white, Episcopalian and Presbyterian—but faith in Christ is all. Its members will be gathered from north, and south, and east, and west, in the last day, and will be of every name and tongue—but all one in Jesus Christ.

This is the only Church which is truly apostolic. It is built on the foundation laid by the Apostles, and holds the doctrines which they preached. The two grand objects at which its members aim, are apostolic faith and apostolic practice; and they consider the man who talks of following the Apostles without possessing these two things to be no better than sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal.

This is the only Church which is certain to endure unto the end. Nothing can altogether overthrow and destroy it. Its members may be persecuted, oppressed, imprisoned, beaten, beheaded, burned; but the true Church is never altogether extinguished; it rises again from its afflictions; it lives on through fire and water. When crushed in one land it springs up in another. The Pharaohs, the Herods, the Neros, the Bloody Marys, have labored in vain to put down this Church; they slay their thousands, and then pass away and go to their own place. The true Church outlives them all and sees them buried each in his turn. It is an anvil that has broken many a hammer in this world, and will break many a hammer still; it is a bush which is often burning, and yet is not consumed.

This is the only Church of which no one member can perish. Once enrolled in the lists of this Church, sinners are safe for eternity; they are never cast away. The election of God the Father, the continual intercession of God the Son, the daily renewing and sanctifying power of God the Holy Ghost, surround and fence them in like a garden enclosed. Not one bone of Christ's mystical body shall ever be broken; not one lamb of Christ's flock shall ever be plucked out of His hand.

This is the Church which does the work of Christ upon earth. Its members are a little flock, and few in number compared with the children of the world; one or two here, and two or three there—a few in this parish and a few in that. But these are they who shake the universe; these are they who change the fortunes of kingdoms by their prayers; these are they who are the active workers for spreading the knowledge of pure religion and undefiled; these are the life-blood of a country, the shield, the defence, the stay, and the support of any nation to which they belong.

This is the Church which shall be truly glorious at the end. When all earthly glory is passed away then shall this Church be presented without spot before God the Father's throne. Thrones, principalities, and powers upon earth shall come to nothing; dignities and offices, and endowments shall all pass away; but the Church of the first-born shall shine as the stars at the last, and be presented with joy before the Father's throne, in the day of Christ's appearing. When the Lord's Jewels are made up, and the manifestation of the sons of God takes place, episcopacy, and presbyterianism, and congregationalism will not be mentioned; one Church only will be named, and that is the Church of the elect.

Reader, this is the true Church to which a man must belong, if he would be saved. Till you belong to this, you are nothing better than a lost soul. You may have the form, the husk, the skin, and the shell of religion, but you have not got the substance and the life. Yes; you may have countless outward privileges; you may enjoy great light, and knowledge—but if you do not belong to the body of Christ, your life, and knowledge, and privileges, will not save your soul. Alas, for the ignorance that prevails on this point! Men fancy if they join this Church or that Church, and become communicants, and go through certain forms, that all must be right with their souls. It is an utter delusion; it is a gross mistake. All were not Israel who were called Israel, and all are not members of Christ's body who profess themselves Christian. Take notice, you may be a staunch Episcopalian, or Presbyterian, or Independent, or Baptist, or Wesleyan, or Plymouth Brother—and yet not belong to the true Church. And if you do not, it will be better at last if you had never been born.—Copy of leaflet first published in Madras, India. For additional copies, address H. E. A. # PLAIN BIBLE STUDIES

Prepared by J. T. Bougher. Reading Terminal, Philadelphia, Pa.

Note: In this new series of studies effort will be made to set forth in brief form wondrous things that God would have us know as told in His own eternal words.

Lesson No. 40.
Topic: THE CHRISTIAN'S SERVICE.
(Read Rom. 12:1-21.)

After becoming a Christian through being born again, into the family of God there are three duties that should never be neglected. First, Feasting upon the Word; second, communing often with the Lord; third, being a true and faithful Ambassador for Christ.

The first two are essential for spiritual growth and qualification for service, while the third is not only a happy duty, but the highest privilege that can come to the believer while occupying the house of his or her earthly pilgrimage. To be a true Ambassador for Christ involves various forms of Christian service, but more directly the salvation of precious souls (2 Cor. 5:17-20). The Holy Spirit extends to every believer a gift for service in some form, "for all have not the same gift", and all about us are opportunities to exercise these gifts to the glory of our Redeemer.

The slightest act or word at times, like the pebble cast into the pond and sending its ripples to the farther shore, God can expand into waves of motion that shall roll on through eternity. As there may be those among our readers who long to serve their Lord, but have not been clear as to just where to start, we list below a few ways in which the Lord's people may be used, and while immediate results may not always be seen the harvest of our seed sowing can always be safely left to time and eternity. Even a cup of cold water given in the name of our Lord does not escape His notice and shall have its reward (Mark 9:4-1).

1. Be a faithful witness. God often uses a faithful witness even in lonely places. "Ye are my witnesses."
2. Start a small Bible study class in your own home. Work of this kind is attended by special blessings.
3. Purchase a supply of Gospels of St. John and distribute them. Your name on the fly-leaf may bring in precious echoes later on.
4. Obtain a supply of choice tracts, and enclose with your letters.
5. Start a brief Gospel service some Sunday afternoon in summer in the open air.
6. Ask your pastor what you can do to aid him in his labor for lost souls.
7. Ask those about you if they are saved (Rom. 10:9).

The writer knows of many instances where there have been marvelous results from each of the above simple methods of activity. Start something today, for Christ and eternity, "for the night cometh when no man can work".

As previously announced this fortieth lesson concludes the series of Plain Bible Studies by Mr. J. T. Bougher, which have now run their course and which we hope to reproduce shortly in pamphlet form to meet the call.

In our next issue will commence a series of Bible Studies by Mr. W. W. Pugh, Associate Dean of the Bible Institute of Pennsylvania located at 1418 North Sixteenth Street, Philadelphia

THIRD SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY

By Berkeley Minor

COLLECT.

O Lord, we beseech Thee mercifully to hear us, and grant that we, to whom Thou hast given a hearty desire to pray, may, by Thy mighty aid, be defended and comforted in all dangers and adversities; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THIS collect lacks the first part, the attribute, the second part, the address being simply "O Lord"; the third part, the ascription, being included in the petition, the fourth part. This address, "O Lord", is evidently to God the Father, or God the Holy Ghost, as is shown by the mediation (the fifth part), "through Jesus Christ our Lord". And it may be addressed to God the Holy Ghost, for the ascription, to "whom Thou hast given a hearty desire to pray", speaks of the special work of the Holy Spirit in our hearts. We can hardly over-estimate the value of this "hearty desire to pray" in giving force to our petitions to our Heavenly Father, and in rendering possible that nearness to the mercy-seat and to God Himself, without which our prayers must fail of their chief object, the strengthening and refreshing of the earnest soul, seeking close communion with a merciful and loving Father.

Many betake themselves to prayer for material blessings in time of great need, and trouble, having a hearty desire for the things they need, (or think they need) most. They come with a hearty desire that God may give them what they want, rather than what they really need, which He knows far better than they can know, with their limited, finite vision, and so fail to realize and get the real blessing, the chief blessing of prayer, the complete submission of their wills to His will.

With this full acquiescence in His wisdom and willingness to give us much more than we ask or think, comes "peace, perfect peace", whether the specific thing asked for be granted or not. One of the best helps to prayer is old John Newton's hymn:

"Come, my soul, thy suit prepare,
Jesus loves to answer prayer;
He Himself has bid thee pray,
Therefore will not say thee nay."

I have often used this hymn as preface to prayer in my closet, as well-fitted to place me in the right frame of mind with which to come to the mercy seat. This "hearty desire to pray" is certainly the gift of the Holy Spirit, who prompts it in our hearts; yet it is also much prompted by any reasonable consideration of the willingness and ability to give, of Him who is "the Author and Giver of all good things", and "from whom cometh every good and perfect gift", and "who spared not His own Son, but delivered Him up for us all; how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things"?

The Bible is full of such declarations and promises, and this "hearty desire to pray" would oftener come to us if we would use a concordance and look out some of the many texts, bearing on this subject. "Gift" and "Give" and "Giver", and "Good", furnish a large number of such. A prayerful consideration of even a few of these will help us much in getting into a right frame of mind with which to approach Him who is able and willing to give far more than we can either desire or deserve. The uppermost thought in the mind of one who comes to God in prayer, with hearty desire to pray, is of the burden of sin. The Church teaches this in her formulas generally and especially in the General Confession, placed first, at Morning and Evening Prayer.

Heaven is doubtless a place of active employment, most cheerfully and happily done in His service, and under His guidance; but to our wearied bodies and souls here on earth the promise of rest and "perfect peace", often becomes one of the most precious of the many He has given us, when we "labor and are heavy laden". The following verse well expresses the chief feeling of every soul gifted by the Holy Spirit with this "desire to pray":

O, wondrous love, to bleed and die,
"To bear the cross and shame,
That guilty sinners such as I Might plead Thy gracious name."

THE Epistle for the Third Sunday after Trinity is 1 Peter 5:12 and suits well the petition of the collect, that "by Thy mighty aid we may be defended and comforted in all dangers and adversaries"; for in it St. Peter urges the necessity of being "clothed with humility", all pride and selfsufficiency being cast aside, if we hope in due time to be exalted, that is, delivered from, and exalted above, the wiles of our adversary, the devil, who as a "roaring lion walketh about seeking whom he may devour".

The Epistle begins in the middle of a verse, and loses something of its force in the chapter where it stands, closely connected with previous verses. In these previous verses Peter has been urging this virtue of humility on the elders, who are not to be "Lords over God's heritage, but ensamples to the flock"; then the fifth verse begins, "Likewise ye younger, submit yourselves unto the elder, yea, all of you be subject one to another and be clothed with humility". So many fail to attain to this humility, so becoming to the Christian who recognizes himself as "under the mighty hand of God", and so common is that pride which Peter here declares that God resisteth, that the "pride which apes humility" has become a proverb, and a common theme of satire and ridicule.

Few portions of Scripture have furnished more texts for sermons than these five verses and a fraction in this Epistle. Let us briefly consider some of them not already noted by us:

"Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that He may exalt you in due time: casting all your care upon Him, for He careth for you." The Christian who has been enabled by divine grace to obey this command of Peter has found out the true secret of happiness in the Christian life. I suppose from my own experience and observation that no Christian has ever succeeded in casting all his care on Him who cares so much for us, nor ever will; for that would make a heaven upon earth; but surely the more nearly he approximates to obedience in this, the happier he must be. If we could have perfect faith in Him, we should be entirely free from care, as Jesus bids us do in the Sermon on the Mount, "Be not anxious for the morrow". Care in the sense of a burden, however, is not inconsistent with perfect faith in Him, who, by the Holy Spirit, speaking through the mouth of Paul bids us, "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ", and again, "For every man shall bear his own burden". We may and must "fulfil the law of Christ", by bearing one another's burdens; though there are some burdens which in this vale of tears and sin each one must carry for himself. Others' anxieties we cannot take from them; only Christ can do that, in His infinite love and tenderness.

The reason the Christian must bear some burdens here in this valley of Baca is well shown in Parson Dale's sermon, given in Bulwer's "My Novel". The text is: "For every man shall bear his own burden," and the sermon begins thus: "Brethren, every man has his burden. If God designed our lives to end at the grave, may we not believe that He would have freed an existence so brief from the cares and sorrows to which, since the beginning of the world, mankind has been subjected? Suppose that I am a kind father, and have a child whom I dearly love, but I know by a divine revelation that he will die at eight years, surely I should not vex his infancy by needless preparations for the duties of life. If I am a rich man, I should not send him from the caresses of his mother to the stern discipline of school. If I am a poor man, I should not take him with me to hedge and dig, to scorch in the sun, to freeze in the winter's cold: why inflict on his childhood hardships for the purpose of fitting him for manhood, when I know that he is doomed not to grow into man? But if, on the other hand, I believe my child is reserved for a more durable existence, then should I not out of the very love I bear him, prepare his childhood for the struggle of life, according to that station to which he is born, giving him many a toil, many a pain to the infant in order to rear and strengthen him for his duties as man? So it is with our Father that is in heaven. Viewing this life as our infancy, and the next as our spiritual maturity, where in the ages to come He may show the exceeding riches of His grace, it is in His tenderness as in His wisdom, to permit the toil and the pain which in tasking the powers and developing the virtues of the soul, prepare it for the earnest of our inheritance. Hence it is that every man has his burden. Brethren, if you believe that God is good, yea, but as tender as a human father, you will know that your troubles in life are a proof that you are reared for an eternity." Later on in the sermon the Parson takes up the text, the other text, bearing on this subject of burden bearing: "Every man shall bear his own burden." "True (says the Parson), but now turn to an earlier verse in the same chapter: "Bear ye one another's burden, and so fulfil the law of Christ". Yes, while heaven ordains to each his peculiar suffering, it connects the family of man into one household by that feeling which, more perhaps than any other, distinguishes us from the brute creation—I mean the feeling to which we give the name of sympathy, the feeling for (or rather with) each other. The herd of deer shun the stag, that is marked by the gunner; the flock heedeth not the sheep that creeps into the shade to die; but man has sorrow and joy not in himself alone, but in the joy and sorrow of those around him. He who feels only for himself abjures his very nature as man; for do we not say of one who has no tenderness for mankind that he is inhuman? And do we not call him who sorrows with the sorrowful, humane? Now, brethren, that which especially marked the divine mission of our Lord, is the direct appeal to this sympathy which distinguishes us from the brutes. He seizes, not upon some faculty of genius, given to but few, but upon that ready impulse of heart which is given to us all; and in saying, "Love one another, Bear ye one another's burdens", He elevates the most delightful of our emotions into the most sacred of His laws. The lawyer asks our Lord, Who is my neighbor? Our Lord replies by the parable of the Good Samaritan.

THE Gospel for the Third Sunday after Trinity, which is St. Luke 15:1-10, gives us two parables: "The Lost Sheep" and "The Lost Coin".

When we consider the "saved", the one out of ten in the second parable, and the one out of a hundred in the first; naturally we are led to think of the nine pieces that were not lost, and of the ninety-nine sheep that went not astray. Did Jesus intend that these should teach us anything as to the eternal destiny of those who "need no repentance"? To answer this question, we must turn to the Sermon on the Mount and read verses 13, 14, 21-23 of chapter 7 of St. Matthew. Though no proportion is given there of the lost and the saved, yet it is plain that Jesus taught that many (of those the Gospel reached) would be lost and few saved. He says plainly that many go by the wide gate and broad way to destruction and few find the straight gate and narrow way that "leadeth unto life". And so we are brought to face one of the insoluble problems of life; why in this age, as well as in past ages God has made so large a part of the human race apparently for naught. It was so in the antediluvian age, "And it repented the Lord that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved Him at His heart". And of His chosen people of Israel only a remnant are faithful, and worthy to be allowed to enter the Promised Land, and Elijah thought himself the only faithful one left that had not bowed unto Baal, and had not kissed him, and though the Lord showed him his mistake, yet He who knew the hearts of men, could tell Elijah of only 7,000 faithful ones among the many thousands of Judah and Ephraim. So on throughout the history of the Old Testament. In the New Testament it is the same story, many are called, but few chosen. Of "the chosen" how few were there found to stand by Him on that first Good Friday in Jerusalem, when nearly all, even His chosen Apostles, forsook Him and fled, and two followed Him after His arrest, but "afar off"? When at Pentecost the Church received the promised Comforter, and thousands were converted in a day, how many more thousands resisted even the power of the Holy Ghost, and persecuted the followers of Jesus, just as they had done to the Lord and Master? So it has ever been since, and is so now. Look around you and count up those who show by their conduct that they have been "born again" of the Spirit, and making full allowance for our necessarily imperfect view of the hearts of our neighbors, can we say with any certainty that even one-fourth of those who "profess and call themselves Christians really show the fruits of the Spirit? and our Lord said that "by their fruits we shall know them" (Matt. 7:20).

Evidently the problem is insoluble to us who in this life "see through a glass darkly" (in a mirror, in a riddle), "we can form no just judgment upon so limited a view. The fate of that very large majority who reject the offer of salvation through Christ, must be left in the hands of a faithful Creator. His mercy and justice will both appear, fully reconciled, in His good time. Our Lord's reply to Peter, when too curiously he asked Jesus, "Lord, and what shall this man do"? seems a mild rebuke to such inquiry as to St. John's fate: "If I will that He tarry till I come, what is that to thee? Follow thou me." This incident shows how prone we mortals be to jump to hasty conclusions on subjects of which we have too scant a view to form just judgments; for St. John says: "This saying, therefore, went forth among the brethren that the disciple (St. John) should not die; yet Jesus said not unto him that he should not die; but, if I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee"? Strange misapprehension on their part of the destiny of the beloved disciple, to whom they were unconsciously assigning the evil fate of the Wandering Jew ("Le Juif Errant"), who thus would have been separated these many centuries from Him whom he best of all loved, on whose breast he lay at the last Paschal feast.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed—"Thy word have I hid in my heart" (Psalm 119:11).

This week the following verse was submitted by Mr. Benjamin R. Phelps, of East Orange, N. J.:

> "What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them" (Mark 11:24).

Who will send one from the far-away places, as well as very near us?

THE INNER CIRCLE.

Mr. Editor:

You are right about not making any compromise when it comes to the doctrines of the Church. I have traveled a good deal, and have met many Christians of all denominations, and it appears to me that in each church, whether large or small, there is a small inner circle who live close to God, and whenever one of that inner circle meets with one of the others of the inner circle they are surprised to find how well they understand each other in spite of their differencees in point of worship. It is to the humble ones God reveals His Holy Spirit, and Christ found only twelve to whom He could entrust the founding of His Church, and there were some mysteries that even they could not understand—"Thou shalt not know now but thou shalt know hereafter".

Personally, I love our Prayer Book as it is a dignified, reverent service, but I have found many a more sacrificing Christian than I am in other churches, and some few Jews with Christian virtues, though they did not acknowledge the Master, because we do not try to convert them.

CITY MISSION SOCIETY.

Mr. Editor:

Not in many seasons has the Fresh Air Staff of this Society come down to its preparation for the summer with as many applications for country outings.

During the winter just passed the amount of unemployment has been greater than in many seasons previous. Men have come to us in desperation, never having turned to a charitable organization before for help.

In consequence, many families who have heretofore been able to provide their own vacancies, have nothing saved this year on which to draw.

And it has been only as the spring has advanced that long periods of under-feeding and deprivation have been reacting—in devastating illness. Little children have been unable to withstand the rigors of children's diseases. Mothers who have gone without things themselves, that their little ones might have food, have found the spring here and their frail bodies too weak for their burdens.

Many a wistful mother on our list has brought her little flock to us in the hope that some of them at least can have a glimpse of the country—a breath of fresh air through the kindliness of City Mission friends. Last year 1,249 mothers and children vacationed at Sarah Schermerhorn House at Milford, Conn.; at our Boys' Camp; and at Rethmore Home at Tenafly. We have places this year for 1,550, if necessary funds can be secured. It costs $17.50 to provide each two-week outing.

In view of the increased number looking to us this year, we must begin earlier to make our plans.

Help us not to disappoint these frail mothers and little children, many of whom need this interlude of change and rest so pitifully this year.

All checks should be made payable to Harry P. Robbins, Treasurer.

COMFORT.

Mr. Editor:

People need comfort! Recently bereaved, I realize it more than ever. And we not only miss our saints, but we wonder if we can ever be like them.

I gather little crumbs here and there where I find them, and I feel like passing them on.

Here is one I found today: "Neither is our Father grieved that we know so little of what consecration means in all the sweep and fullness of it. All He asks is that we give ourselves to Him as best we know.

And however stumbling, faltering and feeble our consecration may seem to us, yet if it comes from an honest, earnest, loving heart it is to Him a living sacrifice holy, acceptable."

I am reminded of the comfort the best of husbands gave me one day years ago. I had just finished embroidering some napkins. They were not much to boast of! I had been struggling for months with a nervous breakdown, and the work (put away many times and then taken up again) was uneven.

"Look! they are not much like Nelly Cherry's," I said; "see how even and perfect hers are."

"I think yours are far more beautiful than Nelly Cherry's," said my husband.

"But why? Hers are perfect."

"Yes, but hers were done for pay, and yours were done for love, they are far more beautiful to me." This benediction has been cherished through all the years. And why not apply it? Our Lord Jesus Christ has given us all a perfect gift when He said, "IT IS FINISHED", yet we can come with confidence and with love to offer Him our imperfect gifts.

Book Reviews

THE LAWS AND PRINCIPLES OF THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN: By the Rev. E. L. Hamilton, with Forewood by the Rev. J. Stuart Holden, D. D. Marshall Brothers, Lt., London. Cloth. Pp. 139. Index. Price 3/6 net.

"Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" is the challenge flung forth by this volume of striking addresses. In these pages will be found a startlingly clear, uncompromising exposition of our Lord's commands. The ineffectiveness of the Church of Christ today, due primarily, the author believes, to the failure of Christians to understand and to obey God's commands, has become a by-word. In this little book, rightly understood, we have the secret of Revival, the only hope for the world today.

E. L. W.

GOD AND COMPANY, UNLIMITED: By the Rev. Dr. Frank D. Adams. Pp. 191. Cloth. Published by The Murray Press, 176 Newbury Street, Boston, Mass. Price, $1.25.

An exceptional book. With the perspicacity of F. W. Boreham, this writer gets under the skin of things; or, as Studdert Kennedy would say, discloses "a great idea". We are all won to such a pathway; and Dr. Adams has blazed it with skill.

His contention, which we must all freely admit, is that in our dependence upon God, which is so universally emphasized, we have missed that other side of the truth, that God has need of us. Certainly, we know that there are things which God cannot do, unless He has the cooperation of mankind. No man can be saved against his will; and true service is God working in us that which is well-pleasing in His sight. Far afield was that doughty Scotch minister, who fiercely cried to William Carey, flaming with zeal to take the Gospel to India, "Sit down young man, sit down. If God wants to convert the heathen, He will do it without you." But that is just what God does not do. He waits for hands and feet, heart and mind, to manifest His graciousness to the whole wide world. The chapter, "The Kingdom by Transmutation", is vitally expressive of this divine purpose. Incidentally, this chapter betrays the author's bondage to the popular idea that Mary of Magdala was a "woman of the streets". This libel upon that pure-minded lover of our Lord will not down. Great is the pity. All Scriptural evidence, weighed in the scales of consistency, denies the traditional theory which has so long stained her name.

Many of us have found the truth which Dr. Adams is so well defining, based upon the resurrection of the Son of God, who, in Ephesians, chapters one and two, is described as Head over all things to the Church; the dynamics of His glorified and all-embracing potentiality awaiting the dedication of the members of the Body for the out-flowing of His life. Just as the physical body cannot live without the head and the head is powerless without the body as the medium of organic expression, so our Lord patiently seeks to find willing agents, bound to Him by His exalted place in the heavenlies, for the manifestation of His unlimited life. We regret Dr. Adams' missing that point.

Every writer seeks to bring his book to an alluring climax. The final words should ring with captivating conviction and commensurate enthusiasm. Our author's last chapter, singularly, though quite appropriately named, "What Remains"? is a dirge over his assumed collapse of historic Christianity, from which unknowingly he obtains the very essence of his message. Those things "most surely believed among us", treasurable for the power they have wrought in lives long agone and now blessedly known to myriads, are consigned to the scrap-heap. Certainly, Dr. Adams must have apprehended that his readers would be found far beyond the borders of his own communion (where he might expect sympathy with his iconoclasm). Surely, he could not be unmindful that his assault upon "the faith once for all delivered to the saints" would wound the hearts of many to whom his splendid message might otherwise be a blessing. Why did he fail to regard this? We may devoutly hope that a possible second edition may be issued without this disappointing chapter.

However, the discriminating reader, charitably disposed to this unwelcome conclusion, will find in the book an impulse to lofty thought and devout consecration, which according to his own position and reception may be used of the Holy Spirit for edification and service.

WESTERN NEW YORK.

The ninety-first annual convention of the diocese was held May 14-15, in Grace Church, Lockport. Our two Bishops, ninety of the Clergy entitled to seats and seventy-one of the parishes and missions (with one hundred and twenty-eight lay delegates) were present. The return to the diocese of our beloved Diocesan and the absorbing interest in the question of division undoubtedly had much to do with this unusual attendance.

The opening session on Monday evening was preceded by a Churchman's Dinner in the Masonic Temple. After dinner adjournment was made to the church where, after shortened Evensong, Bishop Brent and Bishop Ferris read Convention Addresses. Immediately after the service, the first session of Convention was held, Bishop Ferris being chosen as Chairman. The convention organized by the election of Dr. Burrows as Secretary and Dr. Smith as Assistant. Assembling at 9 A. M. Tuesday in the Church, after devotions the reading of the Minutes, the tellers reported as to the result of the first ballot and then a second ballot was taken. The Report of the Committee on proposed lines of division was then read by Rev. Mr. Davis.

In his Convention Address, Bishop Brent, while advocating division himself, had expressed a decided wish that the convention should not act favorably upon the report of the Committee unless its adoption represented at least a two-thirds vote of approval by the convention.

Late in the afternoon the Committee of the whole rose and Bishop Ferris taking the Chair, Dr. Jessup reported that after taking two ballots the decision of the Committee failed of a two-thirds vote of approval. The Convention, then, as required by the Constitution, proceeded to vote by Orders and, while the Clerical vote was more than the necessary two-thirds, it failed in the Lay vote and by motion the matter was laid on the table for future consideration. The revised edition of the Constitution and Canons (upon which a special Committee has been at work for two years) was adopted.

The Convention unanimously adopted a resolution to place itself on record as in favor of the holding of a second Conference on Faith and Order of the Church and that copies of this preamble and resolution be sent to the Secretary of the House of Bishops and to the Secretary of the House of Deputies of the General Convention, with the request that suitable action be taken, to the end that this Church may be represented in such a World Conference when it may be held.

The following were elected Deputies to General Convention: The Rev. M. Bartlett, D. D., the Rev. Chas. A. Jessup, D. D., the Rev. C. J. Davis, D. D., the Rev. Samuel Tyler, D. D., Mr. Frank B. Baird, Mr. Benj. B. Chace, M. M. Ludlow, Jr., Esq., Mr. Harper Sibley. Alternates—The Rev. W. C. Compton, the Rev. Geo. E. Norton, D. D., the Rev. J. W. D. Cooper, the Rev. C. D. Broughton, Mr. J. M. Prophet, Mr. G. H. Hawkes, Mr. G. T. Ballachey, Mr. J. K. Walker.

Deputies to Provincial Synod: The Rev. C. R. Allison, the Rev. C. D. Broughton, the Rev. G. S. Burrows, D. D., the Rev. W. C. Compton, the Rev. Jerome Kates, the Rev. A. S. Priddis, Mr. G. T. Ballachey, Mr. E. H. Boynton, Mr. Benj. B. Chase, Mr. J. M. Prophet, G. S. Tinklepaugh, Esq., Mr. G. W. Whedon. Alternates—The Rev. W. R. McKim, the Rev. E. B. Jermin, the Rev. C. E. Hill, Rev. J. R. Harding, Rev. E. B. Jermin, the Rev. C. E. Hill, the Rev. Edm. Sills, the Rev. Jno. Dennis, Mr. F. W. Crandall, Mr. M. S. Burns, Mr. G. J. Dawson, Mr. R. Dorey, Mr. J. L. Humphrey, Mr. G. F. Maltby.

IOWA.

"One of the best Conventions I ever attended." This was the general expression of delegates and visitors to the seventy-sixth annual convention of the Church in the Diocese of Iowa, held at Trinity Cathedral, Davenport, May 13, 14 and 15.

The usual pre-convention meetings of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, Girls' Friendly Society and Young People's Fellowship were held on Saturday, reaching a climax in the dinner and program of the Department of Religious Education in the evening.

Two banners are awarded each year, one for the parish having the largest attendance of Church School Workers, and the other for the parish having the largest number of Young People's Fellowship members in attendance. Both were won this year by Grace Church, Clinton (Lyons). St. John's, Clinton, were second with nine Church School Workers, and St. Luke's, Ft. Madison second in members of Young People's Fellowship with seven present. The banners were therefore awarded to Grace Church, Clinton (Lyons) for Church School Workers, and to St. Luke's, Ft. Madison, for Young People's Fellowship, Grace Church declining to take both banners.

The new plan of the Bishops delivering their annual addresses and starting the Convention on Sunday seems very satisfactory, and aids greatly in the transaction of the business of the Diocese on Monday.

In commemoration of the Seventy-fifth Anniversary of the Founding of the Diocese, a special meeting with an inspiring program was held in Trinity Cathedral Parish House on Monday evening, in charge of the Bishop of the Diocese.

In the election of officers, Mr. Charles R. Henderson, who has been Treasurer of the Diocese for many years, was re-elected by the unanimous vote of the Convention as an appreciation of his faithful work during those years. The Rev. W. Ernest Stockley was reelected Secretary, and the Rev. R. J. Campbell, the Very Rev. Marmaduke Hare, the Rev. C. F. Hinton and Messrs. C. M. Cochrane, J. K. Deming and Ira R. Tabor were elected members of the Standing Committee. On the nomination of the Bishop, the Hon. George F. Henry, LL. D., was elected Chancellor, and the Rev. Thomas Horton, Registrar. The following were elected Deputies to the General Convention: Clerical, the Very Rev. Marmaduke Hare, the Rev. Messrs. W. Ernest Stockley, Robert S. Flockhart and Gowan C. Williams; Lay, the Hon. George F. Henry and Messrs. John L. Powers, W. T. Shepherd and Dr. John W. Marsh. The Delegates elected to the Provincial Synod are: Clerical, the Rev. Messrs. L. H. Matheus, L. S. Burroughs, R. S. Flockhart, E. B. Mounsey, G. C. Williams and R. J. Campbell; Lay, Messrs. E. B. Soper, Dr. J. W. Marsh, J. K. Deming, J. L. Powers, J. A. Thompson and C. O. Lamson.

The members elected on the Bishop and Council were: Clerical, the Rev. Messrs. L. H. Matheus, L. S. Burroughs and G. C. Williams; Lay, Messrs. W. T. Shepherd, J. K. Deming and J. L. Powers.

The Rev. R. S. Flockhart was elected to fill an unexpired term on the Bishop and Council.

A resolution to change the time of of meeting of Convention from the third Sunday in January to the third Sunday in May was defeated, and the Seventy-seventh Annual Convention is to be held in St. Paul's Church, Des Moines, on the third Sunday in January, 1929.

NEW JERSEY.

The one hundred and fifty-eighth Convention of the Diocese of New Jersey was held in St. Paul's Church, Camden, May 8-9. Owing to the illness of Bishop Matthews, Bishop Knight presided. Canon Moor was elected Secretary and the Rev. Samuel Hardman, assistant secretary.

The Tuesday morning session adjourned to the front of the church for the dedication of the Church Army Van which is a gift of Bishop Matthews. Bishop Knight read the service of dedication and gave his blessing to the two men who are going forth on this Van to hold Mission services in many places, Captain James Hunt and Captain Edward Hodgkinson.

The Convention adopted resolutions that it should recognize the Laymen's Conference of the Diocese as a Laymen's Organization engaged in the work of the Church and that the Bishop be asked to appoint one of the clergymen of the Diocese as Director of the Conference under such rules.

Resolutions were also adopted in regard to plans for the observation of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the Diocese of New Jersey, and that there be a "permanent memorial" of the one hundred and fifty years of the Diocese in accordance with the suggestion of the Committee, namely—the establishment of an Anniversary Fund, the minimum of which should be $1,000,000; which fund is to be held by Special Trustees and the income from which is to be expended under the direction of the Bishop and the Cathedral Foundation.

The following deputies were elected to the General Convention: Clerical—The Rev. R. E. Brestell, the Ven. R. Bowden Shepherd, the Rev. John H. Schwacke, and the Rev. Harold Morse. Lay—Mr. Wm. F. Stroud, Mr. Frederick M. P. Pearse, Mr. Charles H. DeVoe, and Mr. James Tattersall.

The following were elected Deputies to the Synod: The Rev. Ralph E. Urban, Ven. R. Bowden Shepherd, Rev. Sam'l G. Welles, the Rev. Chas. S. Lewis, the Rev. Thos. A. Conover, the Rev. Wm. Reid Cross. Lay—Major C. M. Duncan, Mr. Wm. F. Stroud, Mr. Wm. S. F. Pierce, Mr. Charles H. DeVoe, Mr. J. C. Beatty, Mr. Charles M. Phillips.

Church Intelligence

The Church of St. Ethelburga the Virgin.

By S. H. Grover, Hudson's Bay Company, London, England.

On April 19, 1928, a ceremony of great interest took place at the Church of St. Ethelburga the Virgin in Bishopsgate. It was the occasion of the unveiling and dedication of the fine stained glass window presented to the Church by the Governor and Committee of the Hudson's Bay Company in memory of Henry Hudson, the English navigator, whose name, in virtue of his discoveries, is indissolubly connected with that of our grand old Company.

This little church—little, for it holds only about two hundred people—dates from the first half of the fifteenth century. It has passed through many stirring times in English history, and was one of the six city churches to survive the Great Fire in 1666. Further back, before the present building was erected, history is not quite clear, although there is reason to believe that a place of worship has occupied the site on which the present edifice stands since the year 1180.

On April 19, 1607, Henry Hudson with his crew received holy communion in this church before starting on his first voyage of exploration, and on April 19, of this year, three hundred and twenty-one years afterwards, the window given in his memory was unveiled.

A short service was conducted by the rector, Dr. W. F. Geikie-Cobb, after which the window was unveiled by Mr. Charles V. Sale, the Governor, who gave a concise and most interesting account of Henry Hudson's voyages. This instructive address was listened to with the greatest attention by all privileged to hear it. To members of the Company's staff who had the good fortune to be present, and to those of the fur trade department in particular, it was of peculiar interest. Some fifty years after Hudson's voyage, other pioneers, in the service of our first Royal Governor and the company of adventurers associated with him, followed in Hudson's footsteps and founded the first trading post in Hudson's Bay, bringing out the first shipload of furs to be graded and sold in London.

St. Ethelburga's Church nestles between two large buildings, one of which is our own head office. In this way, after a lapse of over three centuries, by a curious coincidence the past and the present have become the closest of neighbors.

Members of the Company's staff are proud of the fact that the window was unveiled by the Governor, as it is to his guidance that we owe the two fine buildings in London and the magnificent structures in Canadian cities, as well as recent developments in all directions of the Company's business. It seems very appropriate that to him should have fallen the honor of unveiling the window.

Interesting Experiments.

For the past four years Dr. William S. Keller of Cincinnati, has been making an interesting experiment in the training of the clergy. He gathered a small group of helpers and took a few selected seminarians for training during the summer vacation. These men, eight each summer, worked in the community agencies under the supervision of the professional workers on the same basis as any employee. In addition to this work they met twice a week for round-table discussions and to hear some authority lecture on certain technical phases of social work. The experiment has so justified itself that the National Council, through the Department of Social Service, has expanded the scope of the course this summer. Sixteen men, four from Cambridge, six from Virginia, two from Sewanee, one from General, one from Berkeley, one from Philadelphia and one from Union, will take the course this year. The object of the course is to enable the seminarian to make the technique of modern social work a part of his own equipment for pastoral work, and to give him an adequate conception of what resources he has at his command for the betterment of his community.

Another experiment is to be tried in New York. Seven men, three from General, two from Cambridge, and one each from Berkeley and Virginia, will take the regular summer-quarter work in the New York School of Social Work. From a comparison of the results of these two experiments, the Department of Social Service hopes eventually to work out an adequate method of training the clergy for a larger usefulness under modern conditions. The problem is how to put at the disposal of the clergyman the results of the best research in psychology, sociology and the allied fields of human relations, in such a way that he can use them. These two courses are attempts to find an answer to the problem.

Convocation of the American Churches in Europe.

The Convocation of the American Churches in Europe was held in the Guild Hall of the American Cathedral Church of the Holy Trinity, May 29.

Previous to the opening session, the Holy Eucharist was celebrated by Bishop Lawrence, assisted by the Rev. Dr. Beekman and the Rev. Everett P. Smith.

After the service, Bishop Lawrence addressed the clergy, lay delegates and a goodly number of the parishioners, urging, by aid of the Holy Spirit a greater effort of service to the accomplishment of the work of the American Churches in Europe.

It was an inspiring address, delivered in the Bishop's quiet but forceful manner, and most helpful, as all present felt that they were listening to one who understood their needs, difficulties, and sympathies with the efforts of the clergy in caring for Americans in a foreign country, their sole reason for being here, and promoting friendly relations with other Communions.

In regard to our having a permanent Bishop, all members of the Convocation are perfectly sure that Bishop Lawrence will present our case clearly before the Presiding Bishop and General Convention in October.

The session began at 11 A. M., with prayer followed by the regular order of business, the most important features of which are the following:

As clerical members: Dr. Beekman, the Rev. John M. Page, the Rev. Everett P. Smith, the Rev. Killian A. Stimpson were elected on the Council of Advice, the lay members being: Mr. Herbert L. Kean, Mr. F. G. Fenton, Mr. Charles B. Curtis, Mr. F. B. Keene, of Rome.

After the adjournment of the morning session the delegates were invited to lunch by the Dean and Vestry of Holy Trinity at the Hotel George V.

The afternoon session was taken up largely with five-minute talks by each of the clergy on work done in their respective parishes, and discussion of Administration of the Churches in Europe.

In regard to the latter, after much discussion, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the members of this Convocation reaffirm their belief that the principles of our Memorial of the year 1922, repeated in 1924, and presented to the General Convention in 1925 still hold good; and we are convinced that the continued supervision of the situation in Europe by a Bishop of wide sympathies and hopes for Church Unity is needed, giving full-time or, if the General Convention feels that the plan of our Memorial has not as yet been fully tested, we urge that the outstanding character of a Bishop of special qualifications is the most important factor to be considered.

The following resolution, offered by the Rev. R. H. Wadleigh, was also adopted:

Resolved, That this Convocation recommends to the rectors of the nine churches a careful study of the reasons for and against the use of intinction.

After the close of the session, tea was served in the Deanery.

The Company of Candidates in Waiting: Church Army Looking to Youth.

So frequently in their work up and down the different Dioceses the Officers of the Church Army meet youths to whom the adventure of Pioneer Evangelism strongly appears, that there has been called into existence a Sub-Department to be known as The Company of Candidates in Waiting. This Company consists of Confirmed youths, but who are as yet too young to enter the Church Army Training Centre. Captain C. J. Atkinson is the Secretary of this Group, and he will be glad to hear from Clergy, and Leaders of work amongst youths, Y. P. F.'s, and Junior Chapters of St. Andrews Brotherhood of suitable candidates.

The lads will be guided in their reading, and encouraged in Church activities, with a view to them either becoming Church Army Evangelists, or Candidates for Holy Orders. There are no fees or subscriptions, and inquiries concerning this should be addressed to Diocesan House, 416 Lafayette Street, New York City.

Brazil.

The Thirtieth Council of the Brazilian Church met in the city of Rio Grande, April 19-22, and was attended by twenty clerical and four lay delegates. The meetings were held at the Church of the Saviour in the beautiful Parish Hall, which was completed last year.

Of the many important results of the Council, two deserve special mention. The Brazilian Church has been handicapped by a lack of Prayer Books, as the old edition of the Prayer Book was exhausted six years ago. A commission was appointed to revise the language of the old Prayer Book and publish a new edition as soon as possible. Within the next few years, a more comprehensive revision will be undertaken. The Missionary Society of the Brazilian Church announced its intention of increasing its activities. Heretofore, the Society has supported a Japanese catechist in the State of Sao Paulo and paid the expenses of one student at the Theological Seminary in Porto Alegre. In the future, it will also aid in the preparation of teachers for rural schools and will undertake the establishment of missions among the Indians living in the forests of the State of Rio Grande do Sul. This ambitious program is indicative of the rapidly increasing strength of the Brazilian Episcopal Church.

On Council Sunday, Bishop Thomas advanced to the priesthood the Rev. Euclydes Deslandes and the Rev. Iassoje Ito. A brilliant sermon for the occasion was preached by the Rev. Solomao Ferraz. The Rev. E. Deslandes is rector of St. Paul's Church, Rio de Janeiro, and also the national chaplain of the Evangelical Boy Scouts of Brazil. The Rev. Ito is in charge of the Japanese Mission in the State of Sao Paulo. The astounding growth of this Mission bears witness to the consecrated and self-sacrificing labors of the Rev. Mr. Ito among his fellow countrymen in Brazil.

New Prayer Book Lost in Commons.

London, June 15 (By The Associated Press).—The House of Commons has dealt a death blow to the second revision of the Book of Common Prayer. Various results were predicted in debate and by newspaper commentators today. They included:

Eventual disestablishment of the State Church, the resignation of the Archbishop of Canterbury, a lessening of the authority of the bishops.

The vote was two hundred and twenty for and two hundred and sixty-six against. The first revision was defeated last December by thirty-three votes.

The split came mainly on the question of reservation of the sacrament. Opponents of revision said this would lead inevitably to adoration of the consecrated elements and thus give entrance to the Roman Catholic doctrine of transubstantiation. Advocates of the revision denied this and emphasized that the reservation of the consecrated bread and wine would be permitted only for the benefit of the sick and the dying.

Warning against "rash or irregular action" and a plea for patience was made after the rejection in a joint statement by the Archbishops of York and Canterbury.

Winston Churchill, chancellor of the exchequer, warned the house that rejection of the book would bring disestablishment of the Church nearer.

Newspapers commented that the rejection might hasten the resignation of the Archbishop of Canterbury. This has long been forecast. He has been archbishop for twenty-five years and is eighty years old.

Premier Baldwin said rejection would weaken the hands of all those in authority in the Church for a long time to come.

Sir William Joynson-Hicks asserted the Bishops of Manchester and Lincoln had announced their refusal to prosecute clergy who might infringe regulations in the Prayer Book.

The House of Bishops will probably meet to discuss the position in which the rejection has placed them.

It was regarded as probable that Sir William Joynson-Hicks and the Bishop of Norwich and a half a dozen other prelates who opposed the book might cooperate in an alternative revision.—Washington Evening Star.

Thank You!

Diocesan Treasurers have made a good response to the request of the National Council relative to forwarding all of the Church School Lenten offering. As a result our receipts to June 1 are $36,727.67 larger than last year, though still below 1926.

Out of ninety-seven dioceses and districts, forty-one have sent in one hundred per cent of the amount due. This compares with forty-two last year and forty-four in 1926.

I hope you have written your parish treasurers to remind pledgers of the necessity of providing for the payments due this summer. No vacation for the Church!

Much of our worry and trouble in December is due to the carelessness of our people in July and August.

Faithfully yours,
Lewis B. Franklin,
Treasurer.

Chinese Clergyman Speaks.

Sunday, May 13, the Rev. Bernard B. Ts'en, a native Chinaman and an ordained clergyman of the Episcopal Church, addressed the children of St. James Parish, Leesburg, Loudoun Co., Va. After the death of Matthew Harrison, who was Superintendent of St. James' Sunday School, part of the children's Easter offering was given as a memorial to him to the Boone University of Woochang, China, for the "Matthew Harrison Scholarship". Mr. Ts'en was the first student in this scholarship and later took his theological training at the university. Therefore, he readily accepted the invitation of the Rev. G. P. Craighill, rector of St. James, to address the school. Notwithstanding the present disturbance in China, Mr. Ts'en gave an encouraging account of religious and church conditions there. Dr. Woodward, of Virginia, once medical missionary in China, Mr. Craighill and the Rev. Edmund Lee, of Virginia, all knew Mr. Ts'en well in that country.

Missions Held.

The Rev. Horace W. Stowell, of Towanda, Pa., recently closed two very successful missions. One at St. Paul's Church, Peckville, where he organized a new Church School of forty-five pupils and seven teachers.

St. James, Jermyn, was full every night for eight days. His children's services in the afternoon were the talk of the town.

At Christ Church, Forest City, he organized an E. Y. P. F. which continues to flourish. All these places are vacant at present, but ready to start with a vim with the new men who are coming soon.

Confirmation Class.

On Tuesday in Whitsun Week, Bishop Sterrett confirmed the largest class in the history of the Church of the Redeemer, Sayre, forty-seven from Sayre and three from Towanda, the Rev. Glen B. Walter, rector. The class included all classes, doctors, nurses, business men, teachers, engineers, conductors, laborers and politicians—the mayor of the town being in the class.

Clergy Conferences.

A number of clergy have asked the Program Committee to provide a series of conferences for clergy alone during the session of the Bethlehem Summer School from June 25 to 30.

The committee is happy to announce that Bishop Sterrett has consented to conduct such conferences during the week on "Practical Parish Problems".

Commencement Address.

Archdeacon Walter delivered the commencement address to the graduating class of the Lebanon High School this year. A grandniece of his stood highest in the class and wrote the class song, as well as an oration on "Mussolini—The Man of Destiny".

ATLANTA.

Rt. Rev. H. J. Mikell, D. D., Bishop.

Sunday morning, June 3, Trinity Sunday, the Rev. G. W. Gasque, rector of the Church of the Incarnation, Atlanta, conducted the first memorial service in the history of the parish.

Trinity Sunday was selected because it was nearest the National Memorial Day. On Saturday before the ladies of the Daughters of the King were at the church to receive the many flowers which were placed on the altar and in the chancel, in the windows on either side of the reredos, before the memorial windows and font, the litany desk, etc.

The sermon, "The Communion of Saints", and much of the music were chosen with the memorial service in mind. The offertory anthem and all hymns except the sermon hymn were Trinity music.

At the conclusion of the celebration of the Holy Communion the rector read the names of all who had been buried from the church.

MICHIGAN.

Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop.

The most successful Young People's Conference ever held in the Diocese of Michigan took place May 25-6-7 at Trinity Church, Bay City. Over three hundred were in attendance, representing all parts of the Diocese and nearly every parish. In accordance with the policy adopted by a recently appointed Commission on Young People's Work, the attendance at this, the first of a series of semi-annual diocesan-wide conferences, were not merely delegates from this or that local association, but young people chosen at large from each parish.

The program opened on Friday evening with a great public service at which Bishop Overs, formerly of Liberia supplied his hearers with vivid pictures of one of the most interesting of our mission fields. This service was followed by a "Get-Acquainted Reception". Saturday was largely spent in inspirational conferences, the leaders being Bishop Page, the Rev. H. J. Pearson of the Detroit Episcopal City Mission, representing the social service interest; Mr. Francis T. Smith, a student of the University of Michigan and a prominent leader of the younger set; and the Rev. R. B. Kimber and Mr. I. C. Johnson, Chairman and Secretary, respectively, of the Young People's Commission. At a Corporation Communion at eight A. M. on Sunday, practically the whole body was present. The proceedings closed with a great festival service at eleven A. M., conducted by the Rev. Harold McCausland, rector of the church, with Bishop Overs as the preacher.

Church Celebrates One Hundred and Thirty-fourth Anniversary.

The one hundred and thirty-fourth anniversary of the founding of Christ Church, Washington City, was celebrated on Sunday, May 27, with special services in the church, now at 620 G Street, Northwest, beginning with the Holy Communion at 7:30 A. M. The Rev. Harry C. Goodman, the rector, preached at eleven o'clock on "The New Testament vs. the Papal Government".

Baccalaureate Sermons.

The Rev. Z. B. Phillips, rector of Epiphany Church, Washington, preached the baccalaureate sermon to the graduating class of the Young Men's Christian Association Law College in the church at evensong service the evening of May 27. The baccalaureate to the graduating class of the Gunston Hall School was preached by the Rev. Dr. H. P. Alman-Abbott, of Baltimore, at the morning service at St. Margaret's Church the same day.

The College of Preachers.

Among the fifty-seven clergymen attending the fourth Summer Annual Conference of the College of Preachers, held in the memorial reading room of the Washington Cathedral library last week, were the Rev. Richard Henry Baker, Jr., rector of St. John's Church, Waynesboro; the Rev. William R. Moody, rector of St. Andrew's Church, Lawrenceville; the Rev. Thomas L. Ridout, rector of Galilee Church, Virginia Beach, and the Rev. Alexander C. Zabriskie, lecturer of the Virginia Theological Seminary, all of Virginia, and the Rev. John L. Oldham, rector of Trinity Church, Martinsburg, W. Va. Bishop Freeman, of Washington, and former Bishop Rhinelander, of Pennsylvania, were the principal speakers. The Rev. Dr. Cosby Bell, of the Virginia Theological Seminary, made two talks on the "Making of Man". The Rev. Dr. E. Gordon Selwyn, canon of Portsmouth Cathedral, England, spoke on "The Risen Lord and His Church". Rev. Dr. Henry Sloane Coffin spoke on "The Preaching of the Cross". Rectors were in attendance from as far West as Arizona and as far East as Massachusetts.

Mission Debt Paid.

Much enthusiasm was aroused in Washington the night of June 13 by announcement that by a ten days' campaign the debt of nearly $55,000 on the Central Union Mission, sustained by all the Protestant churches of the city, had been cleared. President Coolidge contributed a generous check. George Cockerell, twelve years old, of the Mt. Vernon Methodist Church, South, raised $1,000 by his own work.

Drive on for St. Stephen and the Incarnation.

The Building Committee of the Parish of St. Stephen and the Incarnation have arranged a drive to be conducted in June, to raise $100,000, to aid in the erection of a new church building and parish house at Newton and Center Streets. The work of building has been started and it is expected that the church will be ready for worship, on or before Christmas.

Commencement Exercises.

A service of unusual interest and inspiration was held in Christ Church, Georgetown, on Sunday morning, June 17, the occasion being the commencement exercises of the Church School. This plan of bringing the work of the Sunday School before the adults of the parish, at least once a year, was inaugurated at Christ Church by the Rev. E. Pinkney Wroth, rector, and has met with whole-hearted interest and support. In addition to awards of various kinds in the several classes, certificates and pins were awarded to a large number of children who had earned them by performance of five acts of service in each of the five fields of service as outlined by the Church School Service League Program. Commander C. T. Jewell, representing the Diocesan Church School Service League, made the awards and conducted with the children who received them, a form of service prepared for the Church School Service League. In commenting upon the work, Commander Jewell said that Christ Church School leads in this work of the Church School Service League, in the Diocese of Washington, and would more than likely lead in a national way, if it were possible to make any such count or tabulation.

Happy Days for Choir Boys.

Choir boys of St. James' (Episcopal) Parish, including St. James' Church and the Church of the Holy Trinity, are looking forward to two weeks' vacation during the summer at Camp Pequot, situated on one of the finest sites of Bear Mountain. The Camp is on a wooded promontory on the shore of Lake Stahahee, and the fine swimming and diving facilities are among the outstanding features of the vacation sports. A crib in shallow water affords a safe place for those learning to swim. The boys will sleep in tents and meet for meals and social activities in the large pavilion. Special canoe races, archery contests and handicraft will be attractions in the summer's program.

The Camp Director is J. Clyde Barrington, who is director of boys' work at Holy Trinity; and the Rev. Dudley S. Stark, vicar of Holy Trinity, is treasurer. The camp, which has a capacity for eighty-five boys, will be open June 30 to August 25.

Summer Conferences.

This is the open season for summer conferences. Maryland is fortunate in having both the ocean and the mountains and takes advantage of this happy geography by holding conferences in both locations. The Peninsula Summer Conference, held at Ocean City on the blue Atlantic, the last week in June, draws a faculty from many quarters of the compass and affords splendid opportunity to the members of the four adjoining dioceses; Delaware, Easton, Maryland and Virginia. This is the tenth annual session of the conference, and it grows more popular and more efficient each year.

But if one prefers the mountains to the sea and desires two solid weeks of mental and physical invigoration, then there is the Blue Mountain Conference, held at Hood College in Frederick, Md., from July 9 to the 21. Here the course of study is more ambitious and the student body drawn from an even larger field, at least six dioceses being compassed.

In addition, this year the Commission on Young People's Work of the Diocese of Maryland is attempting a Vacation Causerie at St. James' School in Hagerstown, from June 25 to July 1. No schedule of classes is promised here, but informal religious discussions and recreational features.

EASTON.

Rt. Rev. G. W. Davenport, D. D., Bishop.

On Trinity Sunday, in Trinity Church, Elkton, five memorial stained glass windows were unveiled and dedicated. These with the two unveiled three years ago complete the memorial windows in the nave of the church.

The windows were given by Miss Julia and Miss Marion Young in memory of Alfred Wetherill; Mrs. William H. Mackall, one to the memory of Richard Covington Mackall, and another to the memory of William Hollingsworth Mackall; Miss Lillie E. Tuite, to the memory of Brevet Brigadier General Andrew Wallace Evans, and another to the memory of Mary Elizabeth Tuite.

The Rev. William Schouler, for thirty-seven years rector of the parish, and now its beloved rector-emeritus, was present, and gave his greeting and blessing. The rector of the parish, the Rev. J. Fredrick Virgin, dedicated the windows and preached the sermon. The windows were from the Nillet Studios in Philadelphia.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. W. A. Guerry, D. D., Bishop.

Urging One Diocese for South Carolina.

Since the deeply lamented, tragic death of Bishop Guerry, of the Diocese of South Carolina, active discussion has developed on the proposition to reunite that diocese with Upper South Carolina, of which the Rt. Rev. Kirkman G. Finlay, resident at Columbia, is the Bishop. The South Carolina, or lower Carolina, Diocese has no bishop coadjutor and is without a head. Both clergy and laity there are divided on the question of reunion. Some of the secular newspapers of the state have participated in the debate. The Charleston Evening Post says the subject is of interest and importance outside the Church, because of the historic relationship of the Church and the State and the place traditionally held in the religious and social life of the people by the Church, far greater than the proportion of its membership to that of other denominations.

The Post says, further, that the reasons for division of the old diocese, effected but six years ago, "never were wholly convincing". The chief of these, it is said, was the extent and diversity of the territory, making it difficult for one bishop to supervise and visit it properly. Improvements of transportation and community facilities, the Post contends, have removed much of this difficulty.

Division of the old diocese was completed in 1922, after twenty-five years of discussion and when Bishop Guerry had been administering its affairs fourteen years. After six years' observation of the division, Bishop Guerry, in his last annual report, declared it to be a distinct improvement as the old diocese required more work than one man could do properly. The two dioceses in 1927 had nearly doubled the number of communicants, white and colored, that the one diocese had in 1907.

Former Governor Richard Manning, one of the leading Churchmen of the state, thinks that sentiment in Charleston and the lower and older counties and parishes favors reunion, while the dominant feeling in the upper counties is against it. Published interviews, however, indicated that a number of rectors and leading laymen in Charleston and elsewhere in that part of the State are outspoken in opposing reunion, although others are equally emphatic in its favor.

DELAWARE.

Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, D. D., Bishop.

Old Swedes', Wilmington, Celebrates.

On June 3 Old Swedes' Church, Wilmington, Del., celebrated the two hundred and ninetieth year of its founding and the two hundred and twenty-ninth year of its consecration. The Rev. Fraicis M. Taitt, D. D., rector of St. Paul's Church, Chester, Pa., was the morning preacher, and the Rev. Joseph H. Earp, rector of Immanuel Church, New Castle, Del., preached in the evening. A Baptist minister, the Rev. George D. Allison, and his choir, were invited to conduct the service in the afternoon. The vicar, the Rev. Robert Bell, had charge of the services during the day.

Old Swedes' was designed and built by the Rev. Eric Bjork, a Swedish Lutheran priest, who came to this country in 1679. The first stone was laid May 28, 1698, and the church was dedicated on Trinity Sunday, 1699. It was finally agreed by the wardens that the church should be "sixty feet long and thirty feet wide, but "the height shall remain uncertain till we see how it will compare with the other dimensions".

In 1798 a request was made to the King of Sweden to send a new priest to the church, one who could speak English. For a time it was under the care of the rector of Immanuel Church, New Castle, but in time it was organized under the laws of Delaware and the Rev. William Price, of Milford, Del., a clergyman of the Church of England, became its first rector.

Attended with favorable weather, animated by a true spirit of comradeship, each man pledged to the promotion of the Church's work in country places, the Rural Church School, under the auspices of the School of Religion, of the Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn., wrote for itself a memorable page in the history of the movement, starting Monday night, April 9 and ending at Friday noon, April 20.

The school enrolled three hundred and seventy-five students from twenty different denominations and seventeen states, thus establishing, by far the largest school of rural ministers ever held in America. Moreover, notwithstanding the large enrollment of the school, each

Almighty God, by Whose providence Thy servant, John Baptist, was wonderfully born, and sent to prepare the way of Thy Son, Our Saviour, by preaching repentance; Make us so to follow his doctrine and holy life that we may truly repent according to his preaching; and after his example constantly speak the truth, boldly rebuke vice, and patiently suffer for the truth's sake; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. REST.

The banners of the sunset are too bright,
Fairer the after-hour.
When all the sky is flushed by fainter light
To a mysterious flower.
These robin troubadours are shill as pain.
Sweeter the vespers where
Some thistle-bird lets slip a drowsy strain,
Soft as a baby's prayer.

The mighty bards will not read tonight.
Their passionate desire
Would put the brooding wings of peace to flight,
Wake the tormenting fire.
A quiet poem in a household voice,
A child to nestle by.
We would not suffer now, would not rejoice,
But taste tranquility.

St. Peter's Day—June 29.

Myrtle Humphreys.

St. Peter was first brought to Our Blessed Lord by his own brother, St. Andrew. He was present at the Transfiguration, and also when the daughter of Jarus was raised from the dead. On the night when Christ was arrested, Peter denied Him three times, but afterward he confessed Him three times.

There is a most interesting tradition concerning St. Peter. A tradition is a story handed down from father to son. It may or may not be true.

When Nero became Emperor of Rome, he was very cruel to the Christians. Some were chained to stakes, and burned as torches to lighten a garden party in the grounds of the palace. Others were fed to lions in the amphitheatre, and still others were crucified.

It is said that Peter was in Rome at this time. He was now an old man, and the Christians feared he would be arrested and executed. They tried to induce him to leave the city and hide himself. At first he refused, as he knew he should not leave the other Christians to suffer alone; but finally he permitted himself to be persuaded.

In the dim gray light of early morning, this tired old man left Rome. They sent a young man with him to help him on his way. As they went along the Appian Way, the sun rose, and a strange brightness advanced down the mountain side, and came along the road to meet them. Peter stopped and shaded his eyes.

"Some figure is approaching us in the gleam of the sun," he said.

"I see nothing," replied the young man.

Suddenly Peter dropped his staff and fell upon his knees. "O Christ! O Christ!" he cried. He said afterward that he saw Our Bleseed Lord carrying His cross and going toward Rome. The young man was alarmed. He, too, saw the wonderful life, but did not fully comprehend. Then he heard Peter say:

"Quo Vadis Domine?" (whither goest Thou, O Lord?)

The young man could not understand the answer; but Peter heard a sad Voice say: "As thou art deserting my people, I go to Rome to be crucified a second time."

Then Peter rose suddenly to his feet, and turned back toward the city he had just left. The young man anxiously asked him where he was going.

"To Rome," answered Peter; and he returned. Shortly afterward he was arrested and condemned to be crucified. It is said that when the time came for him to be nailed to the cross, he asked if he might be crucified with his head downward, as he did not feel worthy to die in exactly the same manner as our Lord had died. Peter's day is June 29, and the color for the day is red—meaning a martyr's blood.

The Odyssey of Hubert.

This is the saga of Hubert, aged thirteen, who disentangled himself from his mother's apron strings to follow the call of the sea in the role of mess-boy on a freighter bound from Norfolk to New York. With all due respect for any prior claims of the apron strings, mother was not informed of the contemplated flight.

Being his mother, however, she knew that the sea held first place in Hubert's heart. She knew with reasonable certainty that he had taken ship. She figured it all out that sooner or later every sailor makes the Port of New York, and due consultation with the sea-going populace of Norfolk led her to believe that Hubert would inevitably eventually gravitate to the Seamen's Church Institute at 25 South Street.

So, having been Hubert's mother for thirteen eventful years, she philosophically decided to possess her soul in patience, meanwhile registering a request with the Institute that we be on the lookout for her progeny.

He came sooner than we had hoped, at the end of a two weeks' Odyssey. A fortnight after all, is a long time to be away from your mother even if you can be a mess-boy during that period. Thus Hubert came to the Institute post office hardly daring to hope that there might by some trick of magic be a letter from home, although he had given them no address. Anyhow, all the other fellows were asking for mail, so Hubert sauntered up to the window.

There was a letter from his mother, to be sure, also an incriminating bright pink slip that indicated Hubert was wanted by our police department.

He was duly apprehended and taken to our police office. There he read his mother's letter, and rolled his big eyes at our kindly Lieutenant whilst he telephoned to Norfolk. Hubert, couldn't see for the life of him what all the fuss was about, but of course you have to be more or less tolerant of these grown-ups.

The Lieutenant gave Hubert the message from home. His father would arrive on the morrow. In the meantime, did he need any money?

Hubert was disdainful. Why should he need money? Hadn't he just been paid off after two weeks as mess boy?

"Oh, so you've been paid off? Quit your job, did you?" we asked. "What was the trouble?"

"Aw, I hired on as a regular mess boy. You know how it is. I was supposed to wait on the engineers and the crew, and what did they do to me?—Stuck me in the officers' mess—that's what they did!"

"But wasn't that a promotion?"

"Naw," indignantly. "The officers have real dishes—the kind you can break. The crew have tin plates—the kind you can throw around and nothing happens. I wasn't going to work in any officers' mess. So the steward told me if I didn't like my job, I could quit and I told him all right, I would. Of course I didn't say it just like that because that steward was bigger than me."

Our Lieutenant was once a cabin boy himself, and through the long years that have elapsed since that time, he has carried the poignant memory of his first voyage—140 heart-breaking days away from home!

"Tell you what, Hubert," he said with a fraternal thump on the youngster's back, "you and I'll just have supper together and go see a movie. What do you say?"

Hubert rolled his big eyes in anticipation—

Now, two days later, our kindly Lieutenant smiles reminiscently over the happiest evening he has had in a long time; a subdued mess boy rests in the bosom of his family in Norfolk contemplating more school; and his mother—well, one can imagine!—The Lookout.

Willing to Wash Windows.

A neat, rather prepossessing young man applied to John Wanamaker for a job a number of years ago, in Philadelphia, and when told that there was no job for him, said, "I am willing to do anything".

Thinking to get rid of him, Mr. Wanamaker said, "The only job I have is a job of washing windows." "I will take it," said the young man. He washed those windows as they never had been washed. In time he became the manager of the great store.

When this manager died, after twenty-five years of splendid service, Mr. Wanamaker said, "I am willing to pay as high as one hundred thousand dollars a year for a manager who can fill the place of the one I lost".

What the Church needs is men and women who are willing to "wash windows" for the sake of the Kingdom.—St. Andrew's Cross, February, 1928.

THE BEAM AND THE MOTE.

Mrs. F. B. Stone.

The beam that lingers in my eyes,
That hinders vision, so denies
Just estimate of other's acts,
Distorts my views of truth and facts,
Help me, my Lord, to cast it out.

So may I see no more awry
Motes lying in a brother's eye;
The little things within his soul
That need removal ere 'tis whole,
Lord, help him now to cast them out.

Then both will see with sight more clear
The things that each of us holds dear,
For others' virtues often hide
Behind the beam of one's own pride.
Till Jesus helps to cast it out.

And with a vision clarified
We see the evil of our pride;
With humbled hearts Lord, help us pray,
Till sins of both are washed away,
And by our Father blotted out.

Hospitality.

Few graces are more beautiful or more helpful than the grace of hospitality. Like Mercy, according to Shakespeare, it blesseth him that gives as well as him that takes.

In the Orient it has always been most highly developed and, wrapped up with it, was the ancient covenant of salt. This covenant obliged the host to defend, at any risk, the safety of his guest. We see reference to this ancient custom in Psalm 23, 'Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies'. It was likely this covenant also that inspired Leonardo de Vinci to depict Judas overturning the salt with his arm, the hand of which clutched the money bag. And doubtless on this picture is based the superstition that it is bad luck to upset the salt.

Our Lord availed himself frequently of the hospitality of his friends. He lodged with Zacchaeus, was a guest at the wedding in Cana and a frequent visitor to that ideal home at Bethany. Frequently in the Epistles the early Church is exhorted to hospitality. And it was the hospitality of the early Christians which evoked from their heathen neighbors the compliment—"See how these Christians love one another".

Hospitality is a great power in the Church to this day. Happy is the rector and blessed is the congregation when the people are "given to hospitality". We once heard an old doctor who had studied in Edinburgh, say that all through his medical course there he went to the same church and sat in the same pew, but the people whose pew it was never once asked him to their home. We trust that such a thing could not happen in our Church in Canada. We know one Canadian rector very well and have often heard him say both privately and publicly what a great service the women do who are hospitable, who ask strangers to their homes, who have little teas and little parties (little ones are far better in this connection than big ones) and ask the new comers in the parish to them.

But the benefit is not all to the parish and the new comers. The woman and the home that is hospitable is enriched sometimes in a most remarkable way.

It must also be admitted that hospitality is peculiarly the woman's sphere. Unless the wife is behind the effort, the guest will sit on thorns. The burden also falls on the wife so, if she stands mumb and silent while her husband is profuse in invitation, the prospective guest will likely equal the profusion of the husband in his thanks but find it quite impossible to accept. Our husbands know this well, hence the frequent prods they give to invite their friends to a meal.

And now that summer is at hand, we may say that summer hospitality can be as great a boon as the winter kind. It enables us to share the beauties and joys of the summer home with those who are not so fortunate as ourselves But—and you can write that "but" so large that it will hold up all thoughtless people. But summer hospitality can be thoughtless and cruel. They say that some people have greatness thrust upon them and they are not usually averse to it, but to have hospitality thrust upon you is a different matter. It can be a well nigh heartbreaking burden. We saw a letter in the Daily Press to this end. It told of a farmer's wife and daughter, already loaded with work, whose life was made miserable, a veritable slavery by city people with their motor cars who "dropped in" to meals, who camped on her at meal time. One woman told how she seldom could attend church for on many Sundays several carloads would land in on her, depriving her of her day of rest and bringing no provisions towards feeding themselves. We know also a city family who had to give up going to their country home and sell it because too many people "dropped in" to meals. The wife had no maid (and even if she had, a maid has some rights). So all ye who own motors and who say "Let us go for a ride". Go, by all means, but take your meals in the car with you. Be as hospitable as possible yourself, but surely by the work it costs you, you will have a heart to defend your fellow housekeeper from being made miserable by inundations of uninvited guests. Time your arrival so that it will be just after lunch instead of just before. Around 4:30 or 5 in the afternoon have a pressing engagement some distance up the shore or along the road and eat your own meal under the open canopy of heaven. If you like, call in again on your way back and conclude your visit. All visitors who are thoughtful in this way may rest assured that their women friends will rise up and call them blessed.—Hope Smithson, in Canadian Churchman.

Thyself.

This decade justly glories in the results that have been achieved by system and cooperation. The distinctive quality of our great modern inventions lies in the way they permit a multitude to divide and subdivide labor into processes which each individual has a place, and where all can contribute toward the quantitative making of needed products. Not only factories and cities, but also schools and societies are a means by which one person obtains the benefits of a mass of helpers.

This manner of living tends to merge individuals into a sort of composite human being. Dependent as we are on others for food, raiment, employment, housing, government and social customs, we are not stimulated in the direction of self-initiative and self-valuation. We drift with the crowd. We do not use and thus develop the qualities of mind and heart that are our own specific endowments. We not only become creatures of habit, but we allow the groups with which we are associated to form our habits for us. We become "standardized".

But personal happiness is not thus attained. Satisfaction and content cannot be made by intricate machinery nor can they be bestowed by a crowd of people. They must be produced by oneself. They are strictly individual qualities.

We must therefore seek out, find and cultivate our particular resources. The exhortation credited to the Greek philosopher Plato, "Know thyself", needs a new and general emphasis. The Christian religion, however, is much more specific in its revelation of "individual gifts" than any philosophy, ancient or modern. The early disciples learned how to distil happiness within themselves in the midst of circumstances far more difficult and uncomfortable than we meet today. No generation of Christians lacks similar examples.

Two ways of self-valuation can be suggested. One is by meditation, in which one's ability and disability are found. We can then choose amongst surroundings and accept 'what is good for us". Such meditation should be partly in loneliness and partly in the small company that is sympathetic. The second method is that which gathers wisdom from the study of great and good men. Our own age has many admirable characters. History describes the lives of many more. What was the secret of their self-dependence? None of them was the product of his times to the exclusion of his own distinctive powers of character.—The Lutheran.

The Risen Christ in Risen Lives.

The Christian consciousness is not the memory of a historic and dead Christ, but it is a communion with a risen and living Christ. Here is a fundamental fact, that good men and women, in all the history of the faith, from every condition of life, in every circumstances, at all hazards and agonies, have declared that they held immediate communion if not communication with the risen and glorified Jesus. You cannot easily dismiss these historic witnesses. You cannot disown the mighty army of faithful witnesses to the invisible reality. From Irenaeus to Bunyan, from Polycarp to Wesley, from Augustine to Moody, from prince and priest and peasant, from scholar and statesman and scientist, from warrior and artist and artisan, there is the cumulative witness of human hearts, that they, too, have seen the Lord. Sometimes the Presence poured like multitudinous music through the organ soul of Sebastian Bach. Sometimes there were elevations to the third heaven as of Paul; sometimes the stern voice of terrible duty as in Cromwell. But the hand of Jesus is no dead hand from history's sepulchre; it is the hand of living power, of sceptered command, of medicinal healing, of benign blessing, to every believing life. He is alive; we have felt the touch of His hand on ours; we have seen the majesty of His eyes after conquering death; we have melted to the charm of His voice; we have sensed with all the saints the living Presence of our Lord, who was dead and is alive and lives forever more. Here is the witness of the Christian consciousness; it cannot be ruled out of court.—The Rev. Mark Wayne Williams, D. D., in "The Master Song". Published by Doubleday, Doran and Co.

The Retort Courteous.

An Irishman was sitting in a depot smoking when a woman came in, and, sitting down beside him, remarked:

"Sir, if you were a gentleman, you would not smoke so near a lady."

"Mum," he said, "if you wuz a lady ye'd sit farther away."

Pretty soon the woman burst forth again:

"If you were my husband I'd give you poison."

"Well, mum," returned the Irishman, as he puffed away at his pipe, "if you wuz my wife (puff, puff), I'd take it."

NEW LESSONS.

"No more school!" said the boy one day,
As he hastened to put his books away.
And he laughed as he gave his cap a turn—
"School's out! No more lessons to learn!"

The June wind smiled as he softly blew;
"Such a silly boy I never knew!"
He chuckled aloud, "Why, I can show
Him a thousand things he ought to know!"

Then a honey bee buzzed as he passed him by,
And glanced at him with a puzzled eye:
"No more lessons? How can that be
When I know a great deal more than he!"

And a robin aloft on a leafy spray,
Laughed as the boy put his books away;
"Does he think all knowledge is writ in those?
Why, he knows not the life of a single rose!"

And a wind-blown daisy, swaying low,
Winked her golden eye as she saw him go—
"Oh, the school is small and the world is wide!
He'll find most lessons are taught outside."

So the boy put his books safe away on the shelf,
And into the field he went himself—
Learning new lessons (unguessed) from the breeze
And the birds, and the flowers, and the honey bees!

Where Betty Found Pet.

By S. L. Bacon.

"Betty," said mamma, "I am going out for a little while; now, don't let any rabbits steal in to lay eggs while I'm gone."

Betty laughed. "I shall take splendid care, mamma; but oh, how I do wish it was Monday, the time goes so slowly!"

"Think what a beautiful day tomorrow will be, said mamma, placing a big bunch of roses and sweet peas in a basket.

Betty's little face grew grave. "Miss Lizzie said she thought that Easter was the loveliest time of all the year; an' she told us of lots of interest'n' things about it."

"I am sure she did," replied mamma. "Well, dear, suppose you look over your lesson for tomorrow."

She kissed Betty and took up her basket. "I must hurry now, or I will be late."

Betty felt a trifle lonely after mamma had gone; she wished that she had a cat or dog to play with and to be company. There were very few children living near.

After what seemed a very long time to a little girl, she saw mamma coming up the walk. She did not have any flowers this time, but a queer-shaped box.

But mamma shook her head, smiling. "I can't tell; it's a secret, Betty."

Betty clapped her hands—mamma's "secrets" were always nice. She kept wondering what it could be, but mamma only smiled.

When Monday finally did come, Betty hunted all over the big yard among the bushes for eggs. She found a great many pretty colored ones, and several made of chocolate and pink cream candy.

"The rabbits have been so good to me, mamma," exclaimed the little girl, munching a big cream egg. "I've found a lot, and there's no use looking for any more.

"How about the 'secret', Betty?"

"Oh, I forgot the delicious secret," cried Betty.

She hunted and hunted, and when she was just ready to give up she caught sight of the queer box hidden away under the syringa bush. Betty opened it eagerly, and there lay a little white rabbit fast asleep.

"Oh, mamma!" cried Betty, skipping about the yard, "i am so happy! I wanted a pet more'n anything! I'm going to name it Pet!"

Betty played with her new treasure a great deal. She said it was wonderful how much Pet understood, and she was no longer lonely when mamma went out.

A week passed and Sabbath morning Betty came running to mamma in great distress.

"Oh, what do you think, mamma." I can't find Pet anywhere; I've looked an' looked."

"Why, I'm sorry, dear! Don't stop to hunt for the rabbit now—it's time to get ready for Sabbath school; I was just going to call you."

"Oh, I couldn't go today, and Pet lost! I want to hunt again."

Mamma looked grave. "I am sorry about the rabbit, Betty, but I don't think you ought to miss Sunday School."

Betty stood still in the middle of the room; she was thinking hard and fast. She remembered how Miss Lizzie had begged the children not to miss coming, and how she had promised that nothing, not a single thing, should keep her at home. Was she keeping her word?

She turned to mamma very slowly. "I guess I'll be thinking about Pet all the time," she said in a sober voice, "but I guess that's better than not going at all."

"Yes," said mamma, "when you have promised." Then she fastened Betty's pretty little white coat. "Get your hat dear," she said.

Betty ran to open the cupboard door, where her big hat box was kept. Then she screamed: "O mamma, come and look!"

The box was on the floor, and it was open; and there, right on top of Betty's hat lay Pet, pink eyes blinking.

Betty seized him in her arms, and danced about the floor. "However did the darling get in? I must have left the top open, and in he jumped. O Mamma, I am glad I decided to go to Sunday School! Suppose I hadn't, I might have hunted and hunted and hunted before I found Pet."—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

The Needed Letter.

"I always have the worst luck," complained Evelyn. "Here is Lucy's letter, just come in this morning's mail, and she wants me to come and spend today and Sunday with her. It would have been wonderful."

"Well, why don't you do it?" said Tom.

"Do it? Why ,it's nearly nine, and I would have to get the ten o'clock train. I can't pack and get off like that. No; it's just my luck to have a thing happen like that."

"If you get a move on you could do it," said Tom, who was fond of his sister. "I'll run you down to the station in the Ford."

"What is the use of talking, Tom?" said Evelyn severely. "I can't make it, and I don't want to talk about it, I feel so upset.

So Evelyn went about with an injured air all day, and had a headache in the afternoon. The next week she hoped that Lucy might invite her again, but Lucy was going off for the week-end herself. That Sunday Evelyn came home from Sunday school with a grievance.

"More bad luck," she murmured. "They made up the committees, and I am on the book committee. Nothing but to dust books and keep things in order, and buy blank books and give out lesson papers. I hate it."

"But I heard you complain this year that the entertainment committee was too hard work." said her mother.

"Yes, they gave me too much to do, and I told them so. But that has nothing to do with it. It is a matter of luck. I'm unlucky, and everybody know it."

"The trouble with you, sis, is that you spell it wrong," said Tom, looking wise. "You'll always have the worst sort of luck unless you add another letter to it."

"There's only one way to spell it. I'm a good speller, Tom, and you never were. Luck doesn't need any more letters'."

"That's your mistake, sis. It needs P before it badly. Add that, and you'll find things will change. If you had added P last week, you'd have packed your suitcase in a jiffy, skipped to the station with me and gone off to Lucy's and you would have had a thoroughly good time. If you had put on that extra letter, and done your work cheerfully on the entertainment committee, you would have been the chairman of it by this time. P added to Luck gives Pluck, and no one has permanent luck without it. Your luck is bad because you've left out the principal letter."

Evelyn stared. She was trying to take in the idea. Then she went off without saying anything. But there is no doubt that her luck is better nowadays, and she never complains any more. Tom gave her a four-leaf clover gold pin on her last birthday.

"The extra leaf is for Pluck, you know," he said.

The Topmost eLaf.

he Topmost Leaf uttered stiffly in the breeze and stood straight up on her stem, looking intently at the sky. This little leaf was proud because she was the highest leaf on the tree. Sometimes she would call out to a passing cloud, "Look at me! See where I am." Of course, the cloud floated gently on and made no reply, but the Topmost Leaf did not mind.

As the autumn days came, many leaves blew away, but the Topmost Leaf was undisturbed. "What difference does it make where those leaves go? Nobody ever did notice them. How could old Mr. Tree let me go? I'm too important!"

But alas! one cold November day, when the wind was blowing in strong blasts, the Topmost Leaf felt a dreadful pull on her stem and she, like all the rest, floated down down, down! "How terrible this is!" thought teh terror-stricken leaf. "Where am I going? What will become of me?"

Of course, because she was the Topmost Leaf she had a long way to fall, but at last she lay on the ground with the other leaves. She was too unhappy even to turn over. She heard some leaves around her gossiping gayly, but she did not listen until she heard some one say excitedly, "Look, even the Topmost Leaf has blown away! Now Winter will soon be here."

Then a laughing voice said, "I wonder how that lofty leaf likes lying on the ground?"

The Topmost Leaf groaned. (You see the leaves did not even recognize her.)

Just at that moment caterpillar came inching along. "What are you fussing about?" said Fuzzy-Wuzzy. "Are you sick?"

At first the Topmost Leaf forgot where she was and was going to give herself a proud toss, and not reply. But she was so lonely that she changed her mind. "I am miserable," she said, "because I who used to be higher than any other leaf on the tree am lying on the dusty ground with all the rest."

"You poor little thing,"s said Mr. Fuzzy-Wuzzy, "don't let a trifle like that trouble you. Why, I used to look up at you and pity you because you could never have any fun. I always meant to climb up and have a chat with you, but I am a slow-moving fellow and used to talk to so many of my friends on the way up that I never had a chance to tell you how sorry we all were for you—so far away and alone."

The little leaf lay perfectly still, too surprised to flutter, as Mr. Fuzzy-Wuzy ambled along. How foolish she had been! The leaves had been pitying her when she thought they had been green with envy.

Around the corner came a jolly breeze. "Get up, get up, you lazy leaves," he said laughingly. "You'll get old and crisp if you bake any longer in the sunshine. Dance around now and be merry!"

The leaves began to rustle and jump about. Before she knew what she was doing, the Topmost Leaf hopped up and joined the circle. She danced madly around and around and had the best time she had ever had in all her life. She did not stop until she was out of breath, and then she nestled among the leaves, laughing and talking as gaily as any of them.

Nobody guessed who she was, for let me tell you a secret: This wise little leaf was very careful to keep her stem bent sharply, so that no one would chance to recognize her as that haughty and disagreeable Topmost Leaf!—Edith Marsh, in The Christian Register.

Two Insect Carpenters.

Think of boring a hole almost four inches deep in a tree trunk with a horsehair! That is something that no one really could do, but on a summer day you may see some one who seems to be doing it.

That "some one" is Mrs. Ichneumon Fly. She has four gauzy wings and six legs, and what looks like a horsehair tail three or four inches long. But it isn't a tail, and it isn't horsehair. It is the most wonderful gimlet in the world.

When Mrs. Ichneumon gets ready to lay her eggs, she goes to the trunk of a tree, perhaps a big maple, and begins boring a hole with this wonderful gimlet of hers. When she thinks she has made the hole deep enough, she sends an egg down through the middle of the gimlet, which is hollow, and leaves it at the end of the hole which she has made.

Perhaps some one else is living in that maple tree, for there is another insect carpenter that lays her eggs there. The other carpenter is Mrs. Horntail. She, too, has a strong, sharp gimlet, but it is a much shorter gimlet than Mrs. Ichneumon's, so that her eggs are laid nearer the outside of the tree.

When the little Horntails hatch, they begin knawing their way into the tree, for there is nothing in the world that little Horntails like to eat better than wood. And there is nothing that a little Ichneumon Fly likes to eat better than a little Horntail. In order that her children shall have food which they like best, Mrs. Ichneumon Fly bores those deep, deep holes, which she hopes Horntail is making.

CATBIRD SOLUS.

Charles Ballard.

In a Willow—in a willow-tree
See me—see me,
Swinging on a willow-whip
Swinging!

In the tree—in the willow-tree.
Hear me singing:
Whip-poor-will, whip!
Cheerily, cheerily!
Polly-polly-polly!
O hear, hear, hear!

Kitty-kitty, kitty-kitty!
Me-e-e-yu!
Singing on a willow-whip,
Sweet-sweet-sweet,
Purity, purity!

In a willow—in a willowtree,
See me! See me!
On a wet whip, on a wet whip,
Hear me call!

Chick, chick, chick!
Peep-peep, peep-peep!
Phee-ee-be!
Phee-ee-be!

Little owl,
Little Oowlette:
Scree-ee-eech!
Whee-yoo! Whee-yoo!
Bobolink-bobolink-bobolink
Jay! Jay!
Sing 'em all

Lucile and the Gander.

Five-year-old Lucile Storm liked to play among the chickens and ducks. Some of them became very tame, and Lucille was never afraid of any of them. So when her mother and father went farther out into the country to live and some one had left a gander on the place, Lucile was not afraid of him. She thought it was very funny to see him running after the chickens and ducks and, stretching his long neck, make a hissing sound.

One day Birdie, Lucile's little dog, came trotting along behind her as she came acress the chicken yard. All of a sudden the gander, with his neck stretched far out, came running toward Birdie. In a minute he was flying at the little dog and pecking him with his heavy bill.

Screaming with fright, Lucile ran and, reaching the gate around the chicken yard, climbed to its top. Seeing that she was out of reach of the gander, Lucile began laughing at poor little Birdie trying to escape from his wrathful tormentor. Birdie started running around the pen trying to find a place to get out, but the faster he ran the harder ran the gander. The bird stopped biting only long enough to make a terrible hissing sound.

By and by Birdie saw a little hole in the bottom part of the fence, and, crouching together, he jumped through it, away from the gander. The angry bird tried to follow the little dog, but his eyes were so blinded with rage that he could not find the hole.

With a gleeful laugh Lucile clambered down from the gate and ran to the house, where she found Birdie shivering on the porch. "O Mamma," she cried, "I've got the funniest thing to tell you!" Then she told her mother about the fight, and she wondered why her mother did not laugh.

"But that wasn't funny," protested her mother, "for it probably hurt Birdie. Didn't you think about that?"

Lucile had not thought about that, for as long as nothing was hurting her the little girl could not understand why she should care if any one else was hurt.

Several days later Lucile was in the chicken yard when she heard a dreadful hissing beside her, and the next minute the gander was picking at her. She started to call for help and run, but the gander only followed and picked the harder. Lucile started to cry, so she did not notice that Birdie crawled in through the hole from which he had escaped a few days before and started running about the gander, barking. The little dog tried in every way he knew how to keep the big bird from attacking his little mistress, and at last the gander started fighting him.

Lucile started running for the gate, but, remembering her mother's words, she turned back to help her little dog just as her mother reached them, and quickly put the gander to flight.

"Birdie came to help me," Lucile explained to her mother. "I'm so sorry I didn't help him the other time, but I was going to now."—Exchange.

I hold a wealth og blossoms in my hand—
A cherry tree ablaze with spring's white flame,
Tenderly fanned
By golden winds that dip low

Their crimson juice when slashed by hun-
That rob to feed . . . .
All this is lying on my

Health May Mean Success.

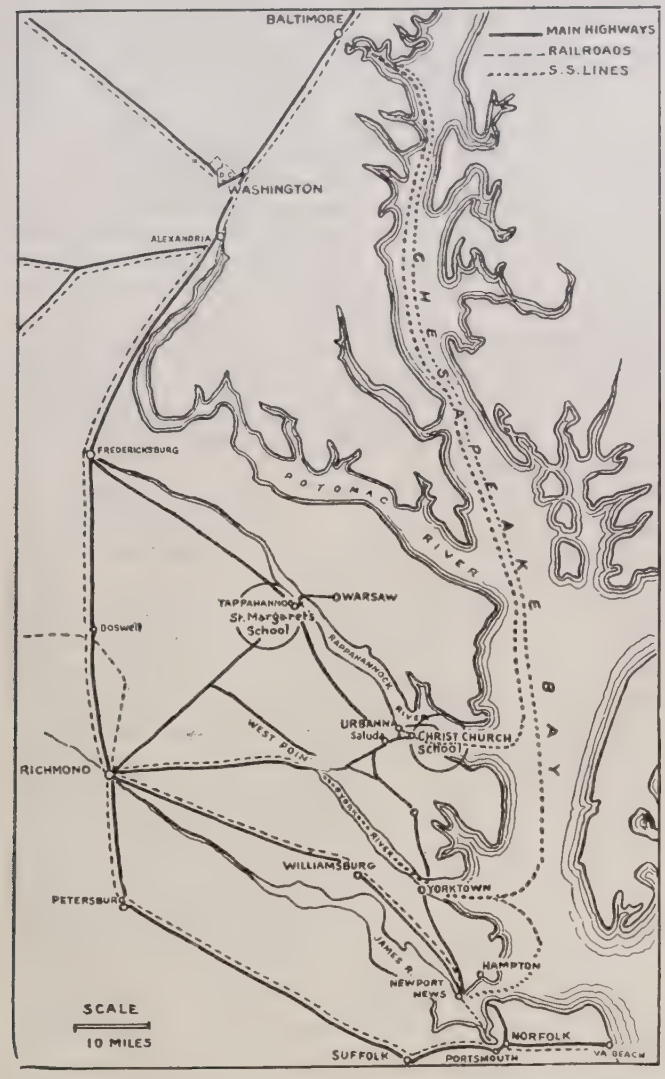
Health means a whole lot more than being an athlete at school or college. Sometimes I wonder how many men have lost their jobs, or a chance to go on up, because they lack the ordinary health that might have kept them competent and quiet and confident during the last half hour of a trying day.

Every time you hear some one say "Howjadoo"? you can get an idea of how important health is.



"How do you do?" and "How's your health?" have come to be mere formalities; but, when you get right down to it, they mean just about the same thing as the garage mechanic's question, "How many is she hitting on"? And you know as well as I do that if she's not hitting on all four, or six, or eight, or whatever number of cylinders she's built with, she's not in shape to makes any grades.—Dr. A. H. Sutherland, in the American Boy.

DOMINUS VOBISCUM.

When going out and coming in,
Amidst the strife, and grief, and sin,
May God thy life forever bless,
And shield thy heart from all distress,
And send his angels to defend,
And guide thee to the very end.

TWO GOOD SCHOOLS IN TIDEWATER VIRGINIA

For GIRLS of Character and Ability

ST. MARGARET'S is the companion school to CHRISTCHURCH. It is located thirty miles further up the Rappahannock River at the quiet village of Tappahannock. Accommodating sixty boarding pupils, the School is an institution of the Episcopal Church, but is open to all girls who meet the entrance requirements. It supplies the great need for an inexpensive Virginia school of high standards and simple life for girls of character and ability.

The location is unusually healthful and has great natural beauty. There are ample athletic grounds with a well-appointed gymnasium. The School owns a safe beach, offering opportunity for supervised water sports.

The distinctively homelike atmosphere is enhanced by the grouping of the girls, generally by age, in three dormitories.

The School is Intermediate and College Preparatory. It is on the accredited list of the State Board of Education, and its graduates enter by certificate all colleges except those admitting only by examination. St. Margaret's fits girls for a career, for home, or for higher education.

Tappahannock is easily accessible. It has steamer connections with Baltimore, Fredericksburg and Norfolk. The new government highway from Washington through Fredericksburg to Newport News and Norfolk passes through Tappahannock. Busses meet daily trains at Fredericksburg. Bus service twice daily gives direct communication with Richmond, forty-two miles southwest. (See map.)

The terms are $500, including laundry and books (music, etc., extra.), the low rate being made possible by Church ownership.

For BOYS of Promise and Pluck

CHRISTCHURCH is an accredited country boarding School with high standards. On a ninety-five acre farm, overlooking the Rappahannock River near Chesapeake Bay, it insures for boys (ages 10 to 18) good health as a foundation for academic work.

Individual training is the secret of the School's success. Because it is limited to one hundred students housed in four groups, it is easy for the masters to supervise the welfare of each boy.

The School buildings are well equipped; the living quarters are attractive and homelike. The new gymnasium, athletic fields and tennis courts provide the usual recreation under an experienced coach. There are also supervised sports of woodland, of salt water bathing, boating and fishing.

The School is easily accessible from Richmond (fifty miles) by Bus line to the School door; from Baltimore and Norfolk by steamer to West Point, Va., thence (twenty miles to the School door by Bus. (See map.)

High standards, healthful environment and moderate rates make it one of the most attractive schools in the East. Operated by the Episcopal Church, it is yet open to all boys who meet the entrance requirements. Rate for ALL School charges, $600 (new pupils, $610). The low rate is made possible by Church ownership.

Deaths

ELLIOTT: Passed into life eternal, June 12, 1928, MISS RACILLA ELLIOTT, age eighty, daughter of the late Teakle Elliott, of Locustville, Accomac county, Va.

MRS. THOMAS WALLACE.

Almost as the sun went down on the first of May, 1928, at the home of her nephew, Judge R. H. L. Chichester, at Glencairne, Stafford County, Virginia, there passed from this world to the next one who had lived gloriously for eighty-two years, MRS. THOMAS WALLACE—Harriet Eustace Moncure Wallace.

Mrs. Wallace was next to the youngest daughter of the late Judge R. C. L. Moncure and his wife, Mary Washington (Conway) Moncure, and in December, 1880 had married the late Thomas Wallace, of Stafford county. From being almost the youngest member of her own family she had lived to become the matriarchal head of the Moncure clan of old Stafford, and was much sought after for her fund of information along family and historical lines.

Her life spanned epochal periods in American history, beginning some years before the upheaval of the War Between the States, continuing through momentous changes and extending well beyond the cataclysm of the World War, a fine, alert mind and strong character like hers were sure to bear the imprint of those varied and stirring experiences. And she had lived all of her life with zest, the developing sorrows as well as the expanding joys. It is granted to but few to possess such a magnetic personality and at the same time to have been the vital inspiring force in as many lives as she was. All of these devoted ones mourn her loss, but as for her, who can regret the perfect ending of a rich, full life, without invalidism, dependence or mental incapacity of one whose joy of living and giving and loving was so remarkable?

FANNY MONCURE MARBURG.

RESOLUTIONS

on the death of the Right Reverend William Cabell Brown, D. D., late Bishop of the Diocese of Virginia, by the Board of Trustees of the St. Paul Normal and Industrial School.

Whereas, the Dispensation of Almighty God has removed from our midst our beloved colleague and fellow trustee, the RIGHT REVEREND WM. CABELL BROWN, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese of Virginia, a man of the highest Christian character and one who upheld the finest traditions of the ministry of the Church, filling his exalted office with becoming dignity, rare ability, fine discrimination and consecrated zeal. He was a Bishop of the Church in the truest and best sense of the word, exemplifying in his own walk and daily relations with his fellowmen, the words of our Blessed Lord and Saviour: "I came not to be ministered unto, but to minister."

Filled with the true missionary spirit, he carried the Word to Brail, and for over two decades devoted himself so assiduously to the work of spreading the Gospel among the benighted of that country that when he left the Church in Brazil it was well established as the result of his labors. It is his monument and for all time he will be enshrined in the hearts of his faithful and most beloved parishioners. He then turned to this country and gave himself to the work of building up the Church's oldest Diocese—the Diocese of Virginia, until in London last July he heard the blessed Master's voice saying: "Enough, come up higher! Well done, thou good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." Therefore be it

Resolved, That while we bow in humble submission to the will of Almighty God, who doeth all things well, we cannot refrain from expressing our sense of sorrow and personal loss at the death of our colleague and fellow worker.

Resolved, That we tender our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved widow and family and commend them to the infinite mercy and tender compassion of that God, who tempers even the wind to the shorn lamb, for that consolation and peace of mind that only He can give.

Resolved, further and finally, That a copy of this preamble and these resolutions be sent to the family of our late colleague, one spread upon the minutes of this body and one sent to the Southern Missioner and other Church papers for publication.

DAVID W. HOWARD,

MRS. SOPHIE DE BUTTS CARTER.

Entered into the life Eternal, at "Credual", near Upperville, Virginia, on May 30, 1928, MRS. SOPHIE DE BUTTS CARTER, in the eighty-eighth year of her life. She was the daughter of Major Richard Henry Carter (of Eighth Virginia Infantry, Hunter's Brigade) and Mary Welby De Butts, and was born in Upperville, Va., 1841, in the house which is now the Rectory of Trinity Episcopal Church. Her husband, the late Colonel Richard Welby Carter (Colonel First Virginia Cavalry, C. S. A.), died December 21, 1888. With this exception, and that of two children, who died in infancy, the family of six daughters and two sons, remain unbroken. Those who survive are Mrs. H. Gordon Moore, Lynchburg, Virginia, Mrs. A. C. Marshall, of "Credual", Upperville, Virginia, Mrs. M. G. Richardson, of "Corotoman", Upperville, Virginia, Mrs. J. M. Tabb, of Middlebury, Virginia, Mrs. Paul Whiten Northridge, Mass., Mrs. P. B. Wood, of Baltimore, Maryland, Mr. J. Armistead Carter, of Norfolk, Vigrnia, Mr. R. Welby Carter, of Washington, D. C.

She was buried in the private cemetery at "Credual", and a feature of the large funeral was the impressive singing of her colored friends. It was inspiring, attesting to their estimation and devotion to her, and her children. She was one of the noted beauties of "Glen Welby", of the period of the Civil War and possessed a wonderful attractive personality, combining the graceful poise and dignity of the typical Southern lady, with a lovely life of unselfish Christian fortitude, a charming attractiveness that drew all to her and held them in her wide circle of friends. Such gifted characters are rare these days and leave a mighty impress on those left behind and are a challenge to the rising generation to move up to the higher plane of unselfish, self-denial on which her life was lived.

In addition to the collective study of those problems that rural pastors have in common, the school's program provided for denominational group meetings for the consideration of such problems as are peculiar to each communion.

The Episcopal group, under the direction of the Rev. F. D. Goodwin and the Ven. V. G. Lowery, had an enrollment of thirty-two churchmen, consisting of sixteen clergy from the Dioceses of Mississippi, South Carolina, Kentucky, Alabama, Virginia, Atlanta, South Florida and Florida, as well as one theologue from the University of the South, Sewanee, Tenn., and the entire student body of the Theological Department of the DuBose School, Monteagle, Tenn.

The breadth of subjects that constituted each day's program may be defined as an effort to fathom the larger possibilities of the country church, embracing the sphere of sociology, problems affecting rural social and farm life, the potent question of our country youth, the possibilities of the Sunday School, religious education, human relations, social hygiene, the missioner sphere, suitable sermons, personal evangelism, rural church publicity, education and community recreation.

Findings of the Episcopal Group in part:

1. As a result of our study and conferences we are convinced that the mere holding of services, either weekly or monthly, does not fully meet the needs of the rural districts in the matter of religion, because religion is concerned with the whole man and the whole of life, morally, socially ,economically and spiritually.

We, therefore, recommend that in every community where the Church is at work a definite program of social service be adopted and carried out by the cooperation of the clergy and laity.

2. We believe that one of the greatest reasons for the weakness of the Church in rural districts is the lack of any special organization for the promotion of an effective program.

We, therefore, recommend that in each diocese a committee or commission be appointed to study the possibilities and to plan a program for the diocese.

3. We find that effective work in rural fields is, for various reasons, being greatly hampered by the constant changing of the clergy.

We, therefore, recommend that steps be taken to remedy this condition by placing the rural work on a par with city work, both in salary and prestige.

4. We find that the rural clergy are suffering from a lack of special training in the solution of the problems of rural work.

We, therefore, recommend that the dioceses take advantage of the splendid opportunity offered by the Rural Church School of Vanderbilt University by using all the scholarships allotted to them, and by making provision for the attendance of as many more clergymen as possible.

We further recommend that every influence be exerted to persuade the seminaries to include in their curricula special training for rural workers.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.

Cathedral Day of the Church Schools.

Rain interfered with the program arranged for the annual Cathedral Day of the Church Schools of the Diocese, and elaborate out-door features planned for the morning had to be cancelled. Before noon, however, the weather cleared, and at half-past two the Cathedral was filled with children and their teachers, assembled for the formal presentation of their missionary offerings, and for the awards to the most successful schools. The Rev. Charles H. Ricker, rector of Christ Church, Manhasset, and president of the Diocesan Board of Religious Education, presided. Dean Sargent made a brief address of welcome. Bishop Stires addressed the children and made the awards. These awards were given on a new basis. Five standards were determined, and each school was measured in respect of each standard. The awards were for the largest total attainment, and not for achievement in one line alone. The five requirements were: high percentage of average attendance, new members added proportion of teachers trained or in training, increase in missionary giving, and excellence of organization. The highest awards on this composite basis were: in the group of schools with less than fifty scholars, the Church of the Incarnation, Brooklyn; from fifty to a hundred and fifty in membership, St. Luke's, Brooklyn; one hundred and fifty to two hundred and fifty, the Church of the Epiphany, Brooklyn; over two hundred and fifty, the Church of the Resurrection, Richmond Hill.

U. T. O. Larger Than Ever.

The total of the United Thank Offering presented by the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese recently at the Cathedral was $18,715. This is the largest amount yet presented for this purpose, and it will certainly be larger still, perhaps as large as $20,000, by the time it is presented in Washington at the General Convention.

"Accumulative Endowments" Attempted

The Church of the Epiphany, Brooklyn, and St. Paul's, Flatbush, have each announced the beginning of an endowment to be gathered in a way that seems to be the same plan that the Rev. Dr. Atwater calls the "cumulative endowment" plan, that is, it gives people of moderate means an opportunity to add during their life-time a substantial sum to the parish endowment by making cumulative contributions. An individual account is opened with each contributor, and every donation that he makes subsequently is added to the original gift, and the accumulated total is designated by any name which the contributor wishes. In this way names may be perpetuated by givers who could never make a suitable gift at any one time. In St. Paul's the new endowment is called the "Remembrance Foundation".

DEATHS.

The Rev. George S. Aldridge, missionary of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Milford, Pa., and St. John's, Dingman's Ferry, died very suddenly on Saturday, May 19, 1928, of angina pectoris. He leaves a wife and two children. Mr. Aldridge did excellent work in his mission. The diocese suffers a real loss.

He was buried on Tuesday, May 22, 1928, in Milford, Pa. Bishop Sterrett, assisted by Dean Holmes, of Cardondale, the Rev. Messrs. Kreutler of St. Luke's, Scranton, and Allen of Grace Church, Honesdale, conducted the burial service.

Most of the clergy were attending the pre-convention meetings and could not go to the funeral.

ENCOURAGEMENT AND COMFORT FOR GOD'S PEOPLE

"Be of Good Cheer"

"When I see the blood, I will pass over you; I have redeemed thee—thou art mine; I have loved thee with an everlasting love; I will never leave thee nor forsake thee. When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee. When thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burned; neither shall the flame kindle upon thee. Fear thou not; for I am with thee. Be not dismayed; for I am thy God: I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness. Be strong and of a good courage."

"He which hath begun a good work in you will perform it until the day of Christ. He will not suffer thy foot to be moved. He that keepeth thee will not slumber. The Lord shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in, from this time forth, and even for evermore. The beloved of the Lord shall dwell in safety by him. No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper. If God be for us, who can be against us? All things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to His purpose."

"The silver is mine, and the gold is mine. Your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things. He shall supply all your needs. I am the Lord that healeth thee. I am the Almighty God. My grace is sufficient for thee, for my strength is made perfect in weakness. I am the Lord, the God of all flesh; is there anything too hard for me? Call upon me in the day of trouble and I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me. As thy days, so shall thy strength be. God is faithful."

"Your labor is not in vain in the Lord. God is not unrighteous to forget your work and labor of love, which ye have showed toward His name. His reward is with Him. Let not your heart be troubled; I will come again and receive you unto myself."

Bishop Beckwith's New Book

The fruit of a life-long, devoted study is offered to the Church by the late Rt. Rev. C. M. Beckwith, D. D., of Alabama, in his volume, entitled "The Book of Common Prayer", fresh from the press. It is the third volume of the Bishop's course of instruction, "The Church School in the Book of Common Prayer", of which the first two grades were issued a few months ago. However, it has a value quite apart from this fact; for in the small compass of one hundred and twenty-five pages it contains the gist of the author's broad knowledge of his subject.

The Prayer Book of 1892 is used as a basis; at the end of each chapter is an addenda noting the changes in the revision of 1925 and their significance.

The system of questions and answers is used throughout, interspersed with explanatory notes. The arrangement and sequence of the services, and each part of every service, are clearly set forth. The aim of the Author is to help win the student to a glad attendance upon the worship of the Church, and arouse a deeper appreciation of our priceless heritage.

No child should be allowed to graduate from our Church School without the advantage of this course on the Prayer Book. It is especially adapted for the instruction of those who are preparing for Confirmation.

The Chairman of the Department of Religious Education in the Diocese of South Carolina Endorses Bishop Beckwith's Course for Church School Study.

"I have thoroughly examined Grades One, Two and Three of 'The Church School in the Book of Common Prayer', edited by the late Bishop Beckwith of Alabama, and I recommend it to the clergy and the Church School workers of the Diocese, as one of the finest system of Church instruction that we have in existence today.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

There is never a cheap way to real honors.

"The practice of honesty is more convincing than the profession of holiness."

God can always vindicate His way to His believing children, and there is no danger but that He will always prove true to our holiest convictions.

"It may not be the things we get so much as the things we give up that mark our real gain."

It is pleasing to our pride to count ourselves better than others and think that we must keep separate from the common crowd. But this spirit is in deadly antagonism with the spirit of Christ.—Exchange.

Let me die, working.
Still tackling plans unfinished, tasks undone!
Clean to its end, swift may my race be run.
No laggard steps, no faltering, no shirking;
Let me die, working!
—S. H. Young.

The law of the harvest is to reap more than you sow.

There is always a spot in our sunshine; it is the shadow of ourselves.—Carlyle.

The bow cannot possibly stand always bent, nor can human nature or human frailty subsist without some lawful recreation.—Cervantes.

He who believes in goodness has the essence of all faith. He is a man of "cheerful yesterdays and confident tomorrows".—J. F. Clarke.

"A jeweler can tell at a glance the difference between gold and pinchbeck. So the Christian should seek out the right thing were he not in the habit of trifling with conscience. Small questionings should have little, if any, place in our larger life. The growing boy outgrows his clothes. The best proof of growth is when a man gets beyond small scruples and meets his responsibilities."

It is the folly of earthly wisdom that men limit the idea of newness to that which is novel—experienced for the first time. In truth, the familiar trees and grass and sky are new—not because they are different from what they always were, but because he himself is made new by an inward transformation. —Selected.

He who meets sorrow without bitterness and is not coarsened by prosperity, who is defeated but fights on, or is triumphant but remains humble, who carries the hopefulness of youth into the deepening shadows of age, and when the sun is setting is confident of the morn—this is the man who has lived well.—F. W. Norwood.

JEWS

"For East is East and West is West,
And never the two shall meet
Till two strong men stand face to face
At God's great judgment seat."

Kipling's declaration of deeply planted spiritual and mental differences between the people of the Eastern and Western parts of the world is based on intimate personal acquaintance with both. His prediction of mutual understanding and friendship is based on sound philosophy and knowledge of human nature—which is the foundation of all useful and practical philosophy. Declaration and prophecy apply exactly to the Gentiles and Jews, especially those of the United States. Instead of two strong men many strong men of the much mixed Gentiles and the straight strain Jew must meet, face to face, eye to eye, here on earth, but with consciousness of standing before God's great judgment seat, with mutual sense of responsibility to the God worshipped by both, mutual zeal to serve Him, earnest concurrence in the prayer that His Kingdom shall come, His will be done on earth as it is in Heaven, that the Annunciation promise of universal good will and unbroken peace among men shall be fulfilled soon.

Through centuries of the past Gentile and Jew have been widely, fiercely, apart and antagonistic, spiritually, mentally, socially, commercially, politically. The economic and political hostilities are gone from most of the civilized countries. The old laws of England and Europe which forced the Jew to monopolize money-lending by forbidding him from owning land, restricting him as a merchant, forbidding Christians from lending money at interest, have disappeared. Prejudices and customs which banned the Jew's literature and art have vanished before the genius of members of his race. He has been given full political rights, long denied him. Spiritually and religiously the separation remains. If we believe the Scriptures, from the promises of the Almighty made and iterated and reiterated through the voices of the oldest prophets to the confident, triumphant prophecy of St. Paul that "all Israel shall be saved", we must believe that this separation shall end, that the Jews shall know that their Messiah has come, that His redemption is theirs.

It is a stupendous task, but when it is accomplished the results will be stupendous. In this country we have three million six hundred thousand Jews by descent and nominally in religion, fewer than a tenth of them members of Jewish congregations. More than half of them are concentrated in three or four great cities. The others are scattered among us, many of them our friends and neighbors, constantly in contact with us, strong and respected powers in our intellectual, commercial and community lives. Yet between us and them in spiritual and religious life—the supremely important life—the hitherto inflexible and impossible barrier stands. It is built of inherited prejudices and bitter facts. We Christians inherit dislike and distrust of the Jew from long lines of ancestry, trained to despise him, first, as of the race that crucified the Saviour of man, afterward as the race identified with extortion and petty and unfair trading. We allow these feelings to cling to us, regardless of the clean living, high thinking, broadly charitable, patriotic, widely useful Jews most of us are so fortunate as to know. We visualize the Jew as Shylock and Fagin and forget Nathan Straus. On the other side, the Jew, looking back on his own history, viewing present conditions, has abundant provocation to hate Gentiles and Christians and to scoff at Christianity. His race has been persecuted, oppressed, massacred, by all the older Gentile and Christian nations and governments. Christians professing the faith of the Loving and Merciful Son of God, sent on earth as of the house and lineage of the Jew David, have slain, robbed and cruelly tortured the descendants of the chosen people of God. Today we Christians spend millions of dollars and devote many lives sending the Gospel to Chinese, Turks, Hottentots, and forbear to offer invitation or welcome to these people who are among us, part of us. To the educated, enterprising, kindly and valuable citizen who is a Jew and to the Jew in the slums living in squalor and, without religious guidance or restraint, drifting to crime and anarchy and becoming a menace to orderly government and the public peace, we stand alike indifferent and aloof.

It may be that in this age of wonders the time has come, or is very near, for the miracle of the final salvation of Israel. The strong and honest Jew and the strong and honest Christian may stand face to face before God's great judgment seat and with mutual manly confession of old wrongs and sins, mutual contrition and mutual forgiveness, melt away the barrier that has stood so long. Hundreds of thousands of the best class of Jews are adrift spiritually, forced by modern circumstances from their old rituals and faith, yet unwilling to accept the faith that has been represented by so much suffering inflicted on their people. These may be convinced that the hypocrisies, the cruelties, the coldness, the sins of omission and commission of which they read and see so much are not products of the real Christianity. They may be made to realize the huge work for the good of man and the glory of God done by faithful followers of Christ, and in Christ's name, and so brought to understand that our Christ is indeed their Messiah.

That is work and result worthy of all the prayer and fervor and labor and patience and self-sacrifice that can be given. The bringing of a million Jews, representing so much spiritual and intellectual power, under the banner of the Cross would mean the mightiest reinforcement God's armies have received since the time of the apostles.

B. A. M. Schapiro, a Christianized Jew, head of the Hebrew-Christian Publication Society, 405 Bible House, New York City, has published in The Southern Churchman an article demonstrating the fallacies of leading representatives, of the "Higher Criticism", which gives abundant evidence of his ability, his profound knowledge of Hebrew and his zeal in the Saviour's cause. He is an Episcopalian and for years has been working, in face of many discouragements from Jew and Gentile, to bring his own people to accept Christ. The Protestant Episcopal Church, among the Christian denominations, should lead in supporting this work, the mightiest enterprise before the religious world. The majestically simple, dignified, ritual and clear-cut doctrines of the Church, its share of the intellectual, social and financial strength of the country, so far beyond its numerical proportions, alike appeal to the Jew. Certainly it can find no nobler or greater work than earnest, generous, tireless, cooperation in this well-led and wisely directed effort to bring in our time fulfillment of the Almighty's promise to His People; a new evidence of the truth of the Scriptures; a supreme miracle climaxing the vast miracle of the preservation of the Jewish race, scattered about the earth through nineteen centuries, trampled and slaughtered, but always surviving and rising from every attempt at its annihilation to new life and potency.

SHALL WE PRAY FOR THE DEAD?

IS THERE ANYTHING IN SCRIPTURE AGAINST PRAYERS FOR THE DEAD?

Touching for the moment on the possibility of prayer for those who have passed from this life without Christ, we would point to the clear and unmistakable teaching of the New Testament, on the decisiveness and finality of the present life for those who have had the opportunity of accepting God's salvation. "Today, if ye will hear His voice, harden not your hearts" (Heb. 4:7). "Now is the accepted time, behold now is the day of salvation" (2 Cor. 6:2).

There are many who have died without clear evidence of a Christian life and who, though not hostile, were yet indifferent to the claims of Christ, and passed into the unseen world without any visible signs of having accepted Him as their Saviour. If their sorrowing and perplexed relatives and friends are praying for them as in danger of being lost, we would earnestly counsel such not to pray, but simply to leave their beloved ones in the hands of a perfectly righteous God, fully assured that "the Judge of all the earth will do right". Prayer for them can bring no real assurance and solid satisfaction to the heart of the one who prays; for the simple reason that in the absence of any revelation of God's will on this matter there are no promises and no assurances which faith can plead and on which the heart can rest. In such circumstances the call is for simple trust rather than for prayer. Nor is this absence of warrant for prayer for the departed surprising when we recollect that the New Testament is a revelation intended for this life and directed towards the immediate impression and prompt decision of the soul for Christ. The whole stress of the New Testament is on the present life, for the simple reason that it is God's revelation for man's present needs. We are to pray for others now, work for them now, endeavor to save them now, and when we have done this we should leave the rest with God. There is not a line of Scripture that our prayers for them when they are dead can effect any change in them, or even affect them at all.

As to the Christian dead, the real question is, What need have we to pray for them?

Where are they? "Present with the Lord" (2 Cor. 5:8).

Where are they? "With me in Paradise" (Luke 23:43).

Where are they? "In the Lord" (Rev. 14:13).

Where are they? "With Christ; which is very far better" (Phil. 1:23, R. V.).

What are they? Blessed. "Blessed are the dead" (Rev. 14:13).

What are they? At rest. " That they may rest from their labors" (Rev. 14:13).

Where then is the place for prayer that they may "rest in peace" when, as a blessed and glorious fact, they are resting? Why should we pray for "light perpetual" to shine on them when they are in the immediate presence of the light of the world? Surely the whole teaching of the New Testament on the blessedness, peace, joy and satisfaction of the Christian dead in the presence of their Lord is a clear and unmistakable proof that prayer for the dead is not only unnecessary, but even cruel, since it is a reflection on their present unspeakable privilege and joy in the Paradise of God.

ARE THERE ANY OTHER REASONS AGAINST PRAYER FOR THE DEAD?

1. Yes; it is a reflection on the Christian life here below of those who have now passed away. To pray "May he rest in peace" is not only to question his present peace with Christ above, but his experience of the Gospel of peace all through his Christian pilgrimage, for "being justified by faith', we have peace with God" (Rom. 5:1).

2. Prayer for the dead has often proved to be spiritually unhealthy and dangerous. It is sometimes said that prayer for the departed is an outcome of natural affection, and we would speak with all respect and tenderness of the love that prompts the continued remembrance in prayer of the dear ones who have passed within the veil. Nevertheless we would venture to put to those who thus pray these two questions: (1) Are you quite sure you are doing that which is true to the revealed will of God in Holy Scripture? (2) Are you not all the time omitting the very thing that will give you the truest satisfaction of soul in relation to your beloved one who is now with Christ? With all sympathy and yet with all plainness, we would dare to say that prayer for the dead is really based on an insufficient knowledge of the joy and glory of the Christian life. To one who knows the real meaning of the Christianity of the New Testament the removal of a dear one to be with Christ is not a reason for prayer, but for thanksgiving and praise. And in the course of Church history this practice of prayer for the dead has led to error and danger: for from praying for them men were led to pray to them, and from this came by slow degrees the fully developed Roman Catholic doctrines of the Invocation of Saints and Purgatory. Men's minds were not satisfied with general prayers for light and peace; their practice of definite prayer for others during this life led them to demand something equally definite when they prayed for the dead. So they began to feel instinctively that prayer implied need, and then need suggested imperfection, and imperfection involved progress, and progress demanded purification and purification required suffering. And thus from suffering came at length the idea of Purgatory. All this only goes to show that men are never safe if they leave the sure foundation of the Word of God.

3. Prayer for the dead is really beyond the limits of prayer as revealed in Holy Scripture. It is impossible to argue from the need of prayer here to the need of prayer there. The conditions of life are of course entirely different. In this world we have sin, sorrow, suffering, temptation, weakness, ignorance, all of which are reasons for definite, earnest, intercessory prayers. But in the world to come there are none of these things. How, therefore, and for what, can we pray?

4. Prayer for the dead reflects on the glorious hope of Christians. In the New Testament believers are bidden to look forward with joy, expectation, and satisfaction to their departure from this world. Can any one imagine that the martyr Stephen when he prayed, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit", was going to a place where he had to be purified from the stains of sin? Surely not. Prayer for the dead clouds the Christian's joy and darkens his glorious hope. Besides, what about those who are alive when the Lord comes? Scripture says they are to be changed in a moment (1 Cor. 15:52; 1 Thess. 4:15-17).

and not to enter upon a long process of purification. Yet if these are to be changed in a moment, why may it not be so with all other believers who died in the Lord?

WHAT IS THE GREAT SAFEGUARD AGAINST PRAYERS FOR THE DEAD?

There is one glorious New Testament truth which is the very opposite of this practice and reveals the utter needlessness of it. It is the blessed and satisfying truth of Justification by Christ through faith. This means that at and from the moment of the repentant and believing sinner's acceptance of Christ Jesus as his Saviour he is "justified from all things" (Acts 13:39). The Lord Jesus Christ becomes his righteousness, and in Christ the believer becomes God's righteousness (2 Cor. 5:21). This righteousness of God gives him a perfect and permanent spiritual standing before the presence of God. Our position with God which was lost by sin and involved us in guilt, condemnation, and separation, is now more than restored in the Lord Jesus Christ. The Lord as our Righteousness covers the whole of our sin-stained past, meets the various needs of our present life, and gives us our title to everlasting glory. The soul thus united to Christ is able to say:

"Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect?" (No guilt.)

"Who is he that condemneth?" (No condemnation.)

"Who shall separate us from the love of Christ?" (No separation.)

The soul believes the inspired word of the Apostle, who says: "Giving thanks unto the Father, who Hath Made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light" (Col. 1:12), for the simple reason that the work of our Lords' Atonement covers everything, past, present, and future. "By one offering He hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified" (Heb. 10:14). The believer rejoices to know that already he has come into union with "the spirits of just men Made Perfect" (Heb. 12:23). His title to heaven is a matter of free gift by the grace of God, though his place in heaven will depend on his faithfulness to that grace of God since his conversion. But so far as his title is concerned it is assured and guaranteed in Christ, because our justification is perfect, permanent and everlasting, enabling the soul to look upward and forward, saying:

"Jesus, Thy blood and righteousness
My beauty are, my glorious dress;
'Mid flaming worlds in these arrayed ,
With joy shall I lift up my head."

In the midst of this blessed assurance, this glorious experience, this bright expectation, where is prayer for the dead? It is excluded.

And all this blessedness and glory may be ours from this moment if we will in simple repentance and humble trust accept God's gift in Christ, for "the righteousness of God is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all and upon all them that believe" (Rom. 3:22).—Rev. W. H. Griffeth Thomas, D. D. Reprinted from "The Wonderful Word".

SOME HIGHER CRITICS AND THE HEBREW LANGUAGE

By B. A. M. Schapiro

Managing Director Hebrew-Christian Publication Society,

KINDLY respect for the dead is demanded by universally accepted ethics and righteous human instinct. When the dead have been of high character and ability and have won and held the admiration and confidence of the public, reverence for their qualities and achievements is a sacred duty. Nevertheless, when such dead have left behind them record of mistakes and misapprehensions likely to cause harm to multitudes of the living, those mistakes should be corrected. Words and teachings live to work injury or blessing after those who have spoken or written them are buried. If the words and teachings are fallacious and tend to deprive thousands of people of faith giving comfort and guidance by which to live and hope by which to die, the fallacies must be exposed. Our errors are not interred with our bodies and do not take flight from earth with our souls. Unless combatted, they remain here to work evil. The fact that Macauley, most brilliant of historians, is dead, does not prevent other historians from demonstrating that sometimes he was wrong, both in assertion and deduction. Doctrines and policies of every statesman and president of this country, from Washington and Jefferson to Wilson and Harding, are analyzed and criticized. It would be weak and cowardly sentimentality to permit dangers to souls and hearts to ravage unchallenged and unresisted under protection of any names, however justly honored.

Representatives of that which is called the "Higher Criticism" systematically and ruthlessly assail and accuse the dead of long ago, the fathers, leaders, patient laborers and servants of the Christian Church, transcribing the Holy Scriptures. These long dead men, some forgotten because they had no care for distinction or earthly honors, others remembered but dimly, are charged by the higher critics with forgeries, deceit, transgressing the injunction and incurring the malediction at the end of the Book of Revelation—"If any man shall add to these things, God shall add to him the plagues that are written in this Book; and if any man should take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away His part of the book of life." The translators of the King James Version of the Scriptures, intrusted with the highest and most solemn duties because of their exalted characters, strong intellects and profound learning and now dead more than three hundred years, are charged with negligence and ignorance. In their dedicatory epistle to the king they predicted that they would be "Maligned by self-conceited brethren who run their own ways and give liking unto nothing but what is procured by themselves or hammered on their anvil."

Death does not confer infallibility nor immunity from correction of harmful error. With abundant charity and full recognition of the frailties by which even the wisest and best of human beings are beset, I feel it to be an imperative duty to consider and dissent from assertions publicly made and widely circulated by two gentlemen whose lamented deaths were comparatively recent—the Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbot and Dr. Charles A. Briggs. I would be derelict if I refrained from presenting evidence to sustain the integrity and inspiration of the Holy Scriptures in view of the fact that men of such exalted position and reputation for scholarship sowed seeds of doubt which may sprout—probably have sprouted to noxious and poisonous weeds of skepticism and infidelity.

The Hebrew Texts.

All must concede that the Christian religion is a mighty power, if not the one dependable agency we have, for the preservation of civilization and continuance of progress toward universal brotherhood and the establishment of peace for which all good and thoughtful people long. All that tends to impair its strength, whether by open onslaught or honest misinterpretation of misunderstanding, menaces the welfare of our race and must be met and defeated.

It may seem presumptuous, if not profane, to some, for a humble and comparatively obscure person, such as I am, to question the conclusions and assertions of shining and polished scholars so long known as masters and leaders of thought. I am, however, a Hebrew—a Jew and very proud of being one—and have the enquiring and analytical tendencies of my race. It happens, too, that if I know anything I know Hebrew, by inheritance, tradition, habit and study. Consequently, I have sought the sources to know what those who thought they had discovered in the Scriptures perversions, defects, mis-statements, deceptions, really had discovered, how far and deeply the explorers have explored; whether the actual, written records sustain or contradict the critics, confirm or discredit the truth and authority of the Scriptures.

Necessarily, I must use Hebrew texts, words, characters,

*This article will be published in tract form, and may be obtained by enclosing four cents in stamps. Address, Hebrew-Christian Publication Society, Inc., 405 Bible House, New York, N. Y.

unintelligible to many readers. They need not be uninteresting nor continue to be incomprehensible to any. Whether you, Reader, be Christian or Hebrew, sceptic, or hitherto not concerned, you should, as a citizen trying to be intelligent, seek to understand this tremendously important subject. I invite you, urge you, to submit my Hebrew citations, interpretations, translations, to any one having knowledge of that language—any rabbi, fairly well educated Jew, or graduate of a theological seminary—to say if they are correct. Nobody has denied the truth of what I have written and published. My case stands established. By all rules of law and evidence and practice in the courts, what I shall present must be accepted as true, indisputable, proved beyond question.

Let us begin with Dr. Abbott.

In a course of lectures in Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, on "The Bible as Literature", he was asked:

"Is it not the central teaching of the story of Eden that God created Adam upright and that he afterward fell from the higher conditions of the Law?"

Dr. Abbott replied: "Yes; creeds are founded on that idea. However, there is no mention of the fall of Adam throughout the Old Testament. No prophet, no psalmist, no historian, refers to it; the only mention being in the New Testament: 'Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned' (Rom. 5:12). This, however, is an interpolation."

This was a direct charge that some early, long dead Christian father, dedicating his life to the work of translating the Scriptures, deliberately committed a forgery by inserting an invention and sentence of his own as the language of St. Paul. How far Dr. Abbott allowed his opinion or the statement or opinion of somebody else, to obscure his recollection, may be seen by consulting the original, written, definite, undisputed record. Note and remember his words—"No prophet, no psalmist, no historian, refers to the fall in the Old Testament".

Contradictory Evidence.

And here is evidence contradicting him directly, absolutely, completely, that would drive him from the witness stand in any court, taken straight from the original Hebrew:

Hosea certainly is listed among the prophets. The seventh verse of the six chapter of Hosea says: "They like Adam have transgressed the covenant." והמה כאדם עברו ברית

"Covenant" in this connection means a law, a command. Adam was forbidden to eat the fruit from the tree of knowledge. For this use of the word see Jer. 31:33. את־בריתי It was unlike the covenant between God and Abraham (Gen. 15:18). ברית This was an agreement.

Evidently forgetting this, Dr. Abbott told his audience and the public and left behind him to be told to the world that no prophet refers to the fall, that the first reference to it was interpolated ages afterward in an epistle of St. Paul by an unknown person, that, therefore, there is no authority in Scriptures, aside from Genesis, for the story of the fall; by plain implication, that the theory of Christianity is based on a foundation of forgery by a translator.

Ezekiel also is named and recorded and regarded as one of the prophets. In the Hebrew text, thirty-first chapter, fourteenth verse, he declared, as fulfilled prophecy against Egypt: "They are all delivered unto death, to the nether parts of the earth in the midst of the children of Adam: כי כלם נתנו למות אל־ארץ תחתית בתוך בני אדם אל־יורדי בור:

David, Psalm 82:7, said: "But like Adam ye shall die." אכן כאדם תמותון

"But" refers here to a former well-known fact. The Psalmist there obviously had in mind God's judgment of death for sin pronounced upon Adam.

"No psalmist," he told his audience, and leaves recorded as his words, "refers to the fall."

Reader! take these texts I have given to anybody you can reach who has studied Hebrew and ask if I have translated them correctly. Then judge for yourself how much dependence is to be put on the proclamation of these "higher critics" in a matter involving your faith, your soul, your future after death, your hopes for your children and family, your aspirations for better and higher life, your natural yearnings to see again those you have loved who have gone in the grave, the welfare of your country and the world.

The Jewish historians wrote history, events, successions. I have given quotations from prophets and psalmist, living and writing many years apart, proving that the fall of Adam, said by Dr. Abbott to be largely an invention of a translator, was a familiar, accepted fact among the ancient Hebrews, referred to incidently as something too well known and understood to require explanation. Then comes Job. In his misery and searching for comfort he exclaims —see Job 31:33: "If I covered my transgression as Adam by hiding mine iniquity in my bosom." אם־כסיתי כאדם פשעי לטמן בחבי עוני:

Prophets, psalmist, sorely smitten servant of God and splendid poet, widely divided by circumstance and time, all knowing, recognizing and referring to the fall of man as a known fact; and yet this trusted authority telling us that no prophet, historian or psalmist referred to the fall and that the reference to it in St. Paul's Epistle was an after thought; that our foundations are rotten and our faith is honeycombed with falsehood. And from such assertions apostles of despair and foes of order and righteousness manufacture the propaganda of destruction.

All these writers from whom I have quoted used the word "Adam" אדם instead of "Enos" אנוש as found in Ps. 8:4, "What is man that thou art mindful of him or the son of man that thou visitest him"?

מה אנוש כי תזכרנו ובן אדם כי תפקדנו.

Or the name Gever גבר as used in Lam. 3:39, "Wherefore doth a living man complain, a man for the punishment of his sins"? מה יתאונן אדם חי גבר על חטאיו

Dr. Briggs and the Facts.

Dr. Abbott, perhaps, not assuming to be a profound Hebrew scholar, trusted too much to others. With Dr. Briggs it was different. He described himself as a Biblical critic, who "made special studies with Dr. Emil Rodiger, of Berlin"—"with", observe, not "under"—that famous Hebraist, who, as a scholar, "for over thirty years has given much attention to Hebrew poetry", and "has had to battle for it along against unreasoning prejudice". Yet Dr. Briggs wandered in the intricacies of reserve and Hebrew literature and language as distressfully as did Dr. Abbott and with about the same average of straying from the facts and realities. It is painful and startling to think of the number of students he may have misled. Let us hope that many of them sent from his instruction to confusion, darkness, the dismal desolation of belief in nothing and no hope anywhere, found light presently by kindly leading of God, clearing reason and the power of earlier training. That was a wise and hopeful old teacher who lifted his hat always to his pupils, partly, he explained, in recognition of possible future greatness—and one of those pupils was Martin Luther. There is comfort in the thought that perhaps in some minds, strong, dauntless and restless as Luther's, Dr. Briggs may have wakened the impulse to enquiry and searching of the Scriptures from which will develop fervent zeal for Christ and splendid proclamation of truth will reach far. If rejection of the Bible as the Word of God should become general, rejection of God and Christ and their commandments and teaching would follow, logically and inevitably, and we would adapt for ourselves the wild irreligious condition the Soviet government is trying to impose on the unhappy people of Russia.

Dr. Briggs was led into grievous injustice and another illustration of the shortcomings and misdirection of his researches by crediting his own nationality with the discovery of the rythmn, the pentimeters and the trimeteers of the Old Testament poetry, denying the Germans all part in it and ignoring us Jews entirely. His thought and research seem to have led him to imitation of all the radical higher critics in using every opportunity for thrusts at the descendants of those to whom, were committed "the oracles of God"; to insinuate, with covert sneer, that the kultur of the Jews, like the clothes in which some of them deal, was all second hand. Nevertheless, be it remembered that our forefathers knew the poetic value of the Hebrew Psalms long before Columbus discovered America! And, notwithstanding the unfriendly attitude of the scholars towards our people and their bias against everything Jewish, it must be conceded that we have ever been zealous, vigilant custodians of the Old Testament. Each word, nay, more, each letter, has been carefully preserved; and thus God's Word in all its fulness has been handed down to the Christian Church. God has made our people the defence, the bulwark, of the truth in all ages. In us He has provided an irrefragable argument against that form of skepticism prevailing in our day, known as "The Higher Criticism". Take away from the Bible the historical statements, and the glorious light of our blessed Christianity would be shrouded in Egyptian darkness! Our knowledge, now clear as the light of day, concerning God, the Holy Spirit, the atoning work of Christ, and the everlasting life beyond the grave, would all be turned into dreary, endless night. The very existence of our people is an unanswerable argument against these attacks upon the Bible!

The Twenty-seventh Psalm.

One of the special objects of Dr. Briggs' study and discussion was the twenty-seventh psalm. His investigation led him, like Dr. Abbott, to announcement of an interpolation, to the conviction that the tenth verse could not have been written by David, must have been inserted by some one at least a thousand years after David's death. Such alleged discoveries and deductions from them involve the whole question whether the Scriptures are the Word of God, inspired and directed by Him, or a mere patchwork of fancies, random additions and expurgations by irresponsible individuals, from time to time as moods and opportunities suggested. The Psalm under consideration is a superb outburst of the faith and hope and supplication of a courageous and strong man, realizing and recognizing the Almighty power, trusting to its mercy and justice. From the announced opinion of Dr. Briggs on its validity we may judge the real value of the reasoning and information on which those eager to believe nothing and to escape the restraints on conduct imposed by belief and conscience base their suggestion or demand that we abandon faith and hope, the foundations of our civilization and the mainspring of our upward progress. Because I intend that consideration of this special point shall be thorough and my conclusions convincing of the weakness of the "Higher Criticism", it is necessary to martial much evidence and to ask attention to cumulative facts and details.

It is but fair to recall that Dr. Briggs, in the preface to his book, "The International Commentary on The Psalms", which I am now considering, confesses his lack of full confidence in his own deductions. He says:

"If I could spend more years in preparation, doubtless I would do much better work. . . . . Whatever is true and sound in this work will endure; whatever is mistaken will soon be detected and perish. I would not have it otherwise."

It is deplorable that the doubts here indicated did not prevent publication and utterance tending to disturb that faith in the Scriptures as the Word of God which has given the world so much of its beauty, so many beautiful and richly fruitful lives, so much heroism and splendour of character and achievement. His assertions, however, have been written and printed, may be read by many and are beyond recall or amendment. All that can be done to prevent their working injury is to disprove them. Therefore, I assert and shall undertake to demonstrate that Dr. Briggs' conclusions regarding this Psalm are as essentially and exactly contrary to the facts as was Dr. Abbott's denial of allusion to the fall of man, by prophet, psalmist or historian. Taking direct issue with Dr. Briggs, I assert that neither the Twenty-seventh Psalm nor the tenth verse of it was written in the Maccabean period, as Dr. Briggs said they were;

That David wrote both psalm and verse, as Dr. Briggs said he did not.

Dr. Briggs, in the preface already quoted, said that in addition to being "professor of Hebrew, he also was professor of cognate Bible languages". It seems, therefore, he should have known that at the time of the Maccabees the oral and written language of the Jews was Aramaic, and that he should have been acquainted with that language. Had the verse been a gloss, as Dr. Briggs charges, the writer would not have used the Hebrew כי־אבי ואמי עזבוני but the Aramaic, which is כי אבא ואמא שבקנא or the verb קבלנא for "take me up". As an illustration in point, we cite Daniel 2:44, "Thy kingdom shall not be left to other people" ומלכותה לעם אחרן לא תשתבק Another illustration is Daniel 4:23, "Leave the stump ודי אמרו למשבק עקר שרשוהי In the same way, Christ on the Cross used the Aramaic "sabachthani", שבקתני instead of the Hebrew, עזבתני "azabthani".

The Use of Aramaic.

If the writer of this verse had lived and written during the Maccabean period he would not have said, "Then will Jahweh take me up"; that is, he would not have said "Jahweh", יהוה but "Elohu". אלהא For at the time of the Maccabees the name Jahweh, had ceased to be employed, and nowhere does it appear as the name for God when the Aramaic is used. Witness, in the first nine chapters of Daniel which are in Aramaic, only Elohu is found. At the Maccabean period—much later than that of Daniel—the superstitious reverence for the name Jahweh had become intensified and universal; hence it is inconceivable, first, that the writer would have used Hebrew and not Aramaic; and, if Aramaic, certainly Wvahweh יהוה would not have been employed as the name for God, but Welohu, ואלהא.

It is contrary to all human experience and observation that the sons should be more faithful to and observant of the forms of the religious faith of their ancestors than the fathers, more eager than the elders to preserve the old faith and to maintain the old religion with its obligations and hard discipline, and that it was the old people, the fathers and mothers, who hastened to adopt the new religion with its Hellenistic tendencies. Pope's couplet tells an age old, universal truth—

> "We think our fathers fools, so wise we grow;
> Our wiser sons will doubtless think us so".

In religion, as in all other affairs of life, the young and not the old are the seekers after new things. Dr. Briggs, perhaps yielding to the human weakness of anxiety to uphold a theory adopted, to disprove the authorship of David and bring the tenth verse a thousand years later than its real origin, reversed this established rule of human nature and would have the elders seeking the new, the young adhering to the old. Further, he forgot, ignored, overlooked or disregarded facts which should be familiar to any industrious and diligent student of the Hebrew Scripture. He passed by the above unanswerable objections to his translation of "take me up", and declared it to belong to "a time not earlier than the Maccabean period". "Take me up," he says, "is a late meaning of the Hebrew word." He does not state what meaning was in his mind. We presume that he meant the use of the verb in the sense of adoption—the Jahweh will "take me up", i. e., "will adopt me". It is true that ילד שנאסף מן השוק ואינו מכיר לא אביו used in this sense in the Talmud. When speaking of "a child that is taken up from the street and does not know its father and mother", the word used is "asufe", אסופי (see Babylonian Talmud, under "K'dishin").

So far from the word "asaph" being a late word, it occurs frequently in many of the older books of the Bible, including Job; indeed, that it is one of the common early Bible words.

Professor Briggs first imposed a late meaning upon the word יאספני and then insisted that the passage in which it occurs must necessarily belong to a late period, no matter what happens.

Since, as we have shown, this verse can not belong to the Maccabean period; but, because of the use of Aramaic and of Jahweh, must belong to a much earlier period, we are abundantly justified in giving to the verb יאספני "take me up", its earlier and more common significance, viz.: "to gather together", with the idea of protection. In that sense it is used early and frequently in the Hebrew Scripture—a fact overlooked by Dr. Briggs.

"And he shall set up an ensign for the nations and shall assemble the outcasts of Judah from the four corners of the earth," ונשא נס לגוים ונאסף נדחי ישראל (Isa. 11:12). Here the word יאספני is used in connection with a military figure ("an ensign"), and means that the Lord will take up the stragglers of Judah under the banner of His protection. Isa. 57:1, "The righteous perisheth, and no man layeth it to heart; and merciful men are taken away, none considering that the righteous is taken away from the evil to come". Isa. 52:12 reads, "For we shall not go out with haste, nor go by flight: for the Lord will go before you; and the God of Israel will be your rearward", יהוה ומאספכם אלהי ישראל. Isa. 58:8, "Then shall thy light break forth as the morning, and thine health shall spring forth speedily; and thy righteousness shall go before thee; the glory of the Lord shall be thy rearward". כי הלך לפניכם כבוד יהוה מאספך.

It is to be noted that the noun takes the place of the verb, and is a military term signifying rearguard, whose function it was to gather in the stragglers and protect the army: "Then the armed men went before the priests and blew the trumpets, and the rearward went after the Ark (Josh. 6:9), והמאסף הלך אחרי הארון.

"And the standard of Dan was in the rearward of all the camps" (Num. 10:25). ונסע דגל מחנה בני דן מאסף לכל המחנה

It is, consequently, certain beyond all controversy, that the verb יאספני used in the tenth verse of Psalm 27 was employed at an early date in a military sense, that of "gathering together for protection". How natural, therefore, that David should use it—he who was preeminently a warrior, and acquainted with military terms; just as a sailor is expected to use, almost unconsciously, nautical terms.

Imagination for Fact.

The natural pride of opinion most of us have, the allurement of allegiance to our own theories and fancied discoveries, seem to have tempted Dr. Briggs, as they tempt so many of the higher critics, to shut his eyes and his mind against opposing evidence and authority and seek confirmation and support for positions from imagination, supposition, or what he thought should be the fact; forgetting the fearful consequences of destruction of the Bible as guide and promise.

We venture to suggest what we think to have been the time and occasion of the utterance of this verse. We believe that it was written by David when he was in the Wilderness, hunted by Saul, and the news of the death of his father Jesse was brought to him. We are led to the conclusion—because of the small number of generations between him and his ancestor Salmon who lived during the Exodus—that when David was born Jesse was about fifty years old. Accordingly, the death of Jesse might reasonably be expected to occur about the time that David was in hiding from Saul in the Wilderness. The news of his father's death might well lead David to pour out his troubled soul by penning this Twenty-seventh Psalm—an early Psalm, be it noted—and to introduce into it the pathetic verse on which we have commented, "When my father and my mother have forsaken me, then will Jahweh take me under His protection".

The pathos, the dramatic appeal, the poetry, the music and the beauty of the Psalm, the unfaltering faith of the strong, splendid, sometimes sinful and bitterly repentant man, triumphing over loneliness, desolation and danger, mean nothing to those peering and searching for a flaw, regardless of the confusion and depravity they may plant in weak and wandering minds.

One other instance of obviously erroneous results from the delving of the Higher Critics in the Psalms, in effort to discredit the Bible as we have it—

Dr. Briggs undertook to translate the Eighteenth Psalm and he concluded it should be rendered as follows:

"SHEPHERD of Israel, O give ear.
Leader of Joseph as a flock;
Throned upon the Cherubim, O shine forth.
Before Ephraim and Manasseh.
Oh, stir up thy might,
And, Oh, come for salvation to us."

The Original Text.

למנצח אל־ששנים עדות לאסף מזמור:
רעה ישראל האזינה נהג כצאן יוסף ישב הכרבים הופיעה:
לפני אפרים ובנימן ומנשה עוררה את־גבורתך ולכה לישעתה לנו:

The Literal Translation of the Original Hebrew.

O Shepherd of Israel, give ear,
Thou who leddest forth Joseph like a flock,
Thou who art throned on the cherubim, appear!
Before Ephraim and Benjamin and Manasseh stir up thy strength,
And come! to our salvation.

The literal translation, as well as the original Hebrew the name "Benjamin" follows that of Ephraim in the fourth line. Dr. Briggs concluded that "Benjamin" was an interpolation, subsequent insertion, gloss, because Ephraim and Manasseh were the tribes that dwelt in the North, while Benjamin was in the South. That means they did not border on each other, as Benjamin belonged to the Judah. If Dr. Briggs had looked up in Numbers, second chapter, verses 18-24, he would have seen that Ephraim, Benjamin and Manasseh, journeyed in the Wilderness under the same flag. Besides that, he overlooked the fact that the Eightieth Psalm is a priestly Psalm and refers to the Tabernacle, "Thou that dwellest between the Cherubim shine forth", an allusion, of course, to the pillar that preceded the tribes in their journey. Yet, Dr. Briggs would attribute this passage to a later editor. So it is the Higher Critics are ever ready to do away with facts, if the facts are against them. Even though this be comparatively a trifle, it illustrates the shallowness of the delving, supposed to unearth argument against the authenticity of the Bible, the superficial character of the study that produces doubt of its origin and authorship. Very casual analysis of the International Critical Commentary of the Psalms by comparison of its contents with facts easily obtainable must convince any student that it is full of flaws as a sieve is of holes.

The "deceitfulness of riches" applies to intellectual as to material possessions. Much learning often carries with it ambitions to clear new heights, literary gymnastics, devise new things, destroy the most sacred and valuable of old things, to make the multitude gape and marvel with revelations and revolutionary declarations. Such ambitions have stirred in strong and active minds since the beginning of the human race and lured them to errors, sometimes perilous to humanity, sometimes merely absurd. For the stored mind there is the temptation, also, to concentrate on detail, in endeavor to be profound, while forgetting the large purposes and wide meanings—large and wide as eternity and the firmament. This type of pedant was known to Bunyan, three hundred years ago, described accurately by him as the man at Interpreter's house disregarding the heavenly crown offered to him, absorbed with raking together useless bits of stick and straw.

There is no need to rely on sentiment, on holy and lovely memories or inherited or instilled loyalty, to sustain the Holy Scriptures as the Word and Revelation of the Almighty Creator. They will endure triumphantly every test of reason and research, if the research be honest pursuit of truth. Lord Bacon, one of the wisest and most deeply learned men in history, said that a little philosophy might incline a man to atheism, but "depth in philosophy bringeth man back to religion". I hope and believe the array of facts and records I present here confirm exactly the conclusion of that great philosopher.

INTRODUCTION.

I. What Is the Bible?

Is the Bible the Word of God, or is it the word of man?

1. God declares that the Bible is His Word, that He has spoken and written it (Heb. 1:1, 2; 2:1-3; Ps. 119: 89; 2 Peter 1:21; 2 Tim. 3:16).

2. Of the thirty-six or more men of God inspired by the Spirit to write the different portions of the Bible, not one ever claimed that what he wrote was his own word, but they declare that they spoke and wrote the Word of God (Lev. 27:34; Num. 36:13; Deut. 31:24-26; Josh. 24:26; Ezra 7:6; Jer. 1:1-10; Ezek. 1:3; Hosea 1:1; Joel 1:1; Zech. 1:1; Gal. 1:1, 11-5).

3. Human history, in every age, proves that the Bible is the Word of God, because all men, saints or sinners, individuals or nations, speak and act according to the Bible, the mirror of their character and conduct. It contains every man's photograph from infancy to old age, true to life (Jas. 1:22-24; Jer. 17:9; Rom. 1:18 to 3:18; Eph. 2:1-3; Acts 2:23; Matt. 24:7; Dan. 7:11; Prov. 11:15, 25, 26; 28:13).

4. Satan, the enemy of God and His people, proves that the Bible is the Word of God, by acting in conformity with his character and ways as revealed therein (John 8: 44; Gen. 3:1, 2; Job 1:9; 2:5; Rev. 12:9, 10; Eph. 6:12; Rev. 20:7, 8).

5. God's works, in creation and redemption, because in harmony with the Bible, prove that it is His Word (Job 37:10-13; Ps. 104:24-30; 19:1-10; Isa. 55:11; 53:6; Acts 2:23; Matt. 12:40; 27:63; 28:6).

6. Jesus Christ, by His words and works, in His life death and resurrection, proved all of the Old Testament to be the Word of God (Matt. 1:18-22; 2:15, 23; 3:16; Isa. 61:1; Acts 10:38; Luke 4:18-21; Matt. 8:17; 26:56; 27:9, 35; Luke 24:25-27, 44-46; John 3:14; 19:36, 37; 20:9; Ps. 16:10; Acts 2:25-31).

7. The life and service of every true believer in this "present evil age" prove that the New Testament is the Word of God (2 Cor. 3:1-3; Acts 1:8; John 17:18; Gal. 2:20; 1:15; Rom. 1:16; 10:9, 10; 6:4; 1 Cor. 15:3, 4; 2 Cor. 3:18).

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed—"Thy word have I hid in my heart" (Psalm 119:11).

This week the following verse was submitted by Mrs. Leona Castlen, of San Francisco, Cal.:

"I have set the Lord always before me: because he is at my right hand, I shall not be moved" (Psalm 16:8).

Who will send one from the far-away places, as well as very near us?

OUR NATIONAL HYMN

By H. H. Smith

WHILE "The Star-Spangled Banner" is prescribed by army and navy regulations as our national anthem, "My Country, 'Tis of Thee", is our popular national hymn. Samuel Francis Smith, who was a class-mate of Oliver Wendell Holmes at Harvard, is the author of "My Country, 'Tis of Thee". In a class poem, Dr. Holmes once described him thus:

"And there's a fine youngster of excellent pith,
Fate tried to conceal him by naming him Smith;
But he shouted a song for the brave and the free—
Just read on his medal, 'my country', 'of thee'."

Later in life, when Smith's hymn had become universally admired as our patriotic air, Dr. Holmes said to him: "Your name and fame will live when I and my works are forgotten."

It was while he was a student for the Baptist ministry at Andover Theological Seminary, that he wrote "America". It was written in less than a half an hour. Dr. Tillett, in "The Methodist Hymnal Annotated", says: "The author had not the remotest idea that the words he dashed off thus hurriedly would ever become a favorite with any lovers of music and song, much less become the national hymn of a great and growing nation. National hymns do not become such by virtue of their loftiness of poetic thought and expression, but because they have in them that indefinable, simple something that gets into the hearts of the people. Greater national songs than this have been written—hymns surpassing it in dignity and nobility of thought—but it is doubtful if we shall ever have in America a national hymn more popular with the people than this."

When some one expressed regret in the presence of Dr. Smith that our national hymn should have the same meter and tune as the national hymn of England, he replied: "I don't share this regret. On the contrary, I deem it a new and beautiful bond between the mother country and her daughter."

It was written in 1832, and was first sung that year at a children's Fourth of July celebration in Park Street Church, Boston.

The following verses, published in the Boston Courier in 1885, indicate the wide use our public schools have made of this national song:

Passing the Primary School.

"Again each morning as we pass
The city streets along,
We hear the voices of the class
Ring out the nation's song.

The small boys' treble piping clear,
The bigger boys' low growl,
And from the boy who has no ear
A weird, discordant howl.

With swelling hearts we hear them sing
'My country, 'tis of thee—'
From childish throats the anthem ring,
'Sweet land of liberty!'

Their little hearts aglow with pride,
Each with exultant tongue
Proclaims: 'From every mountain side
Let Freedom's song be sung.'

Let him who'd criticise the time,
Or scout the harmony,
Betake him to some other clime—
No patriot is he!

From scenes like these our grandeur springs,
And we shall e'er be strong,
While o'er the land the schoolhouse rings
Each day with Freedom's song."

Dr. Ninde, author of "The Story of the American Hymn", quotes Dr. Smith as saying late in life: "I have heard 'America' sung half way round the world. I have heard it on the Atlantic Ocean, on the Baltic Sea, and on the Mediterranean; in London, Liverpool, Stockholm, Copenhagen, Paris, Rome, Naples, in the baths at Pompeii, in Athens, Calcutta, and Rangoon. On the earth I have heard it on Pike's Peake, and under the earth in the caverns at Manitou, Colorado, where it was played on the stalactites."

SHORT FAMILY PRAYERS

Reverend Joshua Peterkin, D. D.

THURSDAY MORNING.

ALMIGHTY and everlasting God, we are now met together to thank Thee for the mercies of the past night, and to acknowledge that it is by Thy goodness that we are preserved from day to day.

O Lord, protect us this day from evil. Go forth with us to the several duties of our stations. Let Thy blessing rest upon the employments in which we shall engage; may we undertake nothing contrary to Thy will; and do Thou enable us to do all things in Thy fear and to Thy glory. We would bear in mind that without the assistance of Thy grace we can do no good thing; that without the concurrence of Thy phovidence we can fulfill no purpose of our minds; unto Thee, therefore, may our eyes be continually lifted up. Put Thy Spirit into our hearts that we may not depart from Thee. May we lay aside every weight, and the sins which do most easily beset us, ever looking unto Him who is the author and finisher of our faith, and pressing towards the mark for the prize of our high calling, in Christ Jesus. May we not be weary in well doing, but remember that in due season we shall reap if we faint not.

Bless, O Lord, every member of this family; grant that each of us by Thy mercy may obtain everlasting life. Have mercy on our friends and relations. Comfort the poor and afflicted; and supply the various wants of all Thy creatures. We ask every blessing in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

Our Father, &c.

The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, &c.

THURSDAY EVENING.

Almighty God, our creator and preserver, may we come before Thee this evening under a due sense of our dependence upon Thee, and do Thou enable us to commit ourselves to Thy care with full confidence in Thy never-failing goodness and in Thy divine power.

We desire to remember that Thine eye is always upon us, that Thou art about our bed and about our path, and spiest out all our ways. We pray, Thee, for our Lord Jesus Christ's sake to pardon whatever we have done wrong this day. We trust in the mediation of that Saviour who died for our sins, and rose again for our justification.

Send down upon us, we beseech Thee, the influences of Thy Holy Spirit to strengthen us in the performance of every duty, and to console us in every trouble. Enable us to repress every evil passion, all selfishness, vanity and pride. May we be clothed with humility, and abound in love both toward Thee, our Father in Heaven, and toward our brethren of mankind. And whereinsoever we fail, may it be our constant effort to amend our lives according to Thy holy word. We pray Thee to accept our thanks for the mercies of the past day. We praise Thee for every blessing which Thou hast bestowed upon us, and for every deliverance from sorrow and danger, from sickness and pain. Be with us, we beseech Thee, in all time to come, and bless to us the various conditions of life through which we may pass. Make us humble in prosperity and patient in adversity, grateful for all Thy mercies, especially for Thine unspeakable love in our redemption through Jesus Christ.

We commit to Thy gracious care all our relations and friends, beseeching Thee to take them and us into Thy holy keeping, and to give us, at last, an abundant entrance into Thine everlasting kingdom. All of which we humbly ask in the name of Jesus Christ, our only mediator and advocate. Amen.

Our Father, &c.

The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, &c.

FOURTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY

By Berkeley Minor

COLLECT.

O God, the Protector of all that trust in Thee, without whom nothing is strong, nothing is holy; increase and multiply upon us Thy mercy, that, Thou being our Ruler and Guide, we may so pass through things temporal, that we finally lose not the things eternal. Grant this, O Heavenly Father, for Jesus Christ's sake, our Lord. Amen.

THIS Collect lacks one of the six parts, the attribute, the address being simply "O God;" then comes the ascription, a most beautiful one, ascribing to God all strength and holiness; then a petition for a fuller exercise of that most noble attribute of deity, His mercy, "whose compassions fail not, but are new every morning", so great is His faithfulness (Lam. 3:22-23).

It is noteworthy how often is this attribute of mercy in our Heavenly Father appealed to in our Prayer Book prayers, and especially in the ejaculatory utterances, such as we find in the Litanies, the Penitential Office, and the Burial of the Dead; e. g. (in the Lesser Litany), "Lord, have mercy upon us; Christ, have mercy upon us"; repeated, twice. And it is often appealed to in the collects, e. g.: those for the Epiphany and in the First, Second and Third Sundays after Easter.

If one notes in a Concordance the words "mercy", "mercies", "merciful", "tender mercies", etc., he will find numberless cases in prayer and praise of ascription of mercy to God, and appeals to it and not less in the Old Testament than in the New; though we should expect more in the New, as the saints of old in that Testament and dispensation knew not as fully as we do, who have the Gospel fully revealed, God's crowning mercy, in giving His Son, His only Son, to suffer death on the cross for our redemption. The collect concludes with the usual mediation, and Amen.

THE Epistle for this Sunday is Romans 8:18-23. The chapter from which our Epistle comes is full of comfort; its promises are so precious, and so full. However safe we may be (and I believe that many true Christians are entirely "safe in the arms of Jesus" without a full assurance of it), yet without that assurance and full consciousness of our safety in His care, our Christian pilgrimage must lack more or less the happiness He means us to enjoy "in the wilderness of this world". For happiness and full enjoyment of the Christian life we may, and must, have that testimony of the Spirit, given us by St. Paul in verses 16 and 17: "The Spirit Himself (not itself, as in the A. V.) beareth witness with our spirit that we are children of God; and if children, then heirs, and joint-heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with Him, that we may be also glorified with Him." John Wesley had not this assurance until some years after he had been a communicant and presbyter, and had been an earnest worker in the vineyard of the Lord, both as layman and ordained minister. When under the guidance of the Moravian brethren, who asked him if he had this testimony of the Holy Spirit to his spirit, that he was a child of God, born from above, he had it not, he thought, because in a great storm on the Atlantic (as he went to Georgia, and again on his return) he feared death, while the Moravians on board were fearless. I think Wesley was mistaken, for the test of the new birth applied by the Moravian bishop (Spangenberg), and of genuine conversion, is the best and surest; but it is not the only one. The fruits of the Spirit may appear and be good proof, as in Wesley's case, that he is an heir of God, a joint-heir with Christ. Galations 5:22 and Matthew 7:16 show us that these "fruits of the Spirit" are an excellent proof of that new birth so necessary for salvation. In Galations 5 the manifold works of the flesh are set forth in contrast with the fruits of the Spirit. Seventeen "works of the flesh" are given as specimens, "adultery, fornication, uncleanness, etc.," and nine of the fruits of the Spirit, e. g.: "love, joy, peace, etc."; in St. Matthew 7:16 we find "by their fruits ye shall know them" (the false prophets). So we have both a positive and a negative test. Observe that 'joy" is given as one of the fruits of the Spirit, and surely the weakest, saddest Christian who may despair of reaching that happy height of assurance, does have times of joy in his Christian pilgrimages, gets glimpses of the gates of the celestial city, as Christian and Hopeful in the Pilgrim's Progress do, on the Delectable Mountains in Immanuel's land, whence they saw them faintly.

The Christian's great aim and object must be "the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added" unto them; and earnest, prayerful work for this kingdom of God, with faith to believe that it will surely come in His good time, will bring assurance, doubly sure, of entrance into that kingdom, as an "heir of God and a joint-heir of Christ" (Rom. 8:17).

For those who are striving with all their might to follow the steps of their Lord and Saviour and still have not yet gotten that testimony of the Holy Spirit to their spirits, let the last two verses of this chapter of Romans (not taken into our Epistle for this Sunday) be a careful study, with earnest prayer for full belief in it, which full belief will assuredly bring the assurance we long for, that we are "heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ". In these last verses of the chapter St. Paul has used all his power of expression in words to prove his conviction and confidence that nothing in heaven or earth, or under the earth can separate us, faithful believers, "from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord". Hear his ringing words: "For I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord".

THE Gospel for this Fourth Sunday after Trinity is St. Luke 6:36-42, and is a portion of the Sermon on the Mount, as reported by that Evangelist. Luke gives us much less of Jesus' sermon than Matthew, only four of the nine Beatitudes given by Matthew, the first, second, fourth and ninth, the blessings invoked on the poor, the mourners, the hungry, and the reviled and evil-spoken of. The other five are omitted by Luke: the third (the meek), the fifth (the merciful), the sixth (the pure in heart), the seventh (the peace-makers) and the eighth (the persecuted for righteousness' sake).

But though Luke does not place the merciful among the blessed, he gives the injunction of Jesus (with which our Gospel begins): "Be ye therefore merciful, as your Father also is merciful", which probably led the composer of the collect to "collect", and place in the collect its petition: "Increase and multiply upon us Thy mercy . . ." St. Luke expands the teaching of Jesus in two places, as to treatment of our enemies, and as to rash judgment, and too high self-esteem; but adds nothing to what St. Matthew gives, except the four woes denounced on "the rich", the "full", those that "laugh now" and those "of whom all men speak well".

There is so much in the Bible of warning against the accumulation of this world's good things, that one cannot wonder that Jesus here denounces a woe to the rich. Although there have been, are still, some men of wealth who use it entirely as a trust from God, yet the temptation to selfishness and self-indulgence in wealth is so great that it is hard to see how a Christian can use the petition in the Lord's Prayer, "Lead us not into temptation", while he allows himself (or herself) to grow rich and like the "rich fool" to "pull down his barns and build greater". But what is wealth? We could be very sure of Jesus' approval if we followed strictly in His footsteps, where "walked those blessed feet, which fourteen (now nineteen) hundred years ago were nailed for our advantage to the bitter cross"; the footsteps of Him who said: "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay His head." But does He require, or wish, of us such a simple and abstemious life as He led? I cannot believe that our Lord requires or wishes of us a literal following of Him in this. There is enough told us in the Gospels to justify us in gratifying appetite, to some extent at least, beyond what is absolutely necessary for the maintenance of sound health. Jesus would not have given that abundant supply of the best wine for the wedding at Cana, if He disapproved of all such indulgence; and His presence on such an occasion shows His approval of such festivals. The parable of the marriage of the King's Son sanctions feasting on proper occasions. The King of the Kingdom of Heaven sends out a general invitation to this feast, saying that the "Oxen and fatlings are killed, and all things are ready". 'Tis plain that there must have been much there, more than was needed simply for the sustenance of the body. Jesus, too, sought figs on the leafy fig-tree, a wholesome, nourishing food, but more gratifying to appetite than the simple fare He twice deemed sufficient for the thousands whose hunger He thought proper to satisfy with only bread and fish, though He could just as easily have provided a sumptuous banquet. He gave them no doubt what was the common food of all, or nearly all of them; to give them more would have been catering to appetite, and tending to make them dissatisfied with that way of life unto which it had pleased God to call them, and to make them more ready, even than they were, after these miracles, to rise in rebellion against Rome, and make Him their temporal king.

But if our dear Lord and Saviour does not call upon His followers to follow strictly in His footsteps, in this matter, He surely does teach us to practice self-denial; and so the income which makes it difficult or impossible for the Christian to use such self-denial, as He approves and requires, must be too large, large enough at least to make a Christian of such income fear lest he be included in the class of "the rich" upon whom Jesus denounces the first "woe".

Let me dwell a little on the parable of this Gospel, "Can the blind lead the blind? Shall they not both fall into the ditch?" (or better, as in R. V.: "Can the blind guide the blind? Shall they not both fall into the pit?") It is one of the shortest of Jesus' parable, and one of the most expressive and useful. The fatal consequences of following blind guides, is best illustrated in the woes denounced upon the hypocritical Scribes and Pharisees by Jesus in Jerusalem on the Tuesday or Wednesday before His crucifixion. Eight of these woes are given by St. Matthew. Twice He calls them "blind guides", and five times calls them "blind", and seven times "hypocrites". Surely this should make us careful to avoid the guidance of blind guides, however high their position and rank in Church or State. Since those days of hypocritical Scribes and Pharisees how many blind guides have misled thousands, nay, millions, among them many bishops, popes and patriarchs!

But how shall we recognize blind guides? For the great body of mankind are not only like sheep in going astray, but are like them in their tendency to follow some leader. First of all, we must bear in mind that no mere man can be trusted entirely as leader and guide. There is no infallibility in popes or councils, however ecumenical. All have erred, and will continue to do so. There has been only one infallible Man-guide, Jesus of Nazareth; and any other man-guide we must test by likeness to Him; and so on All Saints' Day we pray for grace "to follow Thy blessed sains in all virtuous and Godly living"; so acknowledging their blindness as guides, in some respects. To discern in what respects they are blind, and not to be followed implicitly, is not always easy, though generally we may do so by careful comparison with what Jesus did and taught. But to profit by His teaching, and be rightly guided by it, can only be by the guidance of the Comforter whom Jesus has sent to take His place in the world, for whose aid we should pray constantly in the words of the Whit-sunday collect, asking for a "right judgment in all things, and evermore to rejoice in His holy comfort".

How even the best of men, the saints of God, may be blind guides in some matters, is well shown by what is recorded of St. Augustine, who justified religious persecution of a certain sort, by the parable of the Great Supper, wherein we read that the Master bade His servants "go out into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in". If such a one as he could so greatly misunderstand Jesus' teaching, it surely becomes us to distrust greatly the best of human teaching, and to pray constantly: "That it may please Thee to bring into the way of truth all such as have erred and are deceived; we beseech Thee to hear us, Good Lord." All, ourselves included.

A HARMONY OF THE LIFE OF ST. PAUL: By Frank J. Gordon, D. D. Cloth. Pp. 240. Published by American Tract Society, 7 West Forty-fifth, New York City. Price, $1.50. New Revised Second Edition.

Certainly a most desirable volume. Designed for divinity students and Bible teachers, it has the charm of the Harmony of the Life of our Lord with which we are generally acquainted. Whoever shall digest this simple and attractive arrangement of the great Apostle's life and work will have a treasury of knowledge that will stimulate to spiritual culture as well as his fund of information.

Especially commendable are the tables and maps, as well as the seventeen appendices which conclude the work. In short, it would seem that nothing is lacking to perfect this contribution to the literature of the missionary, doctrinal and ethical portion of the history of the New Testament Church. All lovers of St. Paul should own this book.

DO YOU KNOW YOUR BIBLE? A Bible Question Book: By George A. Birmingham. Published by Payson & Clarke, Ltd., New York. Cloth. Pp. 160. Price, $1.50.

The book deals with the Old and the New Testaments. Besides the general and the children's divisions, there are a number of special papers dealing with such subjects as the animals of the Bible, the mountains of the Bible, etc. The questions for children are easy; those for adults are not too hard for any one with a fair knowledge of the Bible. And the Answer section renders it simple to find by reference the proper answer where it occurs in the Bible giving the answer as well. Great care guards against irreverent usage.

DELIBERATE MISREPRESENTATION.

Mr. Editor:

In the issue of the "Living Church" of May 19, under the caption, "Blue Monday Musings", appears an article by "Presbyter Ignotus", in which he makes the following statements:

> "I have been looking over some of the documents sent out from various sources in the futile endeavor to waken a kind of negative enthusiasm for 'the Protestant faith' as distinguished from the Christian faith. All of them smell of the Ku Klux Klan and the Orange Order, which societies are pretty thoroughly discredited among us.

* * * * *

"One is the desperate attempt to use sainted old Bishop Tuttle as a Protagonist. His picture, in rochet and chimere, is printed above a group of Bishops in copes and mitres.

* * * * *

"Where on earth do these crusaders for the K. K. K. live, that they have so little knowledge? They evidently know nothing of England; for, if they did, they might have seen the Bishop of Birmingham arrayed in 'gorgeous vestments' such as those shown in the second picture, the said bishop being worthy of standing with two Episcopal guarantors of Judge Marsilliot's 'movement'."

In the first place, the insinuation that Protestant Episcopalians are contending for doctrines contrary to the Christian faith is nothing short of a deliberate misrepresentation. No one knows better than "Presbyter Ignotus" (whoever he is) that Protestant Episcopalians are insisting upon respect for and conformity to the doctrines and worship of the Church as she has set them forth in her Constitution and Prayer Book. Are the pronouncements of the Church with respect to her doctrine and worship contrary to the Christian faith? If they are, why did "Presbyter Ignotus", at ordination, promise conformity to them?

When loyal Protestant Episcopalians object to the attempt of the "Anglo-Catholic" party to overturn the Constitution and doctrine and worship of the Church, they are told that they "smell of the Ku Klux Klan and the Orange Order, which societies are pretty thoroughly discredited among us", and this is a fair sample of what may be expected from the "Anglo-Catholic" party if it is permitted, through the apathy and neglect of the laity, to gain control of the Church.

The worst offences justifiably laid at the door of the Ku Klux Klan are not comparable to the perfidy of any man who is ordained in the Church, who takes a solemn oath to conform to its "doctrine, discipline and worship", who holds himself out as a spiritual leader and then proceeds not only to introduce into the Church which has ordained him doctrines and ceremonies forbidden by its plainly expressed law, but to enter into an organized effort to overturn its Constitution and worship.

The same spirit which brought forth this abuse from "Presbyter Ignotus", in its logical and natural development, produced the events of St. Bartholomew's Day. It is the same spirit which actuated one Oldra, a Roman Jesuit, to deliver an address in the Church of the Holy Martyr, at Turin, Italy, as late as January 23 in the good year of our Lord 1927, in which, among other things, he said:

> When the Church has exhausted all its resources of Christian patience, when every attempt to persuade and every spiritual and material stimulus fails, and the guilty one deprived of his goods and separated from society, which he infects by his contagion, head-strong in his evil ways, continuing in his heretical propaganda, stubbornly persisting in wishing to compromise public order and the peace of Christian consciences, then there remains nothing else for the Church to do in order to defend itself and its subjects, and to compel the heretic to accept the true interpretation and obedience of the Catholic Church, except to inflict the penalty of death."

With regard to the reference by "Presbyter Ignotus' to the vestments worn by the Bishop of Birmingham, two things may be said. Whatever vestments may be worn in the Church of England is one thing, but the custom, which has made law, in the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America is quite another. Moreover, the Bishop of Birmingham has never been a party to the disloyal attempt to drag into his Church the Mass, Purgatory, Invocation of Saints, Worship of Images and Relics (such as the whisker from the beard of Charles I) in violation of his consecration oath and contrary to the law of his Church.

When "Presbyter Ignotus" referred to "Judge Marsilliot's movement", he was bound to know that he was misrepresenting the fact. The writer has no "movement". One hundred and four laymen and laywomen, hailing from all sections of the country, among them Justices of Supreme Courts, railroad presidents, bankers, lawyers of national reputation (except the writer) and women who have given the best years of their lives to faithful and loving service to the Church, united in an address to the laity, directing their attention to the effort of the "Anglo-Catholic" to subvert the Constitution, doctrine and worship of the Church, and urging them to unite in a courteous and respectful petition to their General Convention, asking it to vote down the resolution now before it to do away with the law against Mass, Purgatory, Invocation of Saints, Adoration of the Sacrament, Worship of Whiskers, etc. The petition was prepared by an able, godly and distinguished Bishop of the Church, who is now classed, by intimation, with "the Ku Klux Klan and the Orange Order, which societies are pretty thoroughly discredited among us". If the courageous and loyal Bishop of North Texas is "discredited" because of his great service in preparing this petition, he may well glory in the opprobrium attached thereto, for hundreds of thousands of Protestant Episcopalians are following his lead, as evidenced by the immense stack of letters in my office, coming from all parts of the country.

This outbreak from "Presbyter Ignotus" is obviously caused by alarm in the camp of the "Anglo-Catholic" party, due to the fact that the petition is being widely circulated throughout the country, and that loyal Protestant Episcopalians, from ocean to ocean and from the Lakes to the Gulf, are becoming aroused to the "Anglo-Catholic" attempt to deprive them of their Protestant heritage and to drive them from their spiritual home.

This attack on loyal Bishops, Clergy and Laity ought to convince Protestant Episcopalians everywhere of the exact character and purpose of this "Anglo-Catholic" movement in the Church and that there should be neither faltering nor lagging until it is placed where it belongs, in oblivion, if the Church is to be preserved as handed down to us through the sacrifices of blood and treasure of those who have gone before.

If the petition is thoroughly circulated through the countryside and in every hamlet, village and city in this broad land of ours and generally signed by Protestant Episcopalians, they have every reason to believe that their voice will be heard and heeded by their General Convention.

The Chinese Christians and Missionaries Appeal to the Christians of America to Save the Starving Children.

The Chinese Christians and missionaries have organized the National Association with headquarters in Shanghai to handle all funds sent them to save the starving children in the famine and war districts. Hon. H. H. Kung, Minister of Agriculture and Commerce in the Nationalist Government, a noted Christian leader, is president; Mrs. P. W. Kuo is secretary, and F. T. Kao is treasurer. These and other leading Christians and missionaries have formed this association to safeguard and wisely administer all gifts sent them to rescue the starving children. They cabled their appeal to hasten relief.

In various sections in the famine provinces and elsewhere in China, there are Christian centers or Homes where these homeless and helpless little ones are saved from starvation and fitted for lives of usefulness. The Christian forces in China are conducting this work for His sake. Our love for Him and for the children of China is revealed in the work of this association.

The Association for the Welfare of the Children of China, 150 Fifth Avenue, New York City, has been organized and duly incorporated to cooperate with these Chinese Christian leaders and missionaries in meeting the terrible distress of China's childhood. Dr. Howard A. Kelly, Wm. Albert Harbison, Dr. W. M. Turnbull, Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery, Bishop James Cannon, Jr., and many other friends of China are cooperating in conducting the Association.

This Association and General Famine Relief Committee.

These two groups are working at the same great problem, but with two distinct phases. The General Famine Relief Committee by giving work to the adults through building roads, dykes, etc., help keep the family together. Our Association is seeking to save the children of the wrecked homes, working through the Christian centers or Homes.

The Suffering of the Children is the Most Distressing.

Roy Allison, Presbyterian missionary in Shantung, writes: "Boys and girls are being sold for $1 apiece; also are abandoned on the streets. It is truly pitiful to see two little tots going hand in hand who have been abandoned by their parents."

"See that ye despise not one of these little ones." What we do now to save the children will mightily influence future China for our Lord and Master.

Write for literature. Gifts may be sent to Association For the Welfare of the Children of China, or W. Albert Harbison, Treasurer, 150 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Mid-West Meeting at Washington.

At a meeting of the President and Council of the Mid-West held in May, the President of the Synod, the Rt. Rev. Campbell Gray, presented plans for a dinner to be held in Washington during the time of the General Convention, to which all of the Bishops, the clerical and lay deputies, the Woman's Auxiliary delegates, together with visitors from the twelve dioceses included in the Province, are to be invited. The Presiding Bishop of the Church and the Bishop of Washington have accepted invitations to be guests on the occasion, and the date has been set for Monday evening, October 15.

The President and Council of the Province unanimously indorsed the plan and asked the Secretary of the Synod, the Venerable Archdeacon Patterson of 2241 Prospect Avenue, Cleveland, to make the initial announcements and record the names of those who may wish to make reservations for this interesting occasion. Full details will be announced later.

National Church Club for Women, Inc.

During the General Convention in Washington, beginning October 10, the National Church Club for Women will maintain headquarters in a room in the Arlington Hotel, given through the hotel is most conveniently situated, on courtesy of Mr. J. T. Howard. This Vermont Avenue, at K and Fifteenth Streets. The headquarters will be for the convenience of members, and of those desiring to become members of the Club. It is important that all Churchwomen should have the address —the Arlington Hotel.

Brotherhood of St. Andrew Preparing For National Convention.

The Washington Committee of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew is actively at work in preparation for the coming National Convention, which meets in Washington in October, just prior to the General Convention. Luncheon meetings are held each week. Mr. H. Lawrence Choate, as chairman of the committee, is assisted by: John H. Finney, Vice-Chairman; F. Granville Munson, Secretary; Bruce Baird, Treasurer; H. W. Atkinson, Transportation; W. Sinclair Bowen, Halls and Churches; Wm. Earl Clark, Registration; Wm. R. Ellis, Hospitality; J. Harris Franklin, Music; Donald E. Gerow, Juniors; Wm. J. Moore, Hotels; Rev. Chas. T. Warren, Clergy; J. Bernard Wyckoff, Publicity.

Working with the Washington Committee and representing cooperating bodies are: Marcus Benjamin, Churchman's League; L. W. Glazebrook, Laymen's Service Association; Arthur C. Houghton, St. Stephen's Men's Club; Coleman Jennings, Toc H; Leslie Rucker, Diocesan Young People.

The National Committee for the Forty-second Convention is made up of the Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, Bishop of Delaware; Courtenay Barber, Leon C. Palmer and H. Lawrence Choate. The National Headquarters of the Brotherhood are now in Philadelphia, and the General Secretary is Mr. Leon C. Palmer, B. D.

Edward H. Bonsall, whose unselfish interest and continued devotion to the work of the Brotherhood has been largely responsible for much of the organization's success, is President of the Brotherhood. The Rt. Rev. John G. Murray, D. D., Presiding Bishop, is Honorary President. Vice-Presidents are Courtenay Barber, Walter Kidde, Benjamin F. Finney and G. Frank Shelby.

English and American Prayer Book Revisions.

Bishop Slattery, of Boston, Chairman of the Joint Committee having in charge proposed revisions of the Prayer Book of the Protestant Episcopal Church of America, thinks the Thirty-nine Articles will be retained in the book by the Triennial Convention to meet at Washington in October. In a statement published by the secular press he says the Articles are "cordially disliked" by the Modernists and extreme High Churchmen, but as many believe their removal would mean repudiation of traditional doctrines of the Church, they probably will be retained in deference to this feeling.

Bishop Slattery continued:

"The chief difference between the English and American revision of the Prayer Book is that the English Church is providing for the reservation of the consecrated bread and wine of the holy communion, and the American Church, in its book, makes no such provision. At the Convention of 1925 the House of Bishops adopted a measure allowing for reservations under certain conditions, but it was defeated in the House of Clerical and Lay Deputies. This defeat came from the same groups which today in England are reopening rubrics on reservation—namely, the extreme low Churchmen—who refuse to allow any recognition of reservation whatever, and the extreme High Churchmen, who wish no limiting of their use of reservation."

Pointing out the differences of procedure in revisions between Great Britain, where changes must be passed upon by both houses of parliament, and this country, the Bishop recites that with us "the recommendations of the Prayer Book Commission must be passed by two successive Conventions before they can be adopted, and in the final vote the clergy and the laity of the House of Deputies vote separately, so that, even if all the Bishops and all the clerical deputies voted for a measure, one less than a majority of the laymen would defeat it."

Regarding the changes he thinks likely to be adopted, the Bishop says:

"The Commission appointed in 1913 finishes its work in 1928. The Convention in Washington next October will, it is expected, quickly vote upon the items accepted in 1925, and most of them will be adopted. We shall then have a greatly improved book. Without losing the power of Archbishop Cranmer's prose, we shall be freed from many archaic expressions which have lost meaning for our time or are misunderstood. Larger responsibility will be put upon the clergy, and they can make the services of the Church more real, more appealing.

"Baptism is lifted into the expression of God's loving care for His children; the marriage service makes the wife equal with the man in privilege and responsibility; the burial service substitutes New Testament trust for Old Testament fear; aspirations of our time for social justice, good government and world brotherhood are recognized; services may be made shorter, and, with hymns and sermon, may have a new force and a new unity. In a word, without ceasing to be the book of the ages, the Prayer Book becomes also the book of this generation." A. B. W.

Fifth Province Holds Religious Education Conference.

The first meeting of leaders in Religious Education for the Fifth Province was opened June 5, 1928, in St. Paul's Church, Kenwood, Chicago, by the Chairman of the Provincial Board of Religious Education, the Rev. Lewis B. Whittemore, of Grace Church, Grand Rapids. Every diocese in the Province but that of Indianapolis was represented.

The Rt. Rev. Campbell Gray, Bishop of Northern Indiana, and President of the Fifth Province, outlined very clearly the purpose of the conference, this being to some way fill the vacancy left by the cancelling of the National Conference, which was to have been held in Minneapolis.

After addresses on various subjects, the Rev. C. E. Bigler, of St. Andrew's, Kokomo, Ind., made the following motion: "That the Conference recommend to the Department of Religious Education of the Fifth Province that we put on a Crusade of the Church's Youth within the Fifth Province and that it be called to the attention of the whole Church at the General Convention in Washington, D. C., in October." This received a second by the Rev. H. F. Selcer, St. George's, Bellesville, Ill., and was unanimously adopted.

A suggestion was made that the Bishops of the Committee on the Children's Crusade be responsible for the presentation of the idea at the General Convention.

In the report of the Curriculum Committee there were recommendations to the National Department of Religious Education in regard to the revision of the Christian Nurture Series; also an expression of confidence in Dr. Ludlow and his plans for the promotion of Adult Education in the Church.

Much time of the Conference was devoted to the subject of Week-day Religious Education.

It was recommended that this conference go on record as approving of making this type of meeting an annual affair as it was felt that the Conference was a definite demonstration of the usefulness of the Province. Some have questioned this usefulness and have thought that the money spent by the diocese did not bring adequate returns. All present expressed themselves as feeling that this Conference had proven the justification and possibilities of the whole provincial idea.

"Gloria Dei" Celebrates Anniversary.

Nearly a century before the United States came into existence and several years before William Penn landed at the site of Philadelphia, a tiny blockhouse was built on the banks of the Delaware River. To celebrate the two hundred and fifty-first anniversary of that tiny place of worship, grown into the historic old Gloria Dei (Old Swedes) Church of today, two hundred and fifty persons crowded the oldest church in the State Sunday afternoon, June 17, to hear the historical address of Rev. Dr. Carl E. Grammer, rector of St. Stephen's Church, and to witness the unveiling of a tablet in memory of Mrs.

Susanna Richardson, who had been a member of the teaching staff of the Sunday School for over sixty years. The rector, the Rev. John Lowry Hady, also had charge of the dedication of a pew in memory of Mrs. Sarah Kindle, formerly one of the prominent and most earnest workers for the church.

VIRGINIA

Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, Bishop.

The Commencement Exercises of the Seminary in Virginia.

In his missionary sermon preached at the commencement of the Virginia Seminary, Bishop Murray urged the duty of every man to make that one contribution to the Kingdom of God which nobody else can, and stressed the fact that those who try to do this will be adequately empowered. If men consent to be God-placed they must agree to the conditions laid down; and the chief of these is "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature". The glory of the Virginia Seminary has been its acceptance of this missionary obligation, for its alumni have led the way in China, Japan, Brazil and Liberia. All told it has sent one hundred and thirty-five men to the various mission fields.

At the present time all the missionary fields need men, and they need the men with the greatest mental and spiritual gifts. "The place for ordinary men today is at home." Above all does the missionary work of today demand patience, humility, and deep spirituality. There is no thought of quitting China, though nobody can say what tomorrow may bring; within the next two years, however, each of our three dioceses in China will require three or four new men. Liberia needs one man a year; the Philippines need three men; Brazil requires one or two men each year. India is calling to us to take over a diocese. If we go there we shall have to have several men in the next five years. Every mission field needs replacements to succeed men who are about to retire. The Bishop concluded with a strong plea for volunteers.

At the graduating exercises of the Seminary held the morning of June 7, five members of the senior class received certificates of graduation; sixteen were given the degree of Bachelor of Divinity. This degree was also awarded to four men who, having completed their course in previous years, had subsequently written the required theses. The doctorate in Divinity was awarded to the Rev. Charles Clingman, rector of the Church of the Advent, Birmingham, Ala.; and to the Rev. Richard Trapnell, rector of St. Andrew's Church, Wilmington, Del.

The address was made by the Rt. Rev. Clinton S. Quin, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of Texas. His theme was the need for clergymen to live a Christ-like life, and the way to do it.

Though insisting on the need of strong and progressively enlightened intellect to proclaim successfully the Christian Philosophy and to defend it and the Bible, Bishop Quin asserted most emphatically that for one person who needed intellectual help the present-day clergyman met a hundred who required from him leading and faith. In the past men have been frightened and driven and even fooled into religion, but now they can only be led. A parson can lead only so far as he has gone himself and that means that he has got to have faith and a reserve of power. There is no place for childishness in the ministry, but great demand for a child-like faith. The Bishop rapidly outlined the bases of his own faith. Into this faith must be built a spiritual reserve. Innumerable things try a clergyman's patience and hope and vision. And unless he has something to fall back on in times of extra stress he will soon break. That reserve can be built up in one way, the practice of the presence of God.

At the alumni meeting, for which approximately two hundred graduates had returned, the following resolution was unanimously passed: "Be it resolved, in view of certain criticisms of the Seminary which have found voice during the past year, we, the alumni, in annual meeting assembled, wish to express our utmost confidence and trust in the present administration of the Seminary. Further, we ask that a copy of this resolution be published in The Southern Churchman and other Church papers in connection with the report of the Seminary commencement."

At the ordinations on Friday morning the sermon was preached by the Rev. H. H. Covington, D. D., of Norfolk, Va.

Reorganization of the Executive Board.

Under the rotation system used in the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia in electing the Executive Board, two clergymen and two laymen retire from the Board at each Council and successors are elected to take their places. At the close of the Council held May 15-16, 1928, the make-up of the Board was as follows: Ex-officio, the Rt. Rev. Robert Carter Jett, D. D., and Mr. Charles Francis Cocke, the Chancellor. Members whose terms expire with the Council of 1929: the Rev. G. Otis Mead, the Rev. F. Ernest Warren, Mr. Charles M. Hunter and Captain E. Walton Opie. Terms expiring in 1930: the Rev. Thos. M. Browne, the Rev. John J. Gravatt, Jr., Col. W. M. Brodie, Mr. C. Edwin Michael. Terms expiring in 1931: the Rev. Carleton Barnwell, the Rev. Alfred R. Berkeley, Mr. Charles P. Macgill, Mr. W. D. Tyler.

In addition to the above, the President of the Woman's Auxiliary, Mrs. W. H. B. Loving, is ex-officio a member of the board, with seat and voice, but without vote.

The first meeting of the new board was held May 29, when the departments were organized and their various chairmen and members elected. Several persons were elected as associate members of departments from outside the membership of the board, at the special request of the chairmen of these respective departments. Terms of office of all associate members expire at the time of the annual Council and new associates are elected at the first meeting of the board thereafter, or at succeeding meetings.

The Executive Board has no Department of Missions; the entire Board serving in this capacity.

Several interesting items of business were transacted at this first meeting of the new Executive Board; these chiefly having to do with the Virginia Episcopal School, the active control of which was taken over by the diocese at the recent session of Council.

The Council delegated to the Executive Board the duty of electing the first Board of Directors of the Virginia Episcopal School, but it was not possible to perform this duty at the first meeting of the Board. Initial steps, however, were taken toward the selection of a rector of the school to succeed the Rev. Dr. W. G. Pendleton, who has resigned that position effective August 1, to become rector of Grace Memorial Church, Lynchburg. It is hoped that the name of a new rector of the school can be announced within the next few weeks.

Commencement Exercises of St. Stephen's College.

The sixty-eighth commencement exercises of St. Stephen's College, Annandale-on-Hudson, which has lately become a member college of Columbia University, began on Sunday, June 10, with the baccalaureate service at which the preacher was the Rt. Rev. Charles Lewis Slattery, D. D., Bishop of Massachusetts, and formerly rector of Grace Church, New York City. Dr. Bernard Iddings Bell, Warden of the College, presided at the service and the choir rendered completely the Medieval service known as Missa Marialis. This evening the Senior Class were hosts at a dinner to the trustees, faculty, students and alumni in Preston Hall.

The commencement exercises were held on Tuesday afternoon. The Bachelor's degree was conferred upon eighteen candidates.

The honorary degree of Doctor of Laws was conferred upon the Hon. Edward R. Finch, Judge of the Supreme Court, State of New York; the Honorary degrees of Doctor of Divinity upon the Rev. Charles Lathrop, Social Service Secretary of the Episcopal Church, New York City, and the Rev. Rudolph Brestell, rector of St. Paul's Church, Camden, N. J.

The commencement address was delivered by Dr. James Lukens McConaughy, President of Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn.

In Memory of Bishop Satterlee.

The cornerstone of the Henry Yates Satterlee Parish House, attached to St. Alban's Church, Washington City, and named in honor of the first bishop of the Diocese of Washington, was laid the afternoon of June 17. The Rt. Rev. Charles T. Warner, who was nine years secretary to Bishop Satterlee and now is rector of St. Alban's, was the principal speaker. The stone was laid by the Very Rev. G. C. F. Bratenahl, dean of the diocese, formerly rector of St. Alban's, which was the first free church in Washington. The new building will be used for parish purposes, especially for the Sunday School, and will be opened in September.

New St. Andrew's Church.

Municipal permit has been issued for a two-story brick church, St. Andrew's, and parish house at 1525 Newton St., Washington City, at cost of $185,000. These buildings are for the congregation of St. Andrew's Church, Fourteenth Street near Columbia Road, the buildings and lot of which have been sold, the building torn down, because of encroachments of commerce.

Brotherhood of St. Andrew National Convention.

The Forty-second National Convention of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew will be held at Washington October 5-9. The Brotherhood was started in Chicago in 1886, largely through the efforts

COLLECT FOR FOURTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

O God, the Protector of all that trust in Thee, without Whom nothing is strong, nothing is holy; Increase and multiply upon us Thy mercy; that, Thou being Our Ruler and Guide, we may so pass through things temporal, that we finally lose not the things eternal. Grant this, O Heavenly Father, for Jesus Christ's sake, Our Lord. Amen.

UNHEARD MELODIES.

Anna Hamilton Wood.

How sweet the melodies we never hear
Because our hearts receive them, or our eyes.
Too sacred and ephemeral for the ear,
They creep into the spirit as replies
To life's eternal questioning and stress;
Angelic symphonies in muted strain,
Tearing the heart with voiceless loveliness,
Bridging the distance between joy and pain.

A new-born child, a sunrise, and the sweep
Of wind clouds on the sky; great cliffs, brown nosed,
Teasing the edging sea; the steady creep
Of Spring's unfolding life-force; love's repose
In surety—a myriad silent things
Through which the melody of heaven swings!

Sincerity.

Sincerity is a primary element of right character, a fundamental virtue that is the soul of every other virtue, without which the most beautiful grace, however fair it may seem, is only an empty mockery and offence. To be sincere is to be real, just what one professes and seems, free from deception and affectation and falsity, from all unreality, presenting not a painted or veneered surface but solid wood which, however it may be shaped and polished, chiselled or split open, is the same all the way through.

The etymology of the word in English, Latin and Greek is obscure, but it may help us to understand it. The word sincere has been thought to be from sine, without, and cera, wax, meaning without wax. This has been supposed to refer to honey from which all the wax has been strained out leaving it pure, or to wax used as putty to fill up cracks and holes in furniture. Another derivation is from two Latin words meaning to be wholly separated, presumably from all impure or fictitious elements. Turning to the Greek word translated sincere in Phil. 1:10, where Paul prays for the Philippians that they "may be sincere", we find two suggested derivations giving equally interesting meanings. One is from a root that means "tested by sunlight" as of something that is held up to the light and its searching rays are sent into every part of it, proving its purity and genuineness. Another suggested derivation is from a root meaning "turned around" or shaken so as to sift out all chaff or other impurities. A sincere person, then, is pure honey without wax or one out of whom adulterations have been strained so as to leave pure sweetness; or one in whom there are no holes or cracks covered up and concealed; or one who can be searched with penetrating sunlight, or turned around and shaken and found to contain no defect. An insincere person is one that is waxed and puttied and painted until you cannot tell what is reality and what is appearance, what is genuine and what is false. Or the insincere man when shaken up, say in some social snarl or business complication, will reveal some deception or misrepresentation or cunning shrewdness or fraud that you never suspected was in him. The general principle of sincerity, then, is reality as opposed to appearance, fact as opposed to falsity, truth as opposed to deception.

Now this principle we should apply and cultivate at every point in life. First, in our personal manner. See affectation of air and behavior, gesture and smile, how surely we detect it and how unpleasantly it affects us. We know it is not genuine, but is put on like so much paint and will easily rub off. Of course we should study our manners and seek to improve them. We will not excuse a boor because his rough manners are unaffected and honest; we say he should smooth off the rough places of his nature and polish it. But we do not want him to color and gild himself with artificial paints and pretensions. Let us cultivate good manners by all means, but let them be simple and unaffected and come from the heart. The plainest manners that are sincere are pleasing, while pompous affected airs are offensive and ridiculous.

Sincerity of speech is a vital virtue. Truth should be the warp and woof of every uttered word and acted sign. We should say what we mean and mean what we say. Positive deception is plain lying, which is one of the wickedest of sins, for it cuts up the roots of human society and renders all intercourse and fellowship impossible. But insincerity of speech may assume less shocking forms than lying, such as exaggeration, misrepresentation, deception, misleading words, phrases, hints, innuendoes, and all the subtle forms and shades of speech by which we may deceive others. These play the part of paint and putty to cover up our meaning and present a false appearance. These impregnate and saturate the stream of speech that should be clear and beautiful as a mountain spring and make it foul and poisonous. We should intensify and exercise a strong and fine sense of truthfulness and honor and make our speech sincere, exactly fitting facts and so conveying reality to others. This puts our social life on a basis of truth and then trust becomes possible.

Sincerity of character and conduct is a fundamental virtue. All our social relations and business transactions should be based upon honesty and reality. Sincerity of character is the fountain whence all true life must flow. If what we seem to be on the surface is different from what we are in the core of the heart, if our practice is at variance with our profession, if our conduct is at war with our creed, if we get people to believe that we are one thing while in our hearts we are another thing, all our life is on a false foundation, its root is rottenness and its blossom shall go up as the dust.

Especially should our religion be reality, the same inside and outside and through and through. If it is a creed that is put on as a mask, if it consists mainly of putty and paint that cover up holes and rotten places in our character and conduct, then it is insincerity of the worst kind and degree. No doubt there are some persons that profess religion and join the church for the deliberate purpose of using their religion as a cloak of respectability to conceal their rottenness. But most of us are in danger of a less shocking but more subtle insincerity. In so far as we willingly are worse than our religion, as we let our practice lag behind our profession, we are guilty of this sin. We should strive to make our practice fit our profession, and our character to approach and attain unto our ideal and thus we shall ever seem and be sincere.

The demand for sincerity is a dominant note of our day. We are insisting on it in every field, in teaching, in the professions, in the newspapers, in business and in all the relations of life. When the young people in one of our universities were asked to put down a list of virtues in the order of their importance, most of them put sincerity first. Especially do they want sincerity in religion, that our professions may be genuine and may then issue in the realities of life. Pretenses and mere professions, deceptions and humbugs of all kinds are out of date and we must know and tell and live the truth. So shall we "be sincere and void of offence unto the day of Christ".—Presbyterian Banner.

Family Prayer.

"More things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of;
Wherefore let thy voice rise like a fountain night and day
For what are men better than sheep or goats
That nourish a blind life within the brain
If knowing God they lift not hands of prayer
Both for themselves and those who call them friend.
For so the whole round earth is every way
Bound by gold chains about the feet of God."

Should Christian hearts, then, be strangers to this sweet exercise? Should Christian homes be silent as to prayers? Ah, not only in the sanctuary, but in individual hearts and homes, should this breath of faith go up to God. Morning by morning, or evening by evening should the family meet in this blessed exercise and ask God's blessings upon the day's work done, or guidance in the duties forth to which they go. It would be a strength and blessing to the parents' hearts in the midst of their care and their responsibility. It will be like a sheet-anchor to those young souls whom God has given you, holding them fast in all the storms of life, or if they should break away from their early moorings, then like a beacon would it stand to guide them safely back to port. The old home, the family altar, the voice of prayer—how much they mean and how deep their influence upon the wayward and the wandering! The old Church, God's holy day, the means of grace in praise and prayer, how much these mean to the weary, the burdened and oppressed! How much this blessed intercourse with God means to every heart, whether expressed in public or in private, for where prayer is offered, God is there ready to hear and bless.—William Carter, Ph. D., D. D., in "The Other Side of the Door".

NO OTHER WAY.

By F. B. Stone.

We strive and fail, and vainly strive again,
To solve the problems in the lives of men,
Forgetting Thou didst solve them long ago,
When Thou to men the Way of Life didst show,
We think the minds that Thou to us didst give,
Themselves must find a way for men to live.

The way is through obedience unto Thee,
To do Thy will, through our eyes may not see
Just how Thy power can bring the change about,
Ours to obey, in face of every doubt.

"Ye cannot serve the world and serve Me too,"
These words to men forevermore are true;
For old and young the way to God must be,
'Deny thyself and follow, follow Me."

The while our minds are searching for the key,
Thy lambs are straying further, Lord, from Thee,
O help us all to grasp the truth today,
Thou hadst not died, had there been other way;
So clear our minds they cannot fail to see,
That all are lost who come not unto Thee.

Do You Encourage Your Children?

"You'll never mend that wagon," said a mother to her twelve-year-old son. He was trying to repair his sister's toy wagon.

"Why not?" asked the boy.

"It's too difficult," replied the mother. "Father will do it when he comes home.'

"I'll do it myself," answered the boy. "I promised Doris I would, and I'm going to do it."

The boy was certainly made of the right stuff. It was not long before he brought the wagon to his little sister, "repaired as well as Father could have done it". This showed unusual persistency, in the face of opposition. Many a boy would have given up—not because the task was hard but because his mother had said it was hard.

We mothers have a grave responsibility. If we put doubt into our children's hearts, how can we expect them to succeed?

"You cannot do it," says a mother, and generally the child leaves it alone.

"You can do it," says another mother, and straightway renewed ardor comes to the child, and he does it.

We ought to know, by our own feelings, that when a person says we cannot do a thing, we do not feel inclined to continue trying. Children are even more sensitive than we are.

Many a man owes his success in life to his mother's early encouragement. A child generally has implicit belief in his mother, therefore when she says he can't he thinks he can't. I believe this is even more true of girls than of boys. Sometimes a boy will stick to his purpose, even when he has to fight for it but a girl does not rough it so much, and as she is under her mother's influence longer, she is more likely to be swayed by her.

I knew a woman who imagined her child was good for nothing simply because she was a girl. She was always lamenting the fact that she had no boys. Of course, the girl never tried to do anything out of the common, so when she was left alone she could only go as a general helper. I often thought the girl was ambitious, but what chance had she against such a mother? Of course, in years to come she may throw off this unfortunate influence of her mother, but think of the years wasted before she does so!

My little girl tries the most extraordinary things, so it seems to me! She shows talent for painting, whereas I cannot draw a straight line! I encourage her in every undertaking. I always tell her that she will succeed, if she keeps on trying. At four and a half she received a prize for painting, and since then she has had other prizes, some for writing stories! She is only twelve years of age and I expect great things from her, because she never gives up once she has undertaken something. I encourage her all I can. I consider it a mother's duty to encourage her children.

After all, when you tell a child she can do things, you are only showing your belief in her. It would be a poor mother who would not believe in her own child!—Mrs. Nestor Noel.

The Indian's Twenty-third Psalm.

The Indian language is not easily subject to translation, and in their intercourse with one another the various tribes use a sign language, more or less universal, which they have evolved. The following is the translation of the twenty-third Psalm, which can be easily interpreted in sign language:

The Great Father above is a Shepherd Chief. I am His, and with Him I want not.

He throws out to me a rope, and the name of the rope is love, and He draws me to where the grass is green and the water is not dangerous and I eat and lie down satisfied.

Sometimes my heart is very weak and I fall down, but He lifts me up again and draws me into a good road. His name is Wonderful.

Some time, it may be very soon, it may be longer, it may be long, long time, He will draw me into a place between the mountains. It is dark, there, but I will not draw back. I will be afraid not, for it is there between these mountains that the Shepherd Chief will meet me, and the hunger I have felt in my heart through this life will be satisfied. Sometimes He makes the love rope into a whip, but afterwards He gives me a staff to lean on.

He spreads a table before me with all kinds of food. He puts His hand upon my head, and all the "tired" is gone. My cup He fills till it runs over.

What I tell you is true, I lie not. These roads that are away ahead will stay with me through this life, and afterwards I will go to live in the "Big Tepee" and sit down with Shepherd Chief forever.—Selected.

An Indian's Thoughts of God.

"Be a man of good and honest and God will always be ready help you out. Many men and women claiming to be good and honest are selfish in heart. God knows it and some day he or she will deep sorry when God punish to them. Be good and honest, think of God and you will have true help from our Father who is above our heads.

"Wicked men, women never live long. People that has no help from God never get along well. A good man has big help from God. If you do your best to others for nothing, no payment. Why! They is bigger and brighter payment for which you cannot see it. This is like a puzzle. You understand it. It is your gift from God. He will reward you in your good health. Some day you will notice something seems to help you which is help from the air. You will feel it. That's God's payment to you. God will never let you feel sorry; He will let you do what you attempt to do early. A man without help from God never learns his lessons well.

"I do no afraid of anything because I spend so much of times to talk with our Father in heaven. When I am in trouble I think of God, that I spend greatly a asking to help me. We all know that it is great, great to pray to God. He hears alright, He let us do what we ask for, that's His answer to us. If you pray to God for what you want, He will let you do, then you will be surprised and want to try again. God is our good Father, we are all children of His, you will never sorry if you keen on pray.—"Ka-wach (Packbasket)."

"I Know That My Redeemer Liveth."

The story is told that many years ago, in an old French church in Berne, Switzerland, a great choir, under the famous old leader, Reichel, was having its final rehearsal for the production of "The Messiah". The chorus had triumphantly sung through the place where the soprano solo takes the refrain, "I know that my Redeemer liveth." The singer was a beautiful woman whose voice had been faultlessly trained. As the tones came out high and clear, the listeners were filled with wonder at her perfect technique. Her breathing was faultless; her note placing was perfect; her enunciation was beyond all criticism.

After the final note there was a pause and all eyes were turned toward the old conductor to catch his look of approval. Great was the surprise, however, when with a look of sorrow the leader said to the singer: "My daughter, you do not really know that your Redeemer lives, do you?"

She replied: "Why, yes, I think I do."

"Then sing it," he said. "Sing it from your heart. Tell it to me so I and all who hear you will know, and know that you know the joy and the power of it."

This time the young woman sang with no thought of herself or of technique and applause from her hearers. She sang the truth that she knew in her heart and experienced in her life, and that she wished to send home to the hearts of the listeners. As the last notes died away there was no wonder at the craftman's work, but there were quickened hearts that had been moved by the glorious message that they had received. As the singer stood forgetful of applause, the old master said with tears: "You do know, for now you have told me."—Selected.

GOOD FRIENDS.

Our flags are bright and beautiful,
They stand so straight and tall,
Each one loves his own the best
And now we love them all.
We love to see the colors blend,
And feel a friendly thrill
As each waves high the other's flag,
In token of good will.
We're all acquainted, we are friends,
Let's stay good friends for life,
For so we'll help good will and peace,
To end all bitter strife.

A PRAYER IN VERSE.

Make me too brave to lie or be unkind,
Make me too understanding, too, to mind
The little hurts companions give and friends,
The careless hurts that no one quite intends
Make me too thoughtful to hurt others so.
Help me to know
The inmost hearts of those for whom I care,
Their secret wishes, all the loads they bear,
That I may add my courage to their own.
May I make lonely folks feel less alone,
And happier ones a little happier, yet.
May I forget
What ought to be forgotten, and recall
Unfailing all
That ought to be recalled, each kindly thing,
Forgetting what might sing.
To all upon my way
Day after day
Let me be joy, be hope. Let my life sing!

Inspiration.

Haydn died at the age of eighty-eight in the year 1809, but not before he had received from his friends in Vienna the most signal appreciation of his life's work. Haydn was not only a great musician, but he was a great Christian. On many of his manuscripts he has inscribed a brief petition or prayer to the God his heart adored. "In the Name of the Lord," "Praise be to God," "To God all the glory" are some of the brief expressions which he has written down with his music. When he was engaged in the composition of the oratorio "Creation" his friends grew impatient with the delay and insisted on his bringing his work to a completion. "I can't make haste," he said, "I am writing all the time." When a friend called his attention to the brightness and excessive cheerfulness of his music, he said, "I can't help it. I give forth what is in me. When I think of the Divine Being, my heart is so full of the joy that the notes fly off from a spindle, and as I have a cheerful heart He will pardon me if I serve Him with cheerfulness." Not long before he died the citizens of Vienna arranged for a wonderful performance of the "Creation". It was held in the Princess Palace. The orchestra was led by an old friend. People of all classes of society greeted him with the fondest admiration and all eyes were upon the old man, who frequently wept with joy at the demonstration of affection. When the magnificent chorus "Let There Be Light" came to its majestic close, there was a deafening applause, and the old man rose and bowed in appreciation of the honor done him. Then lifting his hand and pointing upward he exclaimed, "It came from thence". He raised his other hand as if in benediction, and then left the hall.

In the olden days God put His Spirit in men and made them workmen in brass and iron and all manner of cunning work. His Spirit inspires all work, as well as all worship, and is not degraded by cooperating with the humblest servant in the humblest task, but ennobles by His very presence both the worker and the work.—Dr. Hugh Kerr, in Presbyterian Banner.

A Royal Patriot.

Billy was just like any other healthy boy, he loved to think of the Fourth of July. How he loved to see the rockets trying to pierce the very sky; and as for the popping noises—why Billy's heart went pit-a-pat every time he thought of it!

Now the Fourth was near at hand and in Billy's treasure box lay four shining silver quarters. They were his to do just as he chose with. Every day, and sometimes several times a day, Billy would run up to his room, and place them on the window sill where he could watch them glisten in the sunlight. Four of them, and all his very own.

Billy decided as the Fourth drew near, that the whole amount should be spent for fireworks. No one should celebrate with more noise or redder crackers than he would. He knew exactly what he would buy, for he had looked into the windows every time he had passed the shops.

On the afternoon of the third he received permission to go out and make his purchases. He skipped along jingling the coins and whistling a martial air.

"Rex, oh, poor, poor Rex! Oh, oh—" sobbed a voice right behind him.

Billy looked up startled. He had been so intent upon his own thoughts that he had not been conscious of what was going on about him. There in the road, almost opposite to where he was standing, huddled the figure of a ragged little boy, crooning softly to something which he held in his arms. Then Billy noted a racing automobile disappearing in a cloud of dust.

Going to the boy, he helped him to rise, suggesting that they go over to the curbing. Then he inquired: "Did the car knock you down?"

"Oh, no," snuffled the boy, "I wish et had been me! Ets Rex. See, his leg is broken!" and a ragged sleeve was drawn across his tearful eyes.

When the curbing was reached Billy examined the dog's leg. "If that is all that's the matter with him, you can have that fixed," he comforted.

"But—" sobbed the lad, "I ain't got no money. I sell papers and I spent all I made ter-day a-buyin' us somethin' ter eat."

Billy sat very still. The dog turned his soft brown eyes upon him. They were full of suffering, and the boy, who held him, began to croon softly to him once more. "Of course," Billy reasoned, "he can sell more papers tomorrow. But the dog was suffering and might be dead by that time.

"I wonder—" suddenly the face of the ragged boy grew bright, "ef some doctor wouldn't fix him up and let me work et out afterwards. My, I'd work all night and go 'twout eats to git et don!" he declared.

Billy's hand touched the shining quarters which hid in his pockets. Doctors charged two dollars a visit, he reasoned, and no telling how much for setting a leg. After all, his money wouldn't do any good. But as he watched he saw the tears drop from the lashes of the ragged boy, drop down upon his dirty cheek, and this time he was too busy with the poor doggie to wipe them upon his ragged sleeve. A cracker sounded off in the distance. Already they were beginning to celebrate. What would a Fourth of July be without any crackers to pop?

"Well," the ragged boy said presently, "I'm going ter take Rex to some doctor, anyhow. Maybe some of 'em will do et on credit," and hugging the dog up closely in his arms, he started off.

Billy sat very still. Then as he saw them going, something rose up in his throat. He was afraid the doctor would not pay any attention to a dog and especially if he knew he could not be paid for it. He saw the ragged boy bury his face in the dog's shaggy neck, and some bits of the crooning words he uttered still reached Billy.

"Wait!" he called suddenly. "I have a dollar, and we'll get the doctor to charge the rest until we can get it! Why, if both of us work it won't take any time to make it."

"You'd do this for Rex?" gulped the ragged boy in admiration.

"Yes, and for you," smiled Billy, suddenly feeling very happy.

The strange trio marched into the doctor's office, and when he had heard the story he took Rex up kindly in his own arms and set and bandaged his broken leg as tenderly as if he had been a little child.

The boys stood by and watched, and when the ragged little fellow received his beloved doggie back into his arms his face was wreathed in smiles, and after giving him a real, real hug, he handed him to Billy with the suggestion that he feel how soft and nice he was

When Billy's arms closed about the helpless dog, and he saw the look of thankfulness in his lovely brown eyes, his heart beat faster than ever a cracker had made it, and his eyes were bright as soaring rockets.

The doctor smiled, and then taking the four shining quarters from the table where Billy had placed them, he said: "I am glad to be of service, young gentlemen; and hope that you will celebrate the Fourth tomorrow in proper style," and the quarters were once more resting in Billy's pockets.

Side by side the happy boys marched on down the street. Billy presently entering a shop, emerging not with packages of fireworks, however, but with bread and meat for the ragged boy, and a tiny little red, white and blue flag for Rex.

Off in the distance came reports of more celebrating, but Billy heeded not. He was tasting the joys of being a royal patriot—one who serves both God and his fellow man.—The Child's Hour.

The Prize.

Johnnie was quite excited. In the school to which he went, a prize of one dollar was offered for the most perfectly woven mat.

All of the children were eager to earn that dollar, so they took a great deal of pains with their mat-making. Besides there was to be an exhibition of all the hand-work of the school in a few days.

The girls were to show the nice things they had made. These were to be fastened up on screens and on the wall, and the boys had many different things over which they had spent a good deal of time.

It took several days to make a mat, for they only worked a little while each day. The first day Johnnie took much pains with his. At the close of the period, the teacher collected the mats.

The next day Johnnie wasn't quite sure whether he got his own mat or not, but the one he took was the same in color as the one he had worked on the day before. The third day Johnnie was rather doubtful, but the one on top of the box surely resembled his own mat, and it was nearly finished and nicely done, so he took it and said nothing.

When the time for the Exhibit came, Johnnie was delighted to find that the mat he had finished had won the prize. He had made up his mind before, he would buy a rubber doll for his baby sister with part of the money, but the rest of it he would spend for a little sail-boat for himself. It would be lots of fun to take this down to the shallow creek where the children sometimes played, or to the basin of the fountain in the Public Square.

Just then he heard some one sobbing.

"Teacher, teacher!" cried Rosie Smithers, "the prize mat is partly mine. I started it and worked two days on it. Then I couldn't find it, and somebody else has finished it. I know it's mine because it has R-o-s-i-e printed under the end where the pieces cross."

And sure enough, there were the letters just as Rosie said!

"Dear me," cried the teacher, "what shall I do? I supposed every child would know his or her own mat!"

Johnnie stood silently looking first at the teacher and then at Rosie, for several minutes. He didn't like to give up that dollar—and why should he? Hadn't somebody else got HIS mat, and why didn't Rosie make a fuss and demand her mat yesterday? She might have spoiled it anyway.

Then the thought came to Johnnie that he would feel sort of sneaky to have people say, "What a beautiful mat, Johnnie Huntley. You surely deserved the prize"—when he had made only a little of it.

Then Johnnie did a very brave and fair thing.

"Teacher," he said sturdily. "Rosie started the mat and I finished it. I did not know it was her mat, and she didn't say that she had lost hers. Suppose we each have half of the money."

Rosie's face brightened.

"Will you be satisfied if we decide the matter that way?" inquired the teacher.

Rosie nodded.

"That's fine!" beamed Miss Bessie who, you see, was the teacher.

"Now, Johnnie, tell me what you are going to do with your fifty cents?"

"I'm going to buy a rubber doll for my baby sister, Jean," Johnnie replied at once with a happy smile. "I promised it to her if I won the prize."

"That's right," approved Miss Bessie, "always keep your word!"

"And Rosie, what are you going to do with your fifty cents?"

Rosie traced a pattern on the floor with the stubby toe of her little shoe.

"I'm going to buy a nice little sail-boat," she admitted at last, "and ask Johnnie to come up to our cottage and play with it. Tomorrow is my birthday an' we can sail the boat in the shallow water at the edge of the lake."

"And you'll have a wonderful time, I know," smiled Miss Bessie.

And sure enough the children did, and Baby Jean and Mrs. Huntley went along, and even the rubber doll went swimming.—Baptist Standard.

Mr. and Mrs. Bird.

Cheer-up! cheer-up! cheer-up!
We're as happy as happy as can be,
For a fine little house have we
In the top of the old apple tree.

Early one morning Mrs. Bird was wakened by something drip, drip, dripping on her tail. She peeped out from under her wing.

"Peep! peep! peep!" chirped Mrs. Bird. Which meant, "What in the world is the matter? What is this dripping on my tail?"

She felt it again—drip, drip, drip.

TO THE LAITY OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

There is in circulation among the laity of the Protestant Episcopal Church a petition, prepared by one of our Bishops, to the General Convention which will assemble in Washington next October, asking that body to refuse its assent to the proposal to eliminate the Thirty-nine Articles of Religion from the Book of Common Prayer, which would mean their abrogation.

"WHEREAS, the last General Convention adopted tentatively a resolution to revise the Book of Common Prayer by omitting the publication in connection therewith of the Articles of Religion; and

"WHEREAS, there is no provision for publishing elsewhere or for recognizing in any other way the Articles of Religion except in connection with the Book of Common Prayer; and

"WHEREAS, the Constitution of this Church has ever since 1801 recognized in this way the Articles of Religion; and

"WHEREAS, the Articles of Religion define the Church and state clearly the historic doctrinal differences between the Anglican Communion and the Roman Catholic Church;

"THEREFORE, we the undersigned adult communicants of the Protestant Episcopal Church do most earnestly memorialize our Right Reverend Fathers-in-God, our Reverend Clerical Deputies and Honorable Lay Deputies, in General Convention assembled in their respective Houses, to vote against the resolution to omit the Articles of Religion from publication in connection with the Book of Common Prayer and to vote against any proposed amendment to the Constitution that would omit reference to the Articles of Religion.

"AND we do further memorialize our Fathers-in-God, the Bishops, to send us a message of assurance that the name, the doctrine, the ceremonies and nomenclature of our Church and her missionary purpose and her fraternal love for all Christian people are and should be as expressed in the Book of Common Prayer.

"So we believe you will bring comfort and peace to the hearts of many, give confidence to those within our Communion and make clear to all men the true Catholic nature and Protestant heritage of our dear Church and revive zeal for the salvation of souls through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen."

We believe that a great majority of the communicants of the Church are opposed to the elimination of these Articles of Religion, established by the Church in 1801, and are likewise opposed to the introduction into the Church of the Mass, Reservation and Adoration of the Sacrament Prayers to the Virgin Mary, Invocation of Saints, Worship of Images and Relics, Auricular Confession, Penance, use of the Rosary, Holy Water and other doctrines and ceremonies peculiar to the Church of Rome.

We therefore heartily endorse this petition and express the hope that all Protestant Episcopalians will signify their approval of it by their signatures and by aiding in the widest possible circulation of it.

Copies of this petition may be procured without cost from Latsch & Arnold, 97 N. Second Street, Memphis, Tenn.

Richmond, Va.

Mrs. Bird shook herself and water sprinkled all over her. Then she looked up to see where the water came from. She found the wind had torn away part of the roof of their cozy nest.

"Peep! peep! peep!" chirped Mrs. Bird. Which meant, "Wake up, daddy! wake up!"

Mr. Bird peeped out from under his little wing and chirped, "Peep, peep! peep!" Which meant, "Oh! my dear, it is too early to wake up. Go to sleep."

But Mrs. Bird pecked him with her sharp little bill until he chirped, "Oh! very well, my dear, I'll wake up."

Mrs. Bird pointed with her little claw to the top of their nest.

"Peep! peep! peep!" chirped Mrs. Bird. Which meant, "See what has happened to our roof. It is leaking".

"Peep! peep! peep!" chirped Mr. Bird. "What a pity! What a pity! What shall we do?"

"As soon as it stops raining we must find a place to build a new nest," chirped Mrs. Bird.

But after a little while it stopped raining and Mr. and Mrs. Bird hurried out to get some breakfast. They found a nice fat worm. After they ate it, they started out to hunt for a place to build a new nest.

They hunted all day, and when evening came they were hot and tired, but they had not found a place for their nest. The other birds had taken all the good places.

They perched upon a branch of the old apple tree to rest.

Mrs. Bird fanned herself with a leaf.

"Peep! peep! peep!" chirped Mrs. Bird. "We'll have to sleep in the old nest tonight and hunt again tomorrow."

"I hope it doesn't rain tonight," chirped Mr. Bird. "I'll take a look at the sky to see if there are any clouds." Mr. Bird hopped up to a higher branch and looked up. Then he gave an astonished chirp. "What in the world do I see!"

"What do you see that is so strange?" asked Mrs. Bird.

Mr. Bird pointed with his little claw. Mrs. Bird looked up and what do you suppose she saw?

Don't wink till I tell you.

It was a house—a real little house up in the apple tree.

"A house! a lovely little house!" exclaimed Mrs. Bird.

"Do you suppose it grew in the tree?"

"No; I think Teddy Burnett put it there. Teddy is the little boy who lives in the brown house nearby. I saw him making one yesterday. It looked just like this one."

"Let us go and look at it," chirped Mr. Bird. So they flew up to where the little house was. When they got there they saw something written over the door. It said, "For Mr. and Mrs. Bird, from Teddy Burnett".

"Oh, daddy!" chirped Mrs. Bird, "Teddy put the little house here for us! Isn't that lovely! What a dear little house! We'll move in right away."

They did move in right away, and none too soon, for that night it rained again. It just poured. But Mr. and Mrs. Bird were snug and dry in their little new house.

They chirped, "Peep! peep! peep! cheep! cheer-ee! Thank you, Teddy, for our lovely dry little house."

By and by there were five darling little baby birds in the new house. They kept Mr. and Mrs. Bird busy feeding their five little mouths.

Every morning Mr. Bird perched by the door of the house and sang:

Cheer-up! cheer-up! cheer-ee!
We're as happy as happy as can be,
For a fine little house have we
In the top of the old apple tree.

THAT HAPPY LITTLE THOUGHT.

A helpful little Happy Thought went hastening on its way,
All in the early morning of a long and busy day.
"I've neither hands, nor feet, nor tongue," it mused, "but I'll not sorrow,
For boys and girls are plentiful, and so I'll merely borrow."

Now little Nell was skipping by to visit little Jane.
Presto! the little Happy Thought was beaming in her brain.
And so she turned and hurried back, and stayed at home instead,
Reading, with merry, tripping tongue, to poor blind cousin Ned.

Off went the little Happy Thought, and saw some idle feet
Drumming their heels against the step upon a quiet street.
And soon those feet were carrying, upon an errand hot,
Their smiling owner who had whined, and said he'd rather not."

If "Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do",
Why, then, a little Happy Thought can set them working, too.
And, judging from a-many things I notice every day,
That helpful little Happy Thought is still upon its way.

Deaths

REV. JAMES H. W. BLAKE.

A Tribute.

At a meeting of the Vestry of Christ Church, Georgetown, the following was adopted as the unanimous sentiment of the Rector, Wardens and Vestry on the death of the REVEREND JAMES H. W. BLAKE, who was called away on the 27th day of April, 1928:

For over twenty years of active ministration in this Parish Mr. Blake was a preacher of the pure word of God. His reverent and impressive manner of conducting the rites and ceremonies of the church reflected the depth of his belief in the saving doctrines which they set forth. His life was a daily example of the gospel which he professed and preached. He was a friend to each and every member of his flock. He was above all things a godly and saintly man and an example of the precepts of our Lord eJsus Christ in action. His memory will long be cherished by those of us who knew him so well during all those years.

DR. JOHN R. WHEAT.

Entered into life on Sunday, June 3, 1928, DR. JOHN R. WHEAT, beloved physician.

It may be truly said by the lowly and the great who are numbered among the many friends of Dr. Wheat, that "his walk was close with God". His long and useful life was given in ministering to the sick in body and in spirit, and, even as his Lord upon whom he leant and patterned all his acts, he served unmindful of reward.

In Dr. Wheat was combined a great humility and gentleness, linked with wide pity and the gift to heal, and no service he could render those who suffered was ever shirked; but rather was it sought with eagerness and performed with fidelity and gladness.

Now that those slender bonds which linked him to this world are parted, and he has gone forward into the white light of eternity, the many upon whom his healing touch was laid remember him with love and reverence; realizing that again for awhile a great spirit has walked the ways of earth.

A life given in service to mankind is a life hid with God and precious in His sight.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

of James H. Houghteling, a banker of that city, beginning in his own Bible Class of St. James' Church with a dozen men from seventeen to nineteen years old. The Brotherhood practically originated and has fostered the noon-day Lenten services in eleven of the most important cities of the country, including Washington, Chicago, Richmond, New Orleans, Louisville, Philadelphia and San Francisco.

Rector of Venerable Church Dead.

The Rev. Reginald Ripley, rector of St. Matthew's Episcopal Church at Seat Pleasant, Maryland, died June 10, at Emergency Hospital, Washington City, after a very brief illness of acute indigestion. He had been rector many years of St. Matthew's, which dates back to 1692, when it was founded as Addison Chapel. In 1923 services commemorating two hundred and thirty-one years of history were conducted, Mr. Ripley delivering the commemorative sermon. A paper prepared by Mr. Ripley, probably the last work he did, was read before the Washington Clericus at its meeting of June 18.

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., Coadjutor

Nine Men From One Church Preparing for the Ministry.

St. Michael and All Angels' Church, Baltimore, the Rev. Wyatt Brown, rector, has nine men preparing for the ministry and one recently ordained. On Sunday, June 10, the services at the church were turned over to these ten men, each having some part. The early Communion was a corporate service for men and boys. At eleven o'clock the sermon was preached by Mr. Charles A. Brocklebank of the Virginia Seminary and the evening sermon was preached by Mr. J. Moulton Thomas of the same seminary. Other institutions represented by the candidates were the University of the South, Union Seminary, University of Virginia, William and Mary College, Johns Hopkins University and Baltimore City College.

Survey of Diocese Being Made.

In accordance with a plan decided upon at the last Diocesan Convention a complete survey of the Diocese of Maryland is now under way. The General Committee is headed by the Rev. John I. Yellott, and the active survey is in the hands of an expert from the Field Department of the National Council, the Rev. Elmer M. Schmuck. It is intended that this intensive study of the diocese shall be thorough and far-reaching. Full questionnaires have been sent to every rector; personal investigation will follow these reports and special committees have been appointed to survey carefully each field where there is any possibility of expansion and each parish which presents a problem.

A recent survey by the Baltimore Federation of Churches, in one section of the city, has disclosed the pressing need in at least one aspect of the situation. It was disclosed that the growth in population in this particular Guilford and Roland Park section was not balanced by the growth in church membership, there being some hundreds of families identified with churches elsewhere who had not established religious associations in Baltimore. It was found also that more families in this region claimed Episcopal affiliation, past and present, than to any one other denomination.

MISSISSIPPI.

Rt. Rev. T. DuB. Bratton, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. M. Green, D. D., Coadjutor.

The Sixth Annual Rural Parsons' Conference.

The Sixth Annual Rural Parsons' Conference of the Diocese of Mississippi was held in early May at Gulfport, Miss., in St. Peter's Episcopal Church, was one of the most successful conferences ever held. There were one hundred and twenty-five representatives from all parts of the State of Mississippi. The Rev. Val. H. Sessions, Dean of the Rural Convocation, presided at all meetings of the Parsons. Mrs. W. S. Welch presided over the Rural Women Workers' Conference. Both conferences were joint sessions for the lectures of Prof. R. J. Colbert, University of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis., and for a lead on the Isolated by Mrs. W. S. Welch of Laurel, Miss.

These rural conferences have been a great help to the work of the Church not only in Mississippi, but to the Church as a whole. As the Rev. Walter B. Capers, rector of the largest city parish in the Diocese of Mississippi, said: "Such conferences not only help to a better understanding of the rural opportunities in Rural Work, but the Conferences makes possible the setting up of the program for the accomplishment of such work. When I began my ministry in Virginia, they just threw me out into the country, so to speak, and said, in effect, "Go to it!" Naturally the question rose in my mind: to what? Well, I had to find out for myself. But today in dioceses like Mississippi the rural clergy are receiving recognition and sympathetic cooperation —not all they deserve—but still an ever increasing amount."

The Report of the Findings Committee included the following findings:

1. Dealing with Mr. Bush's address on the Church and Farm Organizations. It is the sense of the committee that the Rural Clergyman should familiarize himself with the life and work of those he has to serve, and that he should be a leader in all forms of farm organizations—especially those that work for character building as for instnace the 4H Clubs. While so familiarizing himself he should fit himself so that he can talk in a language understood by the farmer.

2. Dealing with the Bishops' Crusade. Your committee would urge the continuance of cooperation with the aims and efforts of the Bishops' Crusade.

3. Dealing with the Vanderbilt School of Religion. We rejoice in the Vanderbilt School of Religion and its splendid opportunity and would urge Mississippi's complete cooperation. We approve the findings of the Episcopal group in the school of 1928.

4. Dealing with the 1929 Regional Conference. The Committee would express the happiness of this body that the Regional Conference of Rural Workers, the first of its kind in the South, is to be held in this Diocese in 1929. We would pledge our support and looking forward to that conference and desiring to promote the efficiency of our work would urge the study of tanetahrd work would urge the study of tentative subjects as suggested by Professor Colbert.

It is especially urged that all our clergy make it the practice of following up our College students following Professor Colbert's suggestion. This deals with the study of Church extension through correspondence which we all should study.

Personal Notes

The Rev. W. H. A. Hall has been appointed minister-in-charge of the Church of the Annunciation, Glendale, and has taken up his residence there.

The Rev. Charles Pittman, recently ordained deacon after some years in the ministry of the Reformed Episcopal Church, has been appointed in charge of St. Elizabeth's, Floral Park.

Bishop Stires and Mrs. Stires sailed for Europe on Saturday, June 23.

The Rev. Frederick A. MacMillan, the rector of Christ Church, Reading, Pa., was honored at the recent commencement of Franklin and Marshall College, Lancaster, Pa., by having conferred upon him the degree of Doctor of Divinity, Franklin and Marshall College belongs to the Reformed Church. It is the denomination's best known college in the east. Dr. MacMillan also preached the alumni sermon at the Philadelphia School.

ORDINATIONS.

On Friday, June 15, 1928, the Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of Southern Virginia, advanced to the Priesthood the Rev. F. P. Thornton, deacon, in Brandon Church, Burrowsville, Va. The sermon was preached by the Rev. E. R. Carter, D. D., of Christ Church, Petersburg, Va., and the candidate was presented by the Rev. Myron B. Marshall, of Halifax, Va. Others who assisted in the laying on of hands were the Rev. Herbert N. Tucker, the Rev. T. Carter Page, the Rev. George S. Gresham, the Rev. Richard H. Lee, the Rev. David C. George, the Rev. Wm. A. Brayshaw, the Rev. Charles E. Stewart and the Rev. Hugh B. Sublett, D. D. The Rev. Mr. Thornton will continue as rector of Martin's Brandon Parish, together with Christ Church, Waverly, Ritchie Memorial, Claremont, and Grace, Cabin Point.

On June 3, 1928, at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine the Bishop of New York celebrated the Holy Communion, ordained to the diaconate Mr. Daniel Morse Welton, presented by the Rev. Wm. H. Owen, and advanced to the priesthood the Rev. Paul Duliver Wilbur, presented by the Dean; the Rev. Clarence Van Buchanan, B. A., presented by the Rev. Wm. H. Owen.

The Rev. William Henry Owen preached the sermon and united with the Dean, the Presenter and the Sacrist, in the laying on of hands.

On the first Sunday after Trinity, June 10, 1928, the Bishop of Minnesota, ordained to the diaconate Mr. William James Spicer, in St. John's Church, Mankato. The Rev. Lewis D. Smith presented the candidate, and the Bishop preached the sermon.

The Rev. Mr. Spicer will act as a special missionary, under the direction of the Archdeacon, during the summer months.

DEATHS.

The Rev. Stephen Elliott Prentiss, a retired priest of the Diocese of Southern Virginia, died suddenly in Richmond on June 22. The funeral was held from Grace and Holy Trinity Church on June 23, conducted by the Rev. G. MacLaren Brydon, D. D., Executive Secretary of the Diocese of Virginia, the Rev. Reginald G. Davis and the Rev. S. S. Spathey.

Mr. Prentiss was born in Charleston, S. C., March 6, 1862, and was ordained deacon in 1892 and priest in 1893 by Bishop Knickerbacker. The bulk of Mr. Prentiss' ministry was spent in the Diocese of South Carolina and Virginia. He retired from active work on account of ill health in 1923. He leaves a widow and one son.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

Ingratitude is treason to mankind.—Thomson.

Temptation means nothing more than experience, proof or trial.—Calvin.

Even when the bird walks we see that he has wings.—Lemoine.

"Hast thou named all the birds without a gun?
Loved the wood rose and left it on its stalk?"

—Emerson.

What God wants is men great enough to be small enough to be used. Moses was such a man.—Webb Peploe.

"What marks each one within the fold
Is faith that does not see;
And yet as if it did behold,
Trusts, unseen, Lord, to Thee."

The blessed work of helping the world forward, happily does not wait to be done by perfect men.—George Eliot.

Church-going, the keeping of the Sabbath, are not religion; but religion hardly lives without them.—F. W. Robertson.

Jesus was the first great teacher of men who showed a genuine sympathy for childhood. When "He said, of such is the Kingdom of Heaven", it was a revelation.—Eggleston.

Never try to arouse faith from within. You cannot stir up faith from the depths of your heart. Leave your heart and look into the face of Jesus Christ, and listen to what He tells you about how He will keep you.—Andrew Murray.

The soul in its highest sense, is a vast capacity for God. It is like a curious chamber added on to being and somehow involving being—a chamber with elastic and controlled walls, which can be expanded, with God as its guest, illimitably, but which, without God, shrinks until every vestige of the Divine is gone and God's image is left without God's Spirit.—Heun Drummond.

Courage is not lack of fear; it is standing your ground in spite of fear.—H. C. King.

Progress has only been possible because of the emergence of revolutionary spirit, isolated men and women and groups of men and women who have not been content with the slow, upward climb, but have risen on wings as eagles, who have been so much before their times that they have been called madmen and fools, but whose folly has been the most potent factor in creating the moral atmosphere into which the world has occasionally moved on.—Henry T. Hodgkin.

AFTER

"Just think—to step ashore, and that shore HEAVEN;
To clasp a hand outstretched, and that God's hand;
To breathe new air, and that celestial air;
To feel refreshed, and know it immortality;
Just think—to pass from stress and strain,
To one unbroken calm. To wake, and find it GLORY!"

Each of us knows that on some day, near or distant, we must depart from this world. Many of us who use the sense and strength required to think seriously and honestly of that inevitable day fix too much of our thought on where and to what we shall go into the hidden realm and too little of it on what we shall leave after us in this known and familiar life. We know we must go where extinction, however it may be longed for, is as impossible as what we call death is unavoidable. We are prone to forget that when we have gone hence works and words of our's will be living here and in eternity, in their consequences, for good or ill.

Everywhere there are suicides over whom no inquests are held and who physically are alive and healthy. The old monks and hermits so intent on saving their own souls that they shunned contact with humanity and in sequestered and gloomy caves, with companionship of skulls and bones and whips for their own backs, occupied themselves with prayers and tears and penances, were suicides. So were the gay worldlings, so reckless or hopeless of their souls that their days and nights were used for drunkenness, gluttony and debaucheries, dancing, music and laughter. Counterparts of these extremes, modified by modern conditions, are all about us. We have men and women who refuse spiritual contact with their fellow creatures, who trust for salvation to their own austerities, deny themselves innocent pleasures, fearing touch of the unclean, sternly banish from their hearts tolerance and sympathy, pity and interest reaching the erring, sinful and weak. We have the opposite kind, living by and for frivolities, tawdry little ambitions, gross lusts, the laughter of today, to be followed tomorrow by mocking echo in groans and brooding spectres of remorse and despair. When, on any pretext or yielding to any impulse, we cease from working and striving as we may for the widening and establishment of God's kingdom on earth and the helping and betterment of God's creatures we are suicides, slayers of all the better part of ourselves, of the real meaning and purpose of the life entrusted to us to use as we will.

Uselessness is suicide. Usefulness to God and man is life and the purpose of life. St. Simeon Stylites, who, according to the legend, spent thirty years atop a pillar in Syria, torturing himself all day with ceaseless genuflexions, and King Charles the Second, who spent twenty-five years on the throne of England in profligacy, cunning treacheries, self-indulgence, were alike ridiculous and deplorable suicides. The certain poor widow who cast in her mite, the miserable thief hanging on his cross and in his dying agonies doing all he could to express his new-born faith and to honor and comfort the Sinless Sufferer at his side, yet live in the messages of consolation and hope and inspiration which through nineteen centuries have reached millions of hearts and added to the hosts of the redeemed. A minute, perhaps, for the widow's bountiful gift of all her scanty living; three or four hours for the malefactor's penitence and protest and plea; days and nights of patient toil and danger braved for the shepherd searching the mountains for his sheep astray—all of their works live after them. The cup of cold water given in His name may nourish to glorious fruition dormant seed of gratitude and high aspiration. In the infallible, inexorable, unswerving balances of God, held eternally in clear, never fading light, things beyond the reach of our senses and our knowledge are weighed with exact justice. A word spoken an act or gift too small for human notice or hidden from human observation, may be of far greater importance before the Final Judge than the winning of a decisive battle in a righteous cause or any achievement of statesmanship or sagacity, may give happiness and beauty to live forever, long after this planet and all the transient things of it have vanished. We need not be great in the eyes of this world to leave behind us footprints to put new courage and noble impulse in the hearts of the wrecked and forlorn.

Our human instinct impels us to shrink from being forgotten here after we have passed on. The instinct that is part of our share of divinity urges us to look to a new and higher life on the further side of the curtain of darkness. Honest facing of familiar facts tells us we may not hope to live in memories many years after we go to our graves. Walter Reed, the Virginian, and Dr. Gorgas, who together conquered yellow fever, will be forgotten presently by the general public, but will continue to save thousands of lives and prevent suffering, destitution and misery. So with Pasteur, so with many of the splendid discoverers, inventors, benefactors. They go hence and most of them are forgotten; but their work lives and shines in endless additions to human happiness and knowledge, lessening of human pain, the growth and strengthening of human brotherhood, the doing of God's will on earth.

It is impossible to imagine sweeter or more joyful reward for the redeemed in Heaven than that they may see and know effects and results of good done here, extending perhaps through centuries of our time and generations of human life and on endlessly through eternity. Certainly no punishment could be more frightful than enforced knowledge to those who have left evil heritage of the endless, awful consequences of the wrongs they did, of long successions of sorrows and horrors caused by them. If it should be so ordered, there would be a bottomless gulf of contrast between the obscure faithful preacher, the pious humble woman, the God-fearing, God-serving poor man, their souls bathed in the light of God's glory and serenely blissful in contemplation of good work done, far beyond their hopes, and Napoleon, compelled to see and feel the bitter tears of women, excrutiating agonies of men, the waste of lives, attending his march to power.

We may not know of this. We do know that short as the life here is, it is crowded not only with disappointments, alternating joys and griefs, hopes and fears, but also with opportunity and responsibility. We know we must go to everlasting life somewhere; but however brief our conscious working time here, we must leave after us seeeds hlpful or hurtful. Countless men and women have gone to their last earthly sleep rejoicing in assurance of waking to rest and happiness. Every man or woman considering honestly the years lived, has known the discontent born of the divinity within us, the conviction of so much left undone that should have been done, so much done that should not have been done. Self-satisfaction is self-destruction. To leave after us the t of good of which we are capable and the least evil to which our mortal weaknesses and passions can be restrained, is work and watchfulness and humility and humble supplication for help and guidance, day by day, hour by hour.

Alfred B. Williams.

SHORT FAMILY PRAYERS

Reverend Joshua Peterkin, D. D.

FRIDAY MORNING.

ALMIGHTY and most merciful God, we are assembled together this morning to thank Thee for Thy preservation of us during the past night, and to pray Thee to continue Thy wonted care of us during the coming day—guarding both our souls and bodies from all evil.

We are about to enter on the duties of our several callings—enable each of us to be faithful and diligent in them, as those who must hereafter give "account of all things done in the body" to Him who is the Judge of quick and dead.

We desire to remember that Thine eye is continually upon us; that Thou canst pierce into our inmost thoughts —grant, therefore, that our most secret ways may be pleasing unto Thee.

Give us grace to overcome our sinful appetites and passions, and to bring every member of our bodies, and every faculty of our souls, into captivity to the law of Christ.

We pray Thee to bless the events which shall befall us this day. Sanctify to us our prosperity and our adversity. Purify our hearts more and more by the dispensations of Thy providence, and the influence of Thy Holy Spirit; and fit us for that great and final change which we must all soon experience.

Pardon our many offences—may the remembrance of Thy goodness lead us to repentance; and grant us perfect remission of our sins, we beseech Thee, for the sake of Jesus Christ.

We commend to Thy Fatherly care our friends and relations, and all for whom it is our duty to pray.

Hear these, our prayers, which we offer before Thee, trusting in the merits of our only Mediator and Redeemer. Amen.

Our Father, &c.

The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, &c.

FRIDAY EVENING.

Almighty God, the King eternal, immortal and invisible, we bow humbly before Thy divine majesty, and acknowledge our obligations to Thy goodness and mercy.

We bless Thee for all the comforts of this life, and especially for thine inestimable love in sending Thy Son from heaven to be the Saviour of our souls. For His sake we beseech Thee to grant us the pardon of our sins and vouchsafe unto us the assistance of Thy Holy Spirit, that we may hereafter be more effectually restrained from sin, and excited to our duty.

We would commit all our concerns into Thy hands. May Thy watchful Providence defend us by night and by day, in adversity and prosperity, in sickness and in health, and when the hour of death shall come, may our consolations in Christ abound.

We must humbly address Thee in behalf of all for whom it is our duty to pray. We beseech Thee that our country may be more and more favored with the light of the gospel. Bless those who are in authority over us, and give them wisdom to fulfill the arduous duties to which they are called. Have mercy upon all who are in any trouble, and be pleased to visit and relieve them. Be merciful to those who are near and dear to us; may they be near and dear to Thee. Take them and us into Thy holy keeping this night. We cannot protect ourselves, but we trust in Thy goodness, love and power.

Hear us in heaven, Thy dwelling place, and accept us and these our imperfect services, for the sake of Jesus Christ, our only Mediator and Redeemer. Amen.

Our Father, &c.

The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, &c.

THE STORY OF A CURATE THAT WAS NEARLY DISMISSED

By Canon Dyson Hague of Canada

YEARS ago when I was appointed rector of St. Paul's Church, Halifax, the oldest Protestant Church in Canada, my dear friend Canon Troop said to me: "One of the first things I want you to do when you go to Nova Scotia, is to go into old St. Paul's Church, Halifax, and go up the right aisle and read a marble tablet there. It is erected to the memory of the Rev. William Cogswell, and I think you will say it is remarkable when I tell you about it. The story as I was told it is this:

The Honorable Mr. Cogswell, of Halifax, had a son who decided to enter the ministry. In due time he was ordained, and became the assistant minister at St. Paul's Church, Halifax, the foremost Anglican Church in Canada, which in those days had a splendid congregation, and was attended not only by the most influential citizens of the city, but also by the army officers and distinguished visitors from England. Prince William Henry, afterwards King William the Fourth, and the Duke of Kent, the father of Queen Victoria, used to go there. The new curate preached the Gospel with great earnestness, and, as such preaching in those days was rare, so startled the staid Church-going people of the day that he was looked upon almost in the light of a fanatic.

When the first Easter vestry meeting came around, and the old rector took the chair, a prominent and somewhat pompous Churchman got up and spoke as follows: "Mr. Rector, I have a motion to make. It is with regard to the new curate, your assistant, Mr. Cogswell. He is no doubt a very estimable young man, and does his duty according to his light. But the kind of sermon he preaches is, in my opinion, altogether unsuited for this church. He seems to look upon us all as if we were a lot of sinners, and had never been baptized. He says we need salvation and personal conversion. In fact, I think he is not at all fitted for a position such as that of the assistant minister of St. Paul's Church, and I beg to move, if anybody will second it, that the salary of the Rev. William Cogswell be discontinued from this day three months."

As may be imagined, there was not a little commotion in the meeting when this bombshell kind of a motion was made and seconded. A feeling of awkwardness was apparent. The old rector was visibly preplexed, and there was not a little whispering and talking amongst the members of the vestry, who seemed for the moment quite nonplussed and uncertain what to do.

At last, however, a very prominent man got up. He was a British officer—a blustery, autocratic kind of a man, not at all notorious for his religious convictions, and more familiar with claret and port wine than Church doctrine. As he stood up he said: "Mr. Rector, I quite agree with the previous speaker with regard to Mr. Cogswell. I do not like the kind of sermons he preaches at all. I think he looks upon us as a lot of heathen, and talks to us about conversion and the spiritual life as if we had never been to church in our lives. But—but—but—I must say I do not like this way of treating him. I like fair play, and I do not think this is fair play. We may say what we like, but he is a good man. He is a true Christian, and he preaches God's Word. And, in fact," and here he blurted out the words with difficulty, "in fact, Mr. Rector, I am going to move an amendment that the salary of the Rev. William Cogswell be increased $300 a year from this day forward."

A feeling that was almost electric swept over the meeting. The appeal to their better and more generous instincts touched them. The whole body rose to their feet. A seconder was immediately found and that motion was carried unanimously.

"And," said Canon Troop, "instead of Mr. Cogswell's being dismissed, he rose higher and higher in the estimation of the people, died at the early age of thirty-seven, and left behind him a name that to this day is a name of the deepest affection and of the highest esteem. Now you be sure and go and see his monument."

So, as the reader may well imagine, when I first entered the portals of that venerable building, the oldest Protestant Church in the Dominion, the Westminster Abbey of Canada, I said to the sexton: "Show me the tablet of the Rev. William Cogswell. I want to see nothing else until I see that." He led me up to it. It was a plain marble mural tablet on the southwest wall. And you can well imagine that an insuppressible tear arose in my eye and my heart was surcharged with emotion as I read these beautiful words:

Erected to the memory of
THE REV. WILLIAM COGSWELL, A. M.,
Who departed this life on the 5th day of June, A. D. 1847,
Aged 37 years.
This Faithful Minister of the Gospel was Born, Baptized,
Confirmed and Admitted to Holy Orders in this Parish.
Educated in King's College, Windsor, he was Curate of St. Paul's Parish upwards of Fourteen years—the Whole Term of his Ministry.

He was a Most Zealous Labourer in the Lord's Vineyard, and ever preached Jesus Christ and Him Crucified as the sole foundation of every sinner's hope of salvation, as the only channel through which pardon and peace could be extended to any of our fallen race. By the eloquence of his preaching, and the purity of his life, he enforced and exemplified the doctrine and the fruits of faith. No monument is required to perpetuate his memory in the minds of those who had the happiness to know and the privilege to hear him; but the inhabitants of the parish feel it a duty to record their sense of the value of his services while living, and their grief for their loss by his death.

RAYS OF LIGHT FROM GOD'S LAMP

By W. W. Rugh

Founder and Associate of the Bible Institute of Pennsylvania 1418 North Sixteenth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Note: These simple studies in God's Word are intended for home and class use by those who wish to know our blessed Lord and to make Him known.

II. Who is the Author of the Bible?

The Bible, the Word of the living God, being "God breathed", reveals, in its very nature, as well as in its declarations, the character of God, its Author.

1. Declaring the end from the beginning, the Word of God reveals the fact that the Author is Omniscient (knowing all things) (Isa. 46:9, 10; Eph. 1:4; Heb. 4:12, 13; Ps. 139; Eph. 1:10, 11; Prov. 3:19; Rom. 11:33-36; 16:27; Gen. 3:15; Heb. 2:14).

He who reveals His will and who works all things according to the counsel of His own will, has a purpose and plan for the life of every believer, which He fulfills by His Word and Spirit, as we yield to Him (Rom. 8:29; Acts 1:8; Eph. 2:10; Rom. 12:1, 2.)

2. Being the "word of power", the Bible reveals the fact that its Author is Omnipotent (having all power) (Matt. 28:18; Heb. 1:3; Rom. 1:16; 4:21).

When God speaks to our weak and trembling hearts in some message from His Word we can say like Daniel, "Thou hast strengthened me" (Dan. 10:19; 2 Cor. 12:9, 10; Eph. 6:10, 11; Isa. 40:28-31).

3. Because God's Word is brought nigh to the hearts of all men to convict of sin, and to reveal the Saviour to all who call upon His name, it declares that the Author is Omnipresent, that, in the person of His Spirit, His "eyes run to and fro throughout the whole earth to show Himself strong in behalf of them whose heart is perfect toward Him" (who trust in Him) (Rom. 10:8-13; 2 Chron. 16:9; Rev. 5:6; Ps. 139: Prov. 15:3).

What sweet comfort it brings to our hearts to know that the Author of this wonderful love letter (God's Word) dwells in the heart of every true believer and will never leave nor forsake him (Jno. 14:23; Eph. 3:17; Heb. 13: 5, 6; Jno. 14:16, 17).

4. Abiding forever, the Word of the Lord mirrors the Author as the Eternal One, who gives His eternal life to all who believe His word (1 Peter 1:23-25; Ps. 119:89; Matt. 24:36; Ex. 3:14, 15; Ps. 90:2; Jno. 1:12; 3:36).

Oh, what a joy to live forever and ever in the presence of the One whose everlasting arms continually uphold us (Deut. 33:27).

5. Unchanged by time or translations, God's Word reveals the Author as the Unchangeable God, the Faithful One (Mal. 3:6; Heb. 13:8; Jas. 1:17; Heb. 6:16, 17; Rom. 11:29; Heb. 10:23).

What blessed assurance this gives us that God's love toward us in Christ changes not (Rom. 8:31-39; Jno. 13:1).

6. Unfathomable and unsearchable in its depths, inexhaustible as a storehouse, incomprehensible as a fountain of blessing and unlimited in its application, His Word reveals the Author as the Infinite God (Ps. 31:19; Rom. 11:33-36; Eph. 3:20; 3:8).

Love that passeth knowledge, peace that passeth all understanding and joy unspeakable is the possession of all who believe the exceeding great and precious promises of God's Word (Eph. 3:19; Phil. 4:6, 7; 1 Peter 1:8; 2 Peter 1:4).

7. Having power to beget a holy life in the heart of every sinner who believes, and power to keep the believer from sin, the incorruptible Word of God makes known the fact that its Author is Incorruptible, absolutely and eternally holy (1 Peter 1:23; Ps. 119:11; Rom. 1:23 R. V.)

Born again of the incorruptible God, through the incorruptible inheritance, as His witnesses here clothed with an incorruptible apparel, given an incorruptible body when Christ comes for His Church, and crowned with an incorruptible crown, we shall reign forever with an incorruptible King (Rom. 1:23 R. V.; 1 Peter 1:23; 1:4; 3:4 R. V.; 1 Cor. 15:52; 9:25; 1 Tim. 1:17 R. V.)

A REMARKABLE SUNDAY SCHOOL

By Eliza C. A. Blackford

MAY I be allowed to add my tribute to the memory of Miss Julia Johns, of whom my honored friend, Bishop Winchester, has lately written in your paper?

After the years of which he has told, she had a Bible Class of girls, later embracing many of the young married ladies of the Seminary Hill, and I was one of those privileged to be on intimate terms with her, both in her class and in her private life.

When in my early girlhood I had a letter from my father telling me of one of his parishioners, Mrs. McG., who was in dire need, I took the letter to Miss Julia, sure of her sympathy, and equally sure that neither she nor I had any command of money. We were both distressed and I felt powerless. She told me to leave the letter with her, and join with her in praying over the matter.

A few days later she sent for me and told me she had sent that letter to a wealthy friend, who at once replied that she and Mrs. McG. had been schoolmates and friends, but had not heard of each other for many years. She grieved to hear of her troubles and sent a check for fifty dollars. It was a great relief to my father and to the troubled lady he was so anxious to help. It is right to add that neither Miss Julia nor I knew of the girlish affection of these ladies. We felt she had written, divinely guided, to the right person.

Miss Julia Johns' life was one of Adventures in Prayer.

It was her great wish to establish in Alexandria a much-needed hospital. She told me she had so often asked aid for those who needed it that she felt ashamed to appeal further to earthly friends, and in this undertaking she meant to ask assistance only from God.

Her heart was so full of the subject that she spoke of it constantly, but made no direct appeal.

Soon a building was placed at her disposal and friends began to contribute. In a few years the "Alexandria Infirmary", as it was then called, began to function. There came a matron and a few nurses, depending for their salaries and literally for their daily bread solely on Faith and Prayer.

It was a hard struggle, but good work was done, and every one began to help.

The bakers sent bread left over from day to day, confectioners sent ice cream left on their hands, country people sent milk, eggs, butter, fruit, etc. A few well-wishers sent regular subscriptions.

Then the Alexandria people decided to have a bazaar and every one worked for it. Some fair young Hebrew maidens were asked to serve at the bazaar tables. They replied in a beautiful note that "the daughters of their people" could not consistently take part, but they and their families wished to contribute. They sent five hundred dollars.

Some Negroes sent a touching letter, saying many of them had been nursed in the ward assigned to them, and they wished to show their gratitude by a contribution. They sent some hundreds, but the sum is forgotten. The bazaar was a great success.

Colonel Arthur Herbert and a few other fine Christian men became treasurers of the funds collected, and some benevolent ladies were organized into a Board of Managers.

The work went on, but with great trials of Faith.

One day the matron wrote Miss Julia that she simply could not "carry on", she needed thirty-five dollars at once and without it, she would have to give up the struggle. Miss Julia told me she could not send the money—but, oh! how she prayed for it! When her mail came in that day, it brought the exact sum needed.

Mrs. Adamson, late head of the Infirmary, told me that Colonel Herbert told her this story.

Their treasury was almost empty and he and his fellow trustees sent for Miss Julia to give her their resignations; they said, as business men, it was absurd to call themselves treasurers of an empty treasury. Her reply was a request for them to wait half an hour while she could be alone. There can be no doubt how that half hour was spent. When she returned to them they had all reconsidered and promised to stand by her.

Miss Julia Johns died in December, 1883.

That interview of which Colonel Herbert told, was a turning point in the Infirmary's career. The Hospital has prospered and been enlarged and has extended its circle of usefulness beyond Miss Julia Johns' dreams. To me it stands as a monument to her Faith and Prayer.

THE SURRENDERED LIFE---IN CHRIST

Conducted by the Reverend Frank Cox

HAVE YOU RECEIVED YOUR B. A.?

I AM not speaking now about the B. A. from below, admitting to earthly privileges, I mean the one from above, Born Again. The one is good, the heavenly is best. Men can succeed without the one from earth. They have gained fortunes, and honors without it, but without the other no man can be eternally successful. We have the words of our Lord for it, "Except a man be born again he cannot see the Kingdom of God".

Why must we be born again? The Once Born lives in the sphere of the natural, his life is under the control of self, self is the center of his thought. Man cannot raise himself out of this selfish and self-centered state any more than he can lift himself by tugging at his own shoes. There must be a power from above to lift him out of himself.

Again the Once Born is under the control of sin. It may be the polished sin of the Pharisee or the gutter variety of the Publican, but it is all sin. All snakes are snakes, the Indian said, and all sinners are displeasing to God. Self-reformation does not meet the need. Many people have made resolutions to do better, but they are soon broken. The very effort to keep the resolution seems to focus the attention even more strongly on the temptation and failure results. The way of resolution is the way of struggle, struggle in the flesh that fails. You need a new power from on high to strengthen your weakened will. You must be born again.

What does it mean to be born again, and what are the results? It means that Jesus Christ enters the heart as Saviour, and that He transforms the heart. The change is so radical that the Bible calls it passing from death to life. No man really lives until he is born again. He may have existed before, but he was not alive unto God.

The Lord works from the inside out, man tries to reverse the process. The Psychologist tries to influence the heart by changing the habit. Christ transforms the heart and the habits take care of themselves. He makes us love His way. That is the reason why His yoke is easy and His burden light. The outsider imagines that the sinner has a good time while the Christian is miserable. He thinks that living a good life consists of doing a lot of things you do not want to do and missing a lot of good times that you would like to enjoy. God says that the way of the transgressor is hard. He shows that the one who spends his life in running after a "good time" is chasing a phantom, buying bubbles with a "whole soul's tasking", that the world which he foolishly thinks he is gaining is not worth one soul, and that it will soon pass. On the other hand God teaches us that the twice born man will enjoy to the fullest his new life.

The new birth saves from sin. The drunkard that was not able to stop, the victim of self-indulgence, or the possessor of an evil temper are able to conquer these things by the power of Christ, given to them in the new birth. The same power that saves can keep. Christ said, "Greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world". The lives of men like Jerry MacAuley have proved this to be absolutely true.

How may we receive the new birth? By receiving Christ into our hearts. The Apostles answered the question of the Philippian jailor, "What must I do to be saved?" by the words, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved". Such belief implies reception of Christ as Saviour.

Some have the idea that we have to seek God. The truth of the matter is that God has all the time been seeking us. To be born again, we need only to realize that Christ has been standing outside of our hearts all the time and that he has been knocking there waiting patiently, in His great love, for us to open the door. Being born again is just as simple as that. Turn from your ways, open wide your heart to the One who has called you so long and from the depths of your heart say, "Come into my heart, Lord Jesus", and the transaction is done.

Some one will ask, "Is there not something I must do to prepare the way first? Do I not have to improve myself, before I can invite Him to come in?" The answer is that you cannot. You have tried before to improve and have failed, now let Him do the work. As the old hymn says:

"Just as I am, without one plea,
But that Thy blood was shed for me,
And that Thou bidst me come to Thee,
O Lamb of God, I come."

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed—"Thy word have I hid in my heart" (Psalm 119:11).

This week the following verse was submitted by Mrs. Joseph Baker, of Fredericksburg, Va.:

"In all thy ways acknowledge him and he shall direct thy paths."—Proverbs 3:6.

Who will send one from the far-away places, as well as very near us?

FIFTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY

By Berkley Minor

THE Epistle for this Sunday (fifth after Trinity) is 1 Peter 3:8-13. This Epistle gives us rules for holy and happy living to guide us, if we would "love life", and would "see good days", and would "inherit a blessing". We must ever bear in mind that these rules, and all such in the Bible, though dictated to the writer by the Holy Spirit, will not help us to the end we have in view, unless the same Holy Spirit that speaks in them shall be our Guide and Comforter in observing them; whose ears are open to the prayers of "the righteous" only, and whose "face is against them that do evil". Who are "the righteous", and who are those that do not do evil? Such a gracious promise from God, the Holy Ghost, to this favored class should make us earnestly desire to be of that number, and to be sure that we are in it. We have Solomon's inspired words (1 Kings 8:46): "There is no man that sinneth not," and our own hearts testify to their truth. To whom then are His ears open? One of the sentences at Evening Prayer helps us here (2 Cor. 5:21): "He hath made Him to be sin for us who knew no sin that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him". And those who are "made the righteousness of God in Him" are given us in verse 20, "the reconciled to God" through Christ. To these the ears of God are ever open; for He is even more ready to hear than we to pray. We then, "the reconciled to God" in Christ, who have accepted Him as our Saviour, and are righteous in God's sight, may "come boldly to the throne of grace, and "obtain mercy and final grace to help in time of need" (Heb. 4:16). With this assurance we may by His assistance, get much help and comfort from the teaching here given by St. Peter.

Let us consider this teaching. The first sentence of our Epistle (verses eight and nine of the chapter), tells us, "the reconciled to God", "to whom His ears are open", how we shall inherit a blessing; by bestowing blessing, and not "rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing", by one-mindedness, or better (R. V.) by like-mindedness, by compassion, by brotherly love, by pity, by courtesy, or (R. V.) by humble-mindedness. In the preceding chapter this is enforced by Christ's example (verses 21-23), "because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow His steps, . . . who when He was reviled, reviled not again; when He suffered, He threatened not . . ."

St. Peter's teaching here shows how he had profited by the Sermon on the Mount; for one of the Beatitudes is for those who accept reviling: "Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake" (Matt. 5:11); and again (verse 44): "Bless them that curse you." No blessing is more difficult to earn than this, a right attitude of mind toward enemies, whether public or private (hostes or inimici.) That one-mindedness, or like-minded, of St. Peter's teaching does not of course mean that all Christians should think and judge alike; that were impossible, with power of judgment so different, and such different evidence before the minds of different people; but our minds may by God's grace be in complete harmony through that "most excellent gift of charity, the very bond of peace and of all virtues, without which whosoever liveth is counted dead" before Him. The second sentence in the Epistle is (R. V.): "He that would love life, and see good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips that they speak no guile; and let him turn away from evil and do good; let him seek and pursue it." Certainly we should enjoy life and see good days by observing these three rules. Let us pray for guidance to observe them. A large part of the third chapter of St. James' Epistle is given to the tongue, the great evil of an unbridled tongue, and the great difficulty of bridling this unruly member. The Apostle goes so far as to say that if a man "stumbleth not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able to bridle the whole body also" (R. V.). So forcible is his language here as to the danger of, and difficulty in, bridling the tongue, that I quote it in the R. V.: "Now if we put the horses' bridles into their mouths, that they may obey us, we turn about their whole body also. Behold the ships also, though they are so great, and are driven by rough winds, are yet turned about by a very small rudder, whither the impulse of the steersman willeth.. So the tongue also is a little member, and boasteth great things. Behold how much wood is kindled by how small a fire! And the tongue, well illustrating the evil of an 'unbridled" tongue. is the tongue which defileth the whole body, and setteth on fire the wheel of nature, and is set on fire by hell. For every kind of beasts and birds, of creeping things and things in the sea, is tamed and hath been tamed by mankind: but the tongue can no man tame; it is a restless evil, and it is full of deadly poison. Therewith bless we the Lord and Father; and therewith curse we men, which are made after the likeness of God: out of the same mouth cometh blessing and cursing. My brethren, these things ought not so to be. Doth the fountain send forth from the same opening sweet water and bitter? Can a fig-tree, my brethren, yield olives, or a vine figs? neither can salt water yield sweet."

Of the one hundred and thirty-one uses of the word tongue (or tongues) in the Bible, fifty-two are in a bad sense, e. g., a "lying", or a "deceitful", or a "backbiting tongue, well illustrating the evil of an "unabridged" tongue. As a prayer for grace to control this unruly member we should do well to use Ps. 19:14 and 15 (sentence in both Morning and Evening Prayer): "Let the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart be alway acceptable in Thy sight, O Lord, my strength and my Redeemer."

A beautiful rhetorical question, equivalent to a strong negative, comes in our Epistles, "and who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good"? To follow the good we must know it; hence the petition in the collect for the Fifth Sunday after Easter: "Grant to us, Thy humble servants, that by Thy Holy inspiration we may think those things that are good, and by Thy merciful guiding may perform the same, through our Lord Jesus Christ"; so, too, in the petition of the collect for the First Sunday after the Epiphany: "Grant that they (Thy people that call upon Thee', may both perceive and know what things they ought to do, and also may have grace and power faithfully to fulfil the same, through Jesus Christ our Lord."

THE GOSPEL for this Sunday is St. Luke 5:1-11. This miracle and its results have often been compared with that recorded in John 21:1-11, when the risen Lord again, and for the second time gives His fisher Apostles a great draught of fishes, after a fruitless, all-night fish, when (as John says) "they (the seven, Peter, Thomas, Nathaniel, the sons of Zebedee, and two others) that night took nothing". On this first occasion, however, the attitude of the four fishers, Peter and Andrew, whom Matthew and Mark mention, though Luke in our Gospel does not) James and John, is very different, quite despairing, indeed; for Peter says: "Master, we have toiled all the night and taken nothing; nevertheless at Thy word I will let down the net." This first miracle of this kind is made more familiar to the world by one of Raphael's celebrated cartoons, The Miraculous Draught of Fishes.

We will not dwell now on the second miracle, but upon the first occasion, when for lack of proper care, or skill, or faith, "their net brake" for "the great multitude of the fishes"; in such marked contrast with the success won on the second occasion, when the great haul of "an hundred and fifty and three great fishes" was made, "and for all there were so many, yet was not the net broken".

It were will to consider here why the seven fishers of the second miracle were more successful in their fishing, and what hindered four of them on the first occasion from landing so successfully the great haul of fish, given them by their kind Lord and Master. A careful reading of the accounts given in the three synoptic Gospels, brings out some facts bearing on this question. Luke describes the attitude of the people as much in earnest "to hear the word of God"; so much so as to force Him to address them from Simon's boat, thrust out "a little from the land"; while from all three accounts we gather that the four fishermen were more intent on the business of their craft, than to hear the word of God. They had not yet heard His Sermon on the Mount, wherein He told them, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you". They were evidently much occupied in net-casting and cleaning and mending, and Peter's cry of "mea culpa" is best explained by supposing him to be reproaching himself for neglect of Jesus' teaching. We have not a word of Jesus' teaching on that occasion; would that we had! No doubt it had a message for these four whom he saw poor listeners, and whom He planned to make "fishers of men". Perhaps the three writers of the story got no sufficient report of the Lord's words from these less attentive hearers. At least one of the four felt himself utterly unworthy of such bounty. Then their mismanagement of the great catch, filling the boats too full, lifting the too heavily loaded nets to the strain of breaking, when they might have done, as on the second occasion, dragged the net to the shore and emptied it safely there; all this points to an awkwardness and confusion naturally consequent to a sense of failure in duty to their kind Master and Teacher. No wonder, then, that "they forsook all and followed Him", feeling that the things of this world had had too strong a hold upon them, which must be broken once and for all, at the call of Jesus. Oh, how effectual is this "call" of Jesus on some, how wasted, it would seem, on others, on many, as here it seems to have reached the hearts of only these four, apparently less eager to hear than those who "pressed upon Him to hear the word of God, "making Jesus use Simon's boat for a pulpit. But from that day to this often great crowds have pressed to hear the preaching of orators, to be entertained, and called in vain. One of the greatest mysteries is Christ's moral drawn from the eleventh hour laborers, in the householder's vineyard: "Many be called but few chosen" (Matt. 20:16).

I must not go into that difficult question of an "effectual calling"; but surely there is enough of such teaching as to election, and effectual calling, and perseverance of saints in the Bible to make us read with tender feelings those verses of Elizabeth Codner, bearing on the subject:

"Pass me not, O tender Saviour,
Let me love and cling to Thee;
I am longing for Thy favour,
Whilst Thou art calling, Oh, call me, Even me.

Pass me not, O mighty Spirit,
Thou canst make the blind to see;
Witnesser of Jesus' merit,
Speak the word of power to me, Even me.

Have I long in sin been sleeping?
Long been slighting, grieving Thee?
Has the world my heart been keeping?
Oh, forgive, and rescue me, Even me.

Love of God, so pure and changeless,
Blood of God, so rich and free;
Grace of God, so strong and boundless,
Magnify it all in me, Even me."

Surely that mighty Spirit inspired these glowing verses.

A FEEBLE PROTEST.

1309 Irving Street,
Washington, May 10, 1928.

To the Editor of the Black Swan:

In the last number of your magazine—which it is a luxury to read and a delight because of its real artistry, even to look at—you publish an absorbing article on the "Three Chop"—as we old Richmonders of the vernacular call it—road. In this occurs the assertion that "little Alfred Williams ran into this road and presented to the Marquis Lafayette a basket of apples".

About three weeks ago Washington newspapers published announcement of the death of "Alfred B. Williams" and results have demonstrated to me the interest my demise will arouse. Evidently my name was looked up in the directories. Sympathetic florists wrote sympathetic letters to my house, or on the telephone in hushed tones expressive of deep sorrow, offered to supply for the funeral flowers to any amount, woven into emblems, symbols or designs according to order and at reasonable rates. Letter after letter has come directed to "Estate of Alfred B. Williams", proffering tomb stones, head stones, monuments of any material or form and bearing any inscriptions desired and done in the most artistic and workmanlike manner and delivered promptly at lowest possible prices. But yesterday a man called on the telephone and, with voice trembling with anguish, enquired whether I had made arrangements for permanent care of my grave. Before I could explain that I am trying to keep out of the grave as long as permitted to do so, he hurried on to say that it would be a melancholy pleasure for him to fix me up so that family and friends would have real enjoyment in contemplating my last resting place and the beauty and security of my interment.

Now, I confess that I am getting pretty well along and I have no matrimonial nor amatory projects; but I do like to pick up now and then a small job of special newspaper writing. To be advertised in one community as dead and in another as more than one hundred and three years old is not helpful to me in that modest avocation. Therefore, I write to say, not that I shall sue anybody for libel, but that the Alfred B. Williams who died was about thirty years my junior and a stranger to me and that the Alfred Williams who presented the apples to Lafayette was my honored father, then three years old. He did not remember much about the incident, but my grandmother has told me that the Marquis rewarded him with a caressing pat on the head and "God bless you, my son".

Sincerely,

Alfred B. Williams.

Book Reviews

A SIMPLE BOOK FOR THE YOUNG: By B. Young. Marshall Brothers, Ltd., London, England.

This is as the title indicates a book for the young, and it tells of the relationship that should exist between Christ and the young disciple. It presents and illustrates Christ under the several Biblical figures of the Door, the Good Shepherd, the Dew, etc. Much of it conveys good teaching. Parts are unfortunately worded. One can imagine the effect that it would have upon the realistic imagination of the child who is told that the holes were made in Jesus that we might be grafted into His side, the figure then being illustrated by the process of grafting. Sanctified common sense is as necessary as it is rare.

PASTORS, POLITICIANS, PACIFISTS: By LeRoy F. Smith and E. B. Johns. Cloth. Pp. 206, with topical and personal indeces. Published by The Constructive Educational Publishing Company, 5421 Ridgewood Court, Chicago. Price $1.00.

The Introduction to this book pleads that "the authors are steadfast in their support of organized religion—that is, the churches. The citizen who neglects to support organized religion is not performing his whole moral citizenship obligation. . . The Church's true job is to make the State better by making better the individuals who compose the State". But the book is directed against the idea that "the Church should make good citizens by commandeering the functions of the State. . . . If the Church has failed to 'sell' the ideals of morality, Christianity, good will or integrity to the individual, it is not possible, and in the United States it is not legal, for the Church to attempt to 'deliver' these ideals to the citizenship, en masse, by means of ecclesiastical power."

This contribution to the now burning problem, seems to us like the breaking of the long-festering ulcer which has been frothing under the surface. Some of us have for years earnestly contended that the spirit of our Lord's injunction, "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's," has been violated by the interference of the Christian Church in the domain of which it has fundamentally no functional part. The ideality growing out of this mistaken notion has caused endless suspicion, irritable unrest and has disastrously affected the true presentation of the Gospel. It generated the challenging interrogation, during the late war, "Where is the Church? Why does it not stop this thing?" Truth to tell, the very day the bomb of war burst, the delegates to the Peace Conference at Geneva were sent scooting hither and thither to escape being engulfed in the zones of conflagration. It was not then up to the Church. It had failed in the primary stages of the office it is here to fulfil. Financiers, commercial magnates, statesmen, kings and rulers otherwise had taken the thing out of the hands of the Church; and God must wait until the avalanche of selfishness, hatred, unbridled passion and heartless injustice to all classes had exhausted its devilish purpose.

The mission of the Church, if the New Testament has any binding force, is just what it always was, the proclamation of the love of God through the personality and work of His Son, to a world lost in sin and in need of redemption. That message embraces the new birth by the Holy Spirit, through whom the compassion of God flows from the resurrected Lord Jesus into every willing heart, flooding society with the streams of divine affection "for all sorts and conditions of men". If that process is repudiated or perverted by the Church, we may not be surprised if the Church becomes a misnomer and a misfit.

This volume is strikingly suggestive in the prevailing crisis. We may not find space to treat of its varied lines of discussion, but mention one feature. Its arraignment of the Federal Council of Churches should stimulate those who are identified with that organization to seek the vital truth. It shows plainly, that while the Council may have representatives from all the recognized Protestant communions, it cannot authoritatively speak for the entire twenty millions of which those bodies are composed. The authors do not aspire to dictate as to what procedure the Council shall spursue. Rather they irritate in order to provoke a mending of its ways. And their contention is voiced by a sarcastic diatribe from the pen of Lloyd C. Douglass in the Christian Century: "You churches have been given the right of way, eminent domain, priority privileges, that you might demonstrate how Christianity as a great moral motive, could offer a remedy (for our social ills). You are not merely marking time and accomplishing nothing. You are in the way! But for your unkept promises, we might have devised some other expedient. Hand over the torch!" Mr. Douglass writes as an unbeliever in Christian doctrine and truly represents the world from which our Lord prayed His disciples to be alienated (John 17:15, 16). It is high time we should get back to His ideal and let the world run its own way.

If this book could be studied (not merely read) by the many who need illumination on the so-provoking complexity of our social order, a right comprehension would reward the effort.

CHURCH AND POLITICS.

Mr. Editor:

In your recent article, "Danger", you have sounded a warning about Protestants mixing politics and religion, but omitted sounding an alarm about Roman Catholics getting an opportunity to do the same thing in a worse way.

According to quotations from one of the recent Roman Catholic text books, their old-time doctrine is emphatically asserted. It is the duty of the State Government to uphold and aid the Roman Catholic Church even to the point of proscribing (which means even to inflict the death penalty) Protestants and Protestantism. It is the knowledge of this fact that has started the opposition against having a Roman Catholic President.

It is not "Intolerance" (the newspaper cry about the Protestant opposition), but a lawful desire not to have a man in power who believes that it is his duty to exterminate Protestantism. Protestants do not now believe in exterminating Catholics nor have they had in our country (as far as I know) a doctrine similar to that above mentioned as being held by the Catholics about us.

This proscription of Protestants is an approved article of faith with the Roman Catholics, but it is not an article of faith among the Protestants to proscribe them.

The present movement has been on hand (as you doubtless know) for several years. I have kept in some touch with it, and have never seen anything about suppressing Roman religion. It is their view about the State serving their Church that has stirred the opposition. It is not intolerance for a Protestant to oppose having a man in office (especially the presidential) who holds to the belief that he is to use his office to proscribe them! It is self-preservation as to their religious principles and worship.

Minister.

Publication of the above letter is in accordance with The Southern Churchman's policy and teaching of tolerance, fairness and encouragement of freedom of thought and expression. The letter is from a conscientious and earnest gentleman and presents opinions which history and reason prove exactly wrong.

True to the belief described in the editorial to which our correspondent refers, The Southern Churchman distinctly and emphatically disavows intent to help or injure any political party or representative of a party. We continue to oppose, with all the power we have, all attempts to intrude into the Protestant Episcopal Church doctrines, forms and beliefs of the Roman Catholic Church which our Church has rejected and repudiated. That is a subject strictly spiritual and proper for consideration and action within the Church. With equal earnestness and for reasons hitherto stated, and many more, we oppose instrusion by any religious organization into political and governmental affairs.

We find in the assertions of "Minister" nothing to justify, or excuse, in the most remote way or to suggest, interference by any Church or denomination in pending political contests or attempt by any Church to coerce or direct the votes and political alliances of its members. Speeches, or pamphlets or books by fanatical, extreme, Roman Catholics are no more evidence of conspiracy by the sixteen million Roman Catholics of the United States to destroy the seventy odd millions of Protestants or force this country under dominion of the Pope than occasional sermons, speeches and books by extreme and fanatical Protestants or Ku Klux Klan proclamations are of determination by the majority of the American people to disfranchise and expel all Roman Catholics.

Fanatics and extremists are products of logic and unrestrained and unguided by common sense or the teachings of the Saviour and are wisely distrusted as witnesses and leaders. They caused the horrors of the Spanish inquisition and the massacre of St. Bartholomew on one side, the murders, confiscations and persecutions following the prejuries of Titus Oates on the Rye House plot, three hundred years of disfranchisement and denial of civil rights to Roman Catholics in Great Britain, the "No Popery" riots in London, in the Eighteenth Century, the burning of convents and churches in this country in the forties, the Know Nothing lunacy of the fifties, stamped to death by Virginian Protestants under Henry A. Wise.

We have had at least one Unitarian President, now Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, one associate justice of that court is a Jew and another is a Roman Catholic and several States have had Roman Catholic governors. None of these has done anything to destroy Christianity or to force the neck of this republic under the yoke of the Pope. To the contrary, the first declaration of religious freedom in this country was by Lord Baltimore, proprietor and governor of Maryland, who offered haven to the Quakers, regarded as outlaws in New England, and to dissenters, regarded as criminals in Virginia. Here in Richmond we have had at least one Roman Catholic mayor, elected by Protestant votes, and he was an excellent official and did not burn one Protestant church nor destroy one public school. We never have seen nor heard a plausible theory of how a Roman Catholic President of the United States would go about setting up his denomination as the State Church or putting the Pope in possession of our government.

The position of The Southern Churchman is that churches as organizations have no more right to attempt to control the votes and political action of their members than they have to give instructions on what stores or banks shall be patronized or what crops shall be grown. Our contention, based on innumerable facts of history, is that such attempts invariably and inevitably stir those at whom they are directed to resentment and revolt against the churches and Christianity generally and strengthen the ranks of infidelity and atheism. Thomas Jefferson's real religious convictions and sentiments are subjects of dispute a hundred years after his death. The Southern Churchman believes he did incalculable and permanent service for Christianity generally and the Protestant Episcopal Church especially when he successfully demanded absolute divorcement of Church and State, full liberty of religious opinion and prohibition of interference by any religious body, on any pretext, in politics or political issues and questions. Yet in his day thousands of pious, orthodox, zealous Protestants denounced him as antichrist.—Editor.

"DANGER."

Mr. Editor:

"Danger," by Alfred B. Williams, in the June 16 issue of The Southern Churchman, is, in my judgment, a very significant and timely article, showing as it so graphically does, the unholy alliance between the Church and politics that exists in this country today, and the grave menace of this alliance both to the Church and the State. This same unholy alliance, I regret to say, exists also in the Anti-Saloon League, where it is not only a menace to the Church and State, but also to the cause of temperance. As there is a striking analogy between the present conditions in the Church and the Anti-Saloon League, and as Mr. Williams has stated the case so clearly for the Church, I hope he may later see fit to write another article stating the case for the Anti-Saloon League.

Again this injection of politics into religious and temperance questions, not only creates an impossible condition for the clergy, but also for the laity. We are placed in the position of choosing between the Scylla of voting our own convictions and the Charybodis of misleading others by appearing in a false position: to chose between being a hypocrite or appearing to be one. This holds both in Church and temperance matters, so long as the politicians dominate the situation.

I will illustrate my point by a concrete example. I have been a temperance worker since my childhood and for many years a member of the Anti-Saloon League. Recently I found that certain prominent men whose life work and habits had been against temperance, were being held up as apostles of temperance, by the League, as men "in answer to whose prayers the present temperance movement originated". Knowing the facts in the lives of these men, I marvelled greatly at this performance, and took this matter up directly with Dr. David Hepburn of Richmond, also with the National Anti-Saloon authorities at Westerville, Ohio, Dr. Cherrington and Mr. Richardson, and furnished them these FACTS, but all to no avail. Whereupon, I withdrew from the League with this explanation: That as I considered sincerity outranked temperance as a Christian virtue, I could no longer remain in the League and share the responsibility for this state of things, but that I would have to do my temperance work on the outside. I also stated that I greatly feared that this insincerity would react later on the temperance work of the League, and, I regret to say, that my fears have been realized. Later I found out that there was a strong political influence that dominated the policies of the League, and the temperance feature of the League's program was subordinated to the vote-getting feature.

At the time of the death of Wayne B. Wheeler, last summer, there appeared an article in The Literary Digest (the June 18 issue, I think), that threw much light on this subject. Mr. Wheeler was quoted as saying: That the temperance work could not win out on its merits alone, that the League, in order to achieve a victory, would have to line up with one of the major political parties in this country; therefore, he had decided to line it up with the political party with which he was affiliated and also to use the political tactics of this party in putting through the temperance program of the League. Any one who has followed the tactics of the Anti-Saloon League under Mr. Wheeler's guidance, will realize that this was no idle threat. There were a number of editorials in this Literary Digest article, some deploring the passing of Mr. Wheeler, and others hailing it as a good omen for the temperance work itself, as that now, with him out of the work, the political influence, that many deplored as a liability, might be done away with. But so far this hope has not been realized. The same political influences seem to be at work, creating fictitious temperance values for any politician in the Wayne B. Wheeler camp, whose influence might be helpful, and at the same time, putting a much more objectionable insincerity through, by creating fictitious anti-temperance values for any politician who may happen to be in the opposing political camp. In other words, if a man is in one political camp, without reference to his personal habits or official record, he is a temperance man, but if he happens to be in the other camp, he is of necessity a foe to temperance.

One of the secular papers, after observing the political antics and predilections of the Anti-Salooners for some time, and noting their ability to create or destroy temperance values at will, is quoted as putting this remark into the mouths of the political group the League is boosting:

> "We will vote for prohibition as long as we can stagger to the polls."

Again, we find this editorial paragraph in The Tulsa Daily World, as sizing up the situation:

> "The Anti-Saloon League," says Senator Bruce, of Maryland, "is partly ecclesiastical and partly political. It is ecclesiastical enough to be a menace to the State and political enough to be a discredit to the Church." We can't think of any supplementary remarks to be added to this statement."

I am not the only person who has been forced out of the Anti-Saloon League on account of this situation. There are others, and this number will grow, as the policy of the League becomes better understood, and the value of the temperance work will decline, unless there can be found some means of effectually ridding the League of this political incubus.

AS THEY SHOULD STAND.

Mr. Editor:

I have read your editorial (June 23) in The Southern Churchman. It is a searching letter. I hope that the faculty at the Theological Seminary, stands just where Bishops Meade, Johns, Whittle, etc., stood and if they do stand there as they should stand your questions will give no embarrassment at all.

THE CREEDS.

Mr. Editor:

I have read the article to which you called my attention with interest. There may be some real meaning in the "poetry of religious emotions" as applied to those great creeds, but if so, I lack the ability to understand it. I am no more ready to discard the truth embodied in the creeds than I am to discard the truth embodied in the multiplication table. There is plenty of room in this present world for the men who are out of sympathy, yea, who disbelieve the creeds of the Church, as I formally said in the address I wrote for our General Conference two years ago; but as I understand honesty there is no room in the orthodox Churches for the men who have given up the essence of their faith. I still recall those words of Homer's in the ninth book of his Iliad—he puts them in the mouth of Achilles: "More hateful to me than the gates of hell is the man who hides one thing in his heart and says another."

"MISLEADING."

Mr. Editor:

I read in your editorial headed "Misleaders" in the June 23 issue the statement: "The above statement of Professor Bell regarding the atonement, and the Seminary's failure to protest Unitarian teaching on the part of so many of its graduates, caused the Richmond Convocation to lay upon the table a resolution offered at its recent meeting to endorse the teaching of the Seminary."

This statement is so utterly misleading that I feel it is necessary to correct it. The Richmond Convocation has had two recent meetings, the regular meeting late in April and a called meeting early in May; at the regular meeting a resolution was proposed expressing the complete confidence of the Richmond Convocation in the Virginia Seminary. This resolution was referred to a committee and the committee reported recommending that while the large majority of the members of the Richmond Convocation would approve of such a resolution of endorsement, there were a few ministers who would not approve it and in view of the fact that the majority did not desire to force through a resolution of endorsement when they knew that some would be willing to accede to it they recommended that the resolution be laid on the table with the understanding that each individual minister might express his own confidence in the Seminary if he so desired.

At the May meeting of the Convocation, which was called to consider an entirely different matter, the question of expression of approval of the Seminary by members of the Convocation was raised by one minister who was opposed to any such expression or approval. The matter was, therefore, taken from the table where it had lain since the last meeting and the vote on this question showed convincingly that a majority of the members of the Convocation desired to express their confidence in the teaching of the Virginia Seminary.

After being taken from the table the matter was laid upon the table again by the majority with a definite and explicit statement that their reason for laying it on the table was their unwillingness to force clergymen in the minority into the position of seeming to endorse the Seminary.

Instead, therefore, of passing a resolution by the Convocation a statement expressing confidence in the teaching of the Seminary was prepared to be signed by those who desired to do so. It will be seen that a clear majority of the clergy in and around Richmond have signed it. The statement with attached signatures is enclosed herewith.

G. MacLaren Brydon.

The following statement has been signed by fifteen members of the Convocation, eight members declining to sign same:

> We, the undersigned clergy, resident in the city of Richmond and its neighborhood, desire to place on record our complete confidence in the faculty of the Virginia Seminary, its teaching and missionary zeal, and ask for it God's continued blessing and guidance.

The above letter from Rev. Mr. Brydon has been submitted to our friend and informant who is a member of the Richmond Convocation, and he writes us in reply to Mr. Brydon's letter as follows:

"Mr. Brydon's letter records the situation correctly in the main. But he makes certain statements which are just as 'misleading' as the statement he complains of in the editorial. That editorial did not intend to leave the impression that the resolution was laid on the table because the Convocation did not have sufficient strength to be otherwise; all present knew to the contrary.

It was laid on the table as the best solution of the situation which was this: A resolution was offered in Convocation to endorse the teaching of the Virginia Seminary. It was referred to a committee, which favored the resolution two to one, but every one of them loving the Seminary devotedly and knowing that a discussion would not make for peace decided to report in favor of laying the resolution on the table. The Convocation saw it this way and without a word of discussion so voted.

That probably would have ended the matter had it not been for the action of certain members who violated (unwittingly, no doubt) the understanding of the Convocation, which had declared against further 'concerted' action in the matter. These brethren sent a letter to the Richmond clergy asking them to sign practically the same resolution which the Convocation in the interest of peace and harmony, and love for the Seminary, had laid on the table.

This letter stated that the opportunity was given 'to all of the clergy in the city' to sign it. The fact that this opportunity was not given to all brought the matter again before the clergy and also to discussion. This discussion developed such pronounced opposition to the resolution that it is a question in the minds of many whether, with the membership then present, the resolution could have been passed had it come to a vote.

At any rate, those favoring the resolution proposed that it should continue to lie on the table and that all who chose might together sign any commendatory letter desired. To say, then, that the matter was laid on the table because of the 'unwillingness to force clergymen in the minority into the position of seeming to endorse the Seminary', is, to say the least, misleading. There was nothing said to lead the minority to believe this. The minority did not want any such concession. Any one might commend the teaching at the Seminary who chose so to do. But they did not intend that the organization to which they belong should do it 'unanimously', and so carry them along with it in the face of specific charges which have not been specifically denied. Besides this, it is a poor compliment, indeed, no compliment at all, when a body of alumni of an institution cannot pass a resolution commendatory of the teaching of their alma mater without a respectable minority protesting.

What a pity such a state of things should exist! Whose fault is it? Is the Seminary really evangelistic? Does it believe and teach the truth for which it was founded and for which those now dead gave their time and money? Or has the Seminary surrendered to 'Modern thought' and 'advanced scholarship' and thrown over the truth for which it stood for three quarters of a century?

Mr. J. G. Blakesdale said in a letter to The Southern Churchman last May that the Seminary could answer this in fifty words. Let the Seminary do it. Let it rise nobly and courageously to the occasion and take and maintain its place and its stand for the Truth as this Church has found it in Holy Scripture and so declares it."

Sewanee Summer School Notes.

The Rev. Moultrie Guerry, of South Carolina, Assistant Director of Adult Division, and also Treasurer of the Summer School, is in Sewanee, and may be addressed there throughout the months of July and August.

The Rev. William H. Milton, D. D., of North Carolina, has consented to act as Director of the School of the Prophets. Bishop Guerry had already formed his program, and had written a circular letter to be sent out with a bulletin. These were all sent out as the Bishop's last message.

Special railroad rates to Sewanee will be sold for one fare plus $1, and on the following dates: July 1, 2, 3, 9, 10, 11, 16, 23; August 1, 2, 8, 9, 13, 16, 23, and good for twenty days, in addition to the date of sale. If any one should desire to stay longer, they can see agent at Sewanee, and have ticket changed to regular summer excursion ticket.

"The School of the Prophets," planned by the late Bishop Guerry in connection with the Summer School at Sewanee, Tenn., August 2 to 16, will hold its sessions as planned by Bishop Guerry. The course will be as follows:

"Christian Mysticism," by Dean Wm. H. Nes, of Christ Church Cathedral, New Orleans, La.

"The Christian Ministry for Today," by the Rev. Wm. H. Milton, D. D., of St. James' Church, Wilmington, N. C.

"The Preachers' Use of the Bible," by Rev. C. B. Wilmer, D. D., Professor of Pastoral Theology, University of the South, Sewanee, Tenn.

"Evangelism," by Bishop T. C. Darst, D. D., the Rev. W. J. Loaring-Clark, D. D., and Dr. Larkin W. Glazebrook.

It is hoped that the delay in sending out notice of the plans for these courses, caused by Bishop Guerry's tragic death, and the possible uncertainty in the minds of those interested may not prevent a large attendance at the School.

Those of the clergy who expect to attend will kindly notify Miss Emma Twiggs, Executive Secretary, No. 2015 Sixth Avenue, North, Birmingham, Ala. Failure, however, to make this notification need not prevent the attendance of any persons deciding at the last moment to attend the School."

Coolidge Approves Golden Rule Sunday.

General James G. Harbord presided at a meeting of the American section of the International Golden Rule Committee, at the Bankers' Club in New York City on June 27, at which time plans were made for the observance of Golden Rule Sunday on December 2, this date being selected in conjunction with the international committee, which will hold its annual meeting in Geneva.

Charles V. Vickrey, Secretary of the International Committee, reported that Golden Rule Sunday was observed last year by probably a million people representing fifty different countries, and that in the two months following that observance the offerings made for the underprivileged children of Bible Lands amounted to $820,591. Strong endorsements of the movement were read from friends who could not be present, including Governors Dan Moody of Texas, Austin Peay of Tennessee, and Victor Donahey of Ohio, and from ex-Governor Lowden of Illinois and ex-Governor Allen of Kansas. A message from President Coolidge states: "I hope the voluntary observance of Golden Rule Sunday may become increasingly prevalent in America and throughout the world. Its practical help is the best expression of friendship."

Mahan School, Yangchow: Report on Conditions Found Upon Evacuation.

This place was first occupied by the military on March 29 or 30, 1927, and has been occupied almost continuously since, by various armies, until evacuated on April 7, 1928.

Every building has been stripped of all metal-ware equipment: locks, bolts, books, electric light fixtures, etc. In many cases even window-glass had been removed; also many doors, and some floors, removed; said to have been used for fuel. Many shutters are gone.

Interior walls are all damaged and defaced, much of it beyond cleaning or ordinary repair. In many places, notably in the School Chapel, the plaster will have to be removed and done over. Of lath-and-plaster partitions in the school (residence not so bad) seventy-five per cent are broken beyond repair. Outside structural walls are in at least two places broken through. The parts having cement floors were mostly used for stables, and much damaged. Some out buildings have been so damaged that they can only be demolished. And the whole place is filthy beyond possibility of description. A ring of filth girdles every house, and tons of lime will be required for a preliminary purification.

Many trees and valuable plants and shrubs have been destroyed; many trees have been cut down and used for fuel. Brick walkways are in ruins. The compound hall was broken down in several places. The expensive artesian well is destroyed. Two of our four native wells are ruined; one by defilement from horses and men, and another, the best of all the dug wells and the only one with unfailing dry-weather flow, has been filled up, it having been within the space developed for a drill ground. A large cement cistern for rainwater, appertaining to one of the foreign residences, is full of a slimy pollution, whose very disposal without pestilential consequences is a problem. It can of course never be redeemed to its proper use.

Of the personal property of missionaries, in the school and two foreign residences, a small part was salvaged by friends and servants and sent to Shanghai. Of the rest, nothing whatever remains except fragments. Of school furniture a part, perhaps a scanty fourth, remains, but all in damaged condition. The two safes were both broken open and rifled, and all school records, which were complete, for the nineteen years of the School's existence, are destroyed.

Dr. Mott Resigns as General Secretary of Y. M. C. A.

Dr. John R. Mott, the General Secretary of the National Council of the Young Men's Christian Association, who has been related to this movement for forty years, placed in the hands of the General Board at its meeting at Meridale Farms on the twenty-second of June, his resignation to take effect at the October meeting of the National Council.

The call to a higher and larger service in the presidency of the International Missionary Council which unites the missionary forces of the world, including those of the Association, made it necessary for him to sever his official relation as Secretary of the American Y. M. C. A.

His resignation was received with deep regret but not without a recognition of the force of the larger call.

Since his resignation, if accepted, will not take effect until October, no action or official consideration has been given to a possible successor.

The Spirit of Richmond.

The Spirit of St. Louis linked continents together in a closer spirit of international brotherhood. Recently Richmond showed its spirit in linking up the denominations in a closer spirit of interdenominational brotherhood. On Sunday, June 10, there was an exchange of pulpits of all denominations arranged by the committee on Christian Cooperation of the Ministerial Union. It was very gratifying the way the pastors cooperated and the plan was citywide and embraced the largest churches. It struck a responsive chord in the hearts of all the people and the echoes reveal that this was more than a friendly gesture of goodwill, that a deeper unity existed than we realized. In some cases a Presbyterian minister was told that he preached like a Baptist and Episcopalian like a Methodist and so on. We think it was a notable achievement for a city of of 200,000 to carry through such a program and trust that other communities will do likewise.

St. Timothy's Herndon.

Bishop Tucker paid his first visit to Upper Truro Parish the evening of June 17, confirming a class of five persons in St. Timothy's Church, the Rev. Alexander Galt, rector.

On Tuesday, June 19, at the same place was held an all-day meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary, the Chantilly and Herndon branches uniting to welcome the Educational Secretary, Mrs. H. B. Soule, of Annandale, Va. The services began with the celebration of the Holy Communion, after which Mrs. Soule gave an interesting summary of "The Church Awake". The congregation adjourned to the rectory for luncheon and the social hour, after which Mrs. Soule resumed her devotional talks on Service, Prayer and Stewardship.

The President of the St. Timothy's Woman's Auxiliary, Miss Ida Lee Castleman, voiced the thanks of the members to Mrs. Soule for her visit; and to the Christ Church, Chantilly oWman's Auxiliary, of which Mrs. Alexander Galt is President, for their attendance, interest and helpfulness in making the joint meeting a success.

NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. W. T. Manning, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. S. Lloyd, D. D., Suffragan
Rt. Rev. Herbert Shipman, D. D., Suffragan.

On Sunday, July 1, the first of a series of meetings was held in Madison Square, by the staff of Calvary Episcopal Church. This church believes that there is as much need for active work in the summer as in winter. The myth that nobody is in New York in the summer is disproved in the city squares and streets on any week night.

The clergy, followed by a full vested choir, led by a trumpeter, marches singing from the church at Twenty-first Street and Fourth Avenue, to Twenty-fourth Street and Madison Avenue. There, on an improvised platform, lay men and women give brief testimonies of what Christ has done in their own lives. The meeting lasts a little short of an hour, when they return again singing, followed by any one in the square who is interested, and march through the wide-open doors of the church, up the aisle into the chancel. the crowd falling into the pews on either side. There a shortened form of evening prayer is said, with many well-known hymns.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

Cathedral Receives Gift From Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

Washington Cathedral has again been chosen by the Brotherhood of St. Andrew as a fitting place to record the patriotic services rendered by Episcopalians in all branches of the service of the U. S. during the World War.

Mr. H. Lawrence Choate, Chairman of the Committee in charge of the National Convention of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, which is to meet in Washington October 5-9, recently made an official presentation to the Cathedral of the World War Records of the members of the Protestant Episcopal Church serving in all branches of the service. Dr. Anson Phelps-Stokes, Canon of Washington, and Dr. Joseph Fletcher, Canon Librarian, representing the Cathedral authorities, gratefully accepted this gift of national interest and significance. The ceremony was held informally, in the memorial reading room of the Cathedral Library.

In his brief remarks, Mr. Choate reviewed the work done by representatives of the Brotherhood in the camps during the World War, stressing the importance of getting groups of men together for fellowship in observing the organization's two cardinal rules of prayer and personal service. He said the national officers of the Brotherhood had decided that the proper place for the war service records of the men and women of the Episcopal Church was in the Cathedral now rising in the Capital of the National. In addition to the records in the files he presented the Cathedral Library a copy of an interesting book entitled "Army and Navy Department of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew During the Great War".

The Pageant and Drama Society of the Diocese of Washington held its last meeting of the season at the charming and picturesque sylvan theatre of Mrs. Marieta Minnegerode Andrews, on Seminary Hill on the afternoon of Saturday, June 30.

A pageant was presented by the children of St. John's Church, Bethesda, Md., under the direction of the Rev. Clarence Parker, rector of St. John's Church. A short business meeting, following the pageant, was presided over by the Rev. Mr. Stevens, rector of Brookland Parish and Chairman of this Drama Society. A pageant contest was announced for next fall, and announcement was made that "The Cross Triumphant", Mrs. Minnegerode Andrews' beautiful and inspiring religious pageant,would be presented October 19 and 20 in Washington Auditorium for the benefit of the delegates and visitors to the General Convention. Committees in preparation for the work of the fall were appointed at this meeting, and after adjournment, a box supper was enjoyed by a number of people attending.

Mrs. Andrews very graciously welcomed all them to her woodland theatre, and extended a general invitation to any who descired the use of the theare for drama and pageantry work.

The whole occasion was a delight to all who made the journey. The next meeting of the Society will be held the second Tuesday in November.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rt. Rev. Thomas J. Garland, D. D., Bishop.

Union Patriotic Service.

The annual Union Patriotic Service in Old Christ Church, Philadelphia, was held July 4. The speakers were the Rev. Dr. E. P. Pfatteicher, president of the Lutheran Ministerium of Pennsylvania, and the Rev. Dr. Ivan Murray Rose, pastor of the First Baptist Church, Philadelphia.

The service which has become an annual religious feature of the Independence Day celebration is fostered by Rev. Dr. Washburn, rector of Christ Church.

Former Lutheran Candidate for Holy Orders.

The Rev. Arthur C. Carty, for more than twenty years a member of the Lutheran Ministerium of Pennsylvania, and for the greater part of that time prominently identified with the missionary and other work of the Lutheran Church in Philadelphia and vicinity, and a member of important Boards and Committees, has been admitted as a candidate for Holy Orders in the Protestant Episcopal Church.

Mr. Carty was recently received into full communicant membership of the Episcopal Church by Bishop Garland in Old Christ Church, Philadelphia. Following that ceremony Mr. Carty, with the approval of the Bishop and the Standing Committee of the Diocese, was admitted as a candidate for Holy Orders.

During his ministry, Mr. Carty has served a number of parishes of the Lutheran Church. Aside from his parochial duties he has also been one of the leaders in considerable work of a pioneer character in the Lutheran communion, particularly in work among boys and in the development of religious publicity. He was the founder of the Lutheran Church Book and Literature Society, and for fifteen years directed Lutheran Noon Day Lenten Services. For ten years he was secretary of the Jewish Mission Board of the Lutheran Church and one of the founders of the Jewish Mission stations in this city and Baltimore, and was one of the founders also of the Kensington Dispensary for the Treatment of Tuberculosis.

Cornerstone Laid.

Saturday, June 30, the Rev. A. R. Van Meter, Dean of the Convocation of Germantown and Executive Secretary of the Diocese, acting for Bishop Garland, laid the cornerstone of the new parish house of St. Bartholomew's Church, at Comly and Dittman Streets, in Wissinoming, of which the Rev. John R. McCrory is rector. The parish house is to be the beginning of a new group of buildings, which will include a church and a rectory to take the place of the present property which is inadequate to meet parish needs.

In addition to the clergy and members of Episcopal churches in the Germantown Convocation, clergy and representatives of the Presbyterian, Baptist, Methodist and other communions in the Wissinoming section of the city participated.

St. Bartholomew's had its beginning in Wissinoming about twenty-five years ago as a parochial mission of St. Mark's.

New Church of the Redeemer.

The Rev. Francis M. Taitt, Dean of the Convocation of Chester, acted for the Bishop Sunday, July 1, in the laying of the cornerstone of the new Episcopal Church of the Redeemer, Hillcrest and Springfield Avenues, Springfield, Delaware County. For several years the congregation of the Redeemer has been worshipping in the Woman's Club of Springfield. The new church is to be the first unit of an impressive group of buildings which will occupy an outstanding site. The entire vested choir of historic Old St. Paul's Church in Chester, of which parish Dean Taitt is rector, joined with the choir of the Redeemer in the musical program and took part in the open-air processional of clergy of the Convocation and parish organizations from the Woman's Club to the church site. Speakers included Dean Taitt, the Rev. Richard H. Gurley, rector of St. Martin's, Radnor, and the Rev. George R. Bishop, in charge of the Springfield congregation. The plans for the new group of buildings for St. Bartholomew's and for the Redeemer at Springfield were prepared by the Philadelphia firm of architects, Watson, Thompson and Edkins.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

The Pee Dee Convocation of South Carolina.

By Mrs. T. S. Hemingway.

Seldom can it be said that a convocation is held amid such historic environment as that of the Pee Dee which convened in the Church of the Holy Cross at Statesburg, S. C., May 17 and 18.

The little village of Statesburg, only about two hours from the historic city of Charleston, and an hour still nearer Columbia, the state capital, is made up of a dozen or more homes dating back to colonial days or the ante-bellum period. It requires only a casual glance for the traveler to determine the kind of people such homes must have contributed to the world's affairs. Indeed, it was from these dwelling places that many of the men who made the history of this proud little State came.

The Church of the Holy Cross, nestling in the midst of these fine old dwellings, traces its origin back to early colonial days. It was as early as 1788 that the General Assembly in Charleston passed an act to incorporate vestries and church wardens of the Episcopal churches in the parishes of St. Luke, St. Matthew, Prince George Winyah, St. Stephen, St. James' at Goose Creek, and the vestries of the Episcopal Churches at Claremont and St. Helena Island. This resulted in the organization of a vestry at Statesburg, which was called the vestry of the Claremont Church.

Statesburg chanced to be located in the hill section of the Santee River, one of the largest water highways of the coastal section. After the Revolutionary War the settlers in the lowlands began to congregate in higher sections where they thought malaria, at that time a curse, to be less prevalent. When they began to move into the hill country around Statesburg, they found no church within easy access.

Realizing the need of a convenient place of worship, the vestry and church wardens of the Parish of St. Mark in the year 1770 petitioned the legislature to grant a sum of money for the building of a chapel in this hill country. A chapel some ten miles below the present site of the church was the result of this petition. It was built as a chapel of ease. It was sold in 1788 to Edward Richardson by the vestry of the Claremont Church. This vestry was composed of such men as General Thomas Sumter, George Joor, Isham Moore, J. McNair, William Bracey, William Rees, and William Murrell, with J. G. Guignard and B. Waring as wardens.

These gentlemen decided to build at once a church of certain specified dimensions. The rector at that time was the Rev. Matthew Tate. General Sumter donated the land for this purpose. In the old church records may be found the deed for this grant. These records also contain the names of many representatives of South Carolina's distinguished families and makers of history as pew holders and vestrymen.

In the interesting churchyard are to be found the last resting places of more than one who held high rank in the army of the Confederacy, as well as others of note. Here lies the body of Joel R. Poinsett, LL. D., South Carolina's famous statesman, diplomat, scientist, and botanist. It was for him our far-famed Christmas flower was named. He first introduced the poinsetta into this country.

In time, as the population in this part of the hill country increased, the congregation outgrew the little church and it became necessary to remove it and build in its place a more pretentious edifice. The cornerstone to the new building was laid September 11, 1850. The name of the new church was changed to that of the Church of the Holy Cross by an amendment of the act of incorporation.

The present house of worship is of Gothic architecture that blends in a gratifying manner with the setting furnished by a luxuriance of nature's gift peculiar to this section of country bordering on the lowland and that of the hills.

The Church of the Holy Cross was consecrated July 14, 1852, by the Rev. Francis Huger Rutledge, in the absence of the bishop who was ill. It has fittingly been called "The crowning jewel upon the high hills of the Santee".

It was in this historic setting that the spring meeting of the Pee Dee Convocation was called to order on May 17. There were a number of outstanding clergymen in the country present to participate in the program. Chief among these were the Rev. H. W. Foreman, of New York, National Secretary for Rural Work; the Rev. Bertram E. Brown, of Tarboro, N. C.; and the late Rt. Rev. William A. Guerry, Bishop of the Diocese of South Carolina, each of whom made addresses.

During the afternoon session the report of the Rev. H. D. Bull, rector of the historic Prince George Winyah, of Georgetown, formed the principal topic of discussion. Mr. Bull's survey of the rural work done in the diocese showed that there has been an increase in communicants in the diocese of 7,028 in the year 1927 over 2,849 in the year 1880. Yet the figures for the rural communicants show a sharp decrease in percentage since 1880. Then it stood at twenty-five per cent as compared with eighteen per cent last year. The figures speak for the exodus from the country to town.

An interesting feature of the reports was that of the Rev. Moultrie Guerry. He told of services held each Sunday at the State farms and Camp Alice, a tuberculosis resort nearby by laymen, laying stress upon the fact that this additional work would be a physical impossibility for one minister.

The Rev. Bertram Brown spoke of twelve churches he is now sponsoring in rural districts. He seeks out a barn, school building, or private residence in places where there is no church, and begins with a Sunday School. Today many of such beginnings have grown to substantial missions.

Mr. Brown made a plea for clergymen to remain in the country when needed. He called attention to the number of men God had called from rural districts to carry on His work.

Bishop Guerry, speaking for the Charleston Convocation, extended the invitation for the Pee Dee Convocation to meet with them the first week in November in Orangeburg, which was accepted.

Bishop Guerry in his address spoke of the undeveloped places in this diocese, and suggested that Episcopalians select some points that show promise, concentrate on them, and put men and money to work there. The Bishop suggested that it might be a good thing to have a "Gospel Bus" equipped with an altar and organ and two young clergymen and let them go from place to place, preaching the gospel and distributing literature and giving communion to those who live in remote places out of touch with the church.

The conference closed with a vote of thanks to the Rev. H. W. Foreman, the Rev. Moultrie Guerry and his parish, and to others who helped assure its success. The visitors returned to their homes carrying with them impressions of a place hallowed by memories of days that went into the making of the history of their little State.

Commencement Exercises of the Bishop Payne Divinity School, Petersburg, Virginia.

The fiftieth session of the Bishop Payne Divinity School closed on Wednesday, May 30. The baccalaureate sermon was preached in Emmanuel Chapel, Sunday afternoon, May 28, by the Rev. J. L. Taylor, D. D., rector of St. Philip's Church, Richmond, Va. The Alumni Association held its annual business meeting Wednesday morning. The address to the graduating class was delivered by the Rev. G. MacLaren Brydon, D. D., Richmond, Va. The senior class essay was read by Mr. James W. Mitchell of the Diocese of Massachusetts, his subject being "The Ministry of Reconciliation". The diplomas and certificates were delivered by Bishop Tucker of Southern Virginia, who also made a short address. Mr. James W. Mitchell, of Massachusetts, received the diploma of a full graduate, and Mr. Joseph L. Lavington a certificate of partial graduation.

The Board of Trustees held its annual meeting in Whittle Hall Thursday morning, Bishop Tucker presiding. The Rev. H. St. George Tucker, D. D., Bishop of Virginia, was elected vice-president to succeed the late Bishop Brown. The Board endorsed the suggestion that an educational society for Negro candidates for the ministry be organized and $400 was raised at the meeting for this important and pressing need.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.

Historic Church Sees New Period of Usefulness.

A picturesque and historic Long Island Church, after having been closed for fifty years (except for a very few services at rare intervals), was reopened for worship on the afternoon of Trinity Sunday, and will be in use every Sunday at 4:30, at least through the summer season. A large congregation, more than could crowd into the little edifice, came together to celebrate the reopening; and it is expected that there will be sufficient attendance every Sunday to justify the reestablishment of services.

The church is St. John's, Oakdale. It was erected in 1765, and is the second oldest of our Suffolk County churches, antedated only by Caroline Church, Setauket. St. John's was built to serve a wide countryside, long before the villages which now lie to east and west of it had their beginnings. When these villages became centers of activity, St. John's, left desolate, was closed about 1875, as being inaccessible and unnecessary. One by one the vestrymen died off, and none were elected in their places. One day a dozen years ago, or thereabout, Admiral Nicoll Ludlow came to Bishop Burgess to bring him the massive key of the old church and a deed to the property. Admiral Ludlow was the sole survivor of the rector, church wardens and vestrymen of the parish, and he believed that all the powers of the corporation resided in him. He had tested this theory in the courts, and with the able assistance of his attorney, Mr. Joseph P. Wood, of Sayville, had carried his contention to the Court of Appeals of the State of New York, which had upheld his claim. By this courageous action of Admiral Ludlow this property was thus saved to the diocese, for the use to which it had been consecrated by Bishop Onderdonk in 1843.

In the last few years an occasional service has been held, and the building has been kept in a fair state of repair. Many will rejoice that it is now put again to its holy use, and will hope that it will be kept in use. The old building is quaint and picturesque, rather than beautiful. It remains for the most part as originally constructed, though there have been some alterations. Though the building is only about twenty feet wide, there is a gallery down both sides as well as across the west end. It is believed that the gallery was for slaves and servants. A pipe organ, much too large, stands near the door. A white sandstone font, large enough for the immersion of a small child, is near the chancel. The doors of the pews fasten securely from within. The exterior is still covered with the original hand-split pine shingles. A graveyard surrounds the church, in which about seventy-five graves are still marked. Doubtless there are others unmarked. Here Admiral Ludlow is buried in the Ludlow family plot.

The property is in the Montaul Highway, on the north side of the road, between the villages of Oakdale and West Sayville. Many motorists pass it on Sunday. May some of them find it convenient to stop and worship here!

The Rev. John Tilly, of Central Ispil, is in charge.

Novel Plan of Worship.

Contrasting with the preceding story of a venerable church that is entering a new period of usefulness, is the account of the dedication of a new and rather novel place of worship in the midst of a newly-settled and rapidly-increasing population. One of the recent centers of growth in Queens County has been the territory to the north and west of Queens Village. On the Rocky Hill road, just above where it runs into Jamaica Avenue, and on many newly-made streets laid like a great gridiron upon the truck farms that flourished there just a few brief years ago, hundreds of houses have been built, and hundreds of families live there. A little chapel known as St. Andrew's, Creedmore, had ministered to a few people in a little hamlet half a mile back of this newly-populated district. Archdeacon Duffield determined to make his resources of use in the new circumstances; closed up the chapel; transferred the congregation, as a nucleus, into a rented room in the new settlement; and started St. Andrew's into a new and larger life. The wisdom of the change was soon evident. A committee of twenty-one business men of the new community have bought property, supervised alterations, and made a chapel and meeting rooms out of a dwelling house. The chapel occupies the lower floor, the parish rooms the upper. The Rev. Thomas C. Johnson has been appointed in charge, and on Tuesday evening, June 5, Bishop Stires and Archdeacon Duffield dedicated that remodeled dwelling to its new uses, and installed the new pastor. The location is at Ninety-third Avenue and Two Hundred and Twenty-fourth Street, Queens Village.

The Rev. John Henry Fitzgerald, rector of Christ Church, Bay Ridge, Brooklyn, was taken with appendicitis recently, and an operation was found to be necessary at once. This was performed successfully, and the patient is doing well in the Norwegian Hospital in Brooklyn. His marriage, however, which was set for Saturday, June 16, has had to be postponed. In this great disappointment to Mr. Fitzgerald and his fiance, a host of friends share; and are reassured to know that his recovery is so far progressed that a new date for the wedding has been set on Saturday, June 30.

PITTSBURGH.

Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., Bishop.

Trinity Cathedral.

Old Trinity Church became the Cathedral of the Diocese of Pittsburgh with an impressive service of inauguration, Trinity Sunday, June 3, 1928. The chancel and choir were beautifully decorated with ferns and flowers. The three galleries, in fact every inch of room, in the church were jammed long before the organ prelude, "Cathedrals'" began the service. The procession was led by the vested boy choir of Trinity, followed by the Diocesan Board of Trustees, the vestry of Trinity Church, the lay order of the Brotherhood of St. Barnabas, the Laymen's Missionary League, the clergymen representing other denominations, the clergy from the missions and parishes of the diocese and the Bishop.

The transfer of the properties of the Church to the diocese was a brief ceremony, in which the Senior Warden, H. Lee Mason, Jr., read the act of transfer and handed the agreement of merger and decree of court, together with the keys of the church buildings to the Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., who accepted them on behalf of the diocese and placed them on the altar.

In his address, Bishop Mann expressed his gratification at the splendid attendance at this service—truly it was a diocesan, for there were representatives present from every mission and parish in the diocese. He especially welcomed the representatives of other denominations that had come to share in the glory of this inauguration service. Bishop Mann then briefly traced the history of religious development in Western Pennsylvania since the journeyings of George Washington into this country, and particularly the part taken by Trinity Church in the history of Pittsburgh since the parish was established here as a land grant from the heirs of William Penn.

Dean Kammerer spoke of the realization of a dream which many former members of Old Trinity had longed to see. He stressed the place Trinity should hold in the diocese as its Cathedral. Further he expressed the hope that the messages from the pulpit of Trinity Cathedral would be the means of bringing nearer the breach between the two extremes of our great Christian fellowship.

Trinity Church was established in 1787, and the present church building is the third to be erected on the property located in the downtown business district of Pittsburgh.

Conneaut Summer School.

The fifteenth annual session of the Conneaut Lake Summer Conference for Church Workers of the Dioceses of Pittsburgh and Erie will be held this year between the dates of July 8 and 15. The conference will open with an informal service in the Crystal Room Sunday, July 8, 1928.

The Rev. Churchill Gibson, D. D., rector of St. Mary's, Ardmore, Pa., will have charge of the Sunset Services; also the Rev. Charles B. Ackley, D. D., will give an illustrated lecture on Great Cathedrals. July 11 there will be a joint diocesan picnic, in which it is expected many of the Church Schools from the two dioceses (Erie and Pittsburgh) will participate. A program of sports will be arranged. Dr. Austin P. Hutchinson will look after the social and play periods.

Two orchestra concerts will be given daily. The details for the music festival have not yet been announced, but the tentative program of the orchestra and festival chorus provides a rendition of the prize opera, of Faust, and of the Messiah.

Sunday, July 15, 11 A. M., there will be a great service in the music hall. The choirs of Northwestern Pennsylvania will join in this service.

GOD, REMEMBER THIS.

Edith Mirick.

God, remember this for him, the rough centurion;
He who is trained to murder and to lust—
That, when upon His cross, Your Son
Hung dying and there passed below
The cultured and the righteous
To their meat and drink,
He it was who held up to parching lips,
Upon a spear, a sop of vinegar.
God, remember this for him.

God, remember this for her, the harlot;
She who gives her body for a price—
That when upon His cross, Your Son
Hung dying and there passed below
The sinless and the virtuous
With robes drawn tight,
She it was, crouched beneath His feet,
Who wept for Him,
God, remember this for her.

God, remember this for him, the thief;
He who has broken stone-carved law—
That when upon His cross, Your Son
Hung dying and there passed below
The Scribe and Pharisee,
Pausing a space to jibe,
He it was asked a place within
His coming Kingdom.
God, remember this for him.

"The Homelessness of Christ."

To state our difficulties plainly is always the best way. One has difficulties about our Lord's homelessness during the three years of His Ministry. We are told to imitate Christ. How can we imitate Him here? Should we not, my correspondent says, be in danger of being arrested for "wandering without visible means of support"? Why was He homeless? He had worked as a carpenter, thus setting us all a splendid example; and He had a Mother to support. Why did He leave the carpenter's shop? And what are we to say, either here or in connection with what my correspondent (surely rather strangely) calls His "temporary desertion of His Mother in the Temple when He was twelve years old", as to His treatment of His Mother?

One thing is surely clear. He Who, in the intense agony of crucifixion, had thought for His Mother and her future was not One lacking in natural affection or in the duty of a son. As to the incident in the Temple, it has always appeared to me one of the most natural and beautiful in all that lovely third gospel. There is no reason to suppose that Jesus knew that His party had left Jerusalem so quickly after the feast. Absorbed, as such a boy would naturally be, in the first sight of the Temple and its solemn services, He simply waited for His Mother to call Him to come with her. When she spoke to Him of her anxious seeking of Him, He replied quite naturally, "Seek me? Why did you seek me? Did you not know that I should be in my Father's house?" For that, and not "about my Father's business" is, I am sure, the right translation.

The main question is whether He was right to leave the carpenter's shop during the three years of His ministry. But can there be any question about it? He was come "to reveal the Father". He was come "to give His life a ransom for many". Can any one dream for a moment that it was His duty to turn away from the great task to which He had been called by His Father, in order to continue at the carpenter's bench? There is not the slightest reason to suppose that the Blessed Virgin was left destitute. Whether, with Dr. Glover, we regard the "Brethren of the Lord" as younger sons of Joseph and Mary, sons now old enough to support her, or whether (as I think is the right view) we regard them as sons of Joseph by an earlier wife, the Virgin was certainly not homeless. And, had she had no one else, she had her sister Salome, the wife of a well-to-do master-fisherman. Jesus taught that, when any one has clearly heard God's call, neither father nor mother, brothers nor sisters, wife nor children, home nor country must be allowed to stand in the way. And surely He was right. Would any one say that a young man today who heard God's call to the mission field should be deaf to that call because of a mother who had plenty of other people to support her? I myself would go much further, and say that there seems to me no way in which selfishness masquerades as love with more fatal results than when old people interfere with the career in life of son or daughter, under the pretense that his or her "first duty is to the old people". It has always been more common with daughters than with sons, and is perhaps less common with either today than it used to be. But I know not a few ruined lives due to this cause.

As for the point about any one who has given up home and property incurring today the danger of being arrested for wandering without visible means of support, we surely need not take seriously. We must not regard the conditions of our modern, highly artificial and unnatural civilization as presenting the ideal of what must be and ought to be. It was not the condition of things which obtained in our Lord's time; it is not the condition of things found in India today, as every reader, of Mr. Kipling's lovely story, The Miracle of Purun Bhagat, or of Kim knows. It may not be possible to follow our Lord's example in this particular today. That does not prove that it ought not to be possible, or that the example is a bad one. It may never be possible for the great majority of people. But it is worth noting that there are not a few people who believe that we shall never convert India till our missionaries follow it quite literally.—Canon Peter Green, in The Guardian (English).

The Power of Prayer.

Prayer is the most potential and the most neglected of all the forces at the control of the disciple. It is like electricity, at once the great illuminator, messenger, motive power and therapeutic. It is encouraged by promises more numerous and more absolute than attach to any other one act and privilege of the believer's life. God's universal terms are peculiarly associated with it, "whosoever", "whatsoever", "wheresoever", "whensoever", "all", "any", "every", and the unequivocal "shall" that leaves no doubt of His purpose to answer true prayer.

And yet it remains true that of all the potentialities and possibilities of a godly life, this is the least put into vigorous and powerful exercise. We have not, because we ask not; and we ask and receive not, because we ask amiss. To quicken, arouse, and revive the prayer spirit means advance all along the lines. Every other form of holy living, doing, serving, waits for holy praying to give it life and power. Why is it that we resort to prayer last of all and least of all in the crises of life?—A. T. Pierson.

On the Other Side of Death.

Part I.

Death is everywhere. Continually neighbors and friends and loved ones are passing into the strange mystery. Over each one of us the shadow hangs all the while, for we know we must die.

But the gospel of Christ brings light to shine in upon this gloom. It sets its lamps in the grave—there is no valley of shadows. It speaks its comfort by the side of the coffin. Death is not an eternal farewell. As Christians we ought to know all that the gospel has to tell us about death, that we may think of it intelligently and without fear. Let us remember the words of Revelation 14:13. 'I heard a voice from heaven saying, Write, Blessed are the dead, who die in the Lord from henceforth: yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; for their works follow with them."

"Blessed are the dead." But what dead? Not all the dead. There are two other worlds. There is a prison for the lost; there is a Father's house. Death does not mean the same for those who have served Christ and those who have rejected Him. Blessedness is not for all the dead. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

But what is it to "die in the Lord"? This phrase, "in the Lord", is used all through the New Testament to describe believers. "I knew a man in Christ," Paul says. "There is therefore now no condemnation to them that are in Christ." "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature." We are in Christ when we believe on Him. We enter then into all the blessing of His redemption. His death is ours, and all its benefits are ours. His resurrection is ours; for us He rose. His ascension is ours; He is before God for us; He intercedes for us; His life is ours. We are in Christ in all His work as a Redeemer.

We are in Christ actually. He Himself calls us branches in the Vine. No less truly and actually does the life of the Vine flow through the believer's heart. If you are a Christian your love is Christ's love in you; your patience is the patience of Christ in you; your whole new life is Christ living in you.

Again, we are in Christ in the sense that all our interests are His. We carry our children in our heart, in our affections. They live in us so really that we suffer in their sufferings, and rejoice in their joys. In their trouble our bosom is their refuge. We are wounded in their sinning and bruised in their iniquities. So Christ carries all His people in His heart. There is not a pang in any one of them but He feels it. He is grieved by their sins. He is touched by the feeling of their infirmities. He who feeds one of Christ's little ones feeds Him, and he who withholds a cup of water from the least of His withholds it from Him—so truly is every Christian in Him.

To be in the Lord is therefore to be His follower, His believing one, His obedient servant. In other words, it is to be a Christian indeed. While you live you are in Christ, wrapped up in His love, in His grace, in His life; when you die you are still in Him, in His love, in His bosom. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." We must be in the Lord in this world, or we cannot die in the Lord.

The word "blessed" means happy. Those who die in the Lord are happy. They have no more tears, no more sorrows, no more sins. Theirs is not the fragmentary peace of this earth, but perfect peace. They are blessed immediately. That seems to be the meaning of the words, "from henceforth". Those who die in the Lord are blessed henceforth, at once, from the very moment they die. The soul does not sleep in unconsciousness after leaving the body. It does not lose its consciousness for a moment. It teaches us also that there are no purgatorial fires in which the soul lies for a time, suffering until its sins have been purged out. It is blessed from henceforth, from the very time it leaves the body. There are no dark waters to pass through, where for a time the soul struggles. One moment the eyes close on earth, the next moment they are open on heaven's glories and look into the face of Christ. Bidding farewell, with lingering pressure, now to the friends we leave behind, then an instant later welcomed by loved ones waiting on the other side, and by Christ.

More, the blessed dead rest from their labors. The word "labors" does not mean works, so much as the painful elements in life. It means the cares, the anxieties, the burdens, the things that oft times make work hard and life bitter. It represents whatever is painful, oppressive, wearisome, toilsome, sad, fruitless. Death brings an end of all such labors. Everything painful will be left behind in dying. How sweet death will be for those whose life here has been one long burden! There are many such. They have been great bodily sufferers. Or their condition has been one of wearisome toil, or the sins of others have made their days and nights full of dread, anxiety and endurance. Or they may have had many sorrows. Or their own infirmities have made their very existence an unending struggle. What blessed rest it will be to such to escape from all these labors! There will be no care, no pain, no sickness, no conflict, in that heavenly life. Rest! How sweet the word is!

A fourth element of the blessedness of those who die in the Lord is that "their works do follow them". There is a difference in the words "labors" and "works". "They rest from their labors"—from all that is painful, disappointing, burdensome. "Their works do follow them." The things they have done on the earth have not ceased to have influence. Every good word spoken in this world, every sweet song sung, every holy thought or impulse of blessing started, shall go on and on, until the end of all things. In this sense our works shall follow us. The things we do for Christ here, the inspirations we put in immortal lives, the lessons we teach, the influence of good we start shall not die with us. One plants a tree, and, long after he is dead, weary ones rest at noonday beneath its shade and pluck its fruits to feed their hunger. David has been dead nearly three thousand years, and yet his works are following him in all Christian lands, as his songs are sung, their influence breathing through millions of hearts. Paul has been dead many centuries, but his works are following him wherever his words are read. The humblest believer who lives and sets going even one gentle word or helpful impulse has started works which shall follow him until the end of time. Our life does not die out of this world when we leave it.

Another meaning of this statement is that the reward of their good works shall follow believers who die in the Lord. We have abundant assurance that nothing done for Christ in this world shall fail of reward. "Whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only, in the name of a disciple, verily, I say unto you he shall in no wise lose his reward." This is our Lord's own word. Thousands of humble saints have no recognition in this world. Their names find a place in no newspaper among those who have made themselves illustrious. No written biography chronicles their deeds of love and faithfulness. They receive no reward on this earth. Yet their lives are full of good and beautiful deeds wrought in the quiet, without thought of praise and reward. By and by they die, and then beside their coffin many eyes drop a tear and many lips speak their words of appreciation. But in the judgment all their good works will be remembered.—The late Dr. J. R. Miller, D. D., in Sunday School Times.

THE PATHWAY.

May Kidder Chase.

Glow through me, flow through me, Radiant Life!
Still me and thrill me, dissolving all strife!
Glow through me, flow through me, Spirit of Joy!
Fill me and thrill me, and sadness destroy.

Glow through me, flow through me, Spirit of Wealth!
Thrill me and fill me with radiant health!
Glow through me, flow through me, Spirit above!
Fill me and thrill me, enraptured, with Love!

Glow through me, flow through me, Spirit of God!
Thrill me and fill me! The pathway I trod
Caught me and brought me, Father, to Thee;
Take me and make me—and thus let it be.

Good Taste.

Katherine was nine. She had just arranged some flowers that one of her mother's guests had brought.

"Where shall I put them, Mother?" she asked.

"Anywhere you like, dear," her mother answered. "You have very good taste, and I feel sure that we shall enjoy them in the place that you select."

So Katherine stood for a minute studying the room and finally placed the blue vase of pink roses on a window sill where the combination contrasted pleasantly with the dull tan curtains.

Anne was also nine. She passionately hated the color purple and all of its "relations", protesting loudly whenever she was asked to wear a lavender gingham dress in her wardrobe.

"What can you know about it?" snapped the annoyed mother, fastening the child into the hated garment. "This is one of Smith and Gordon's nicest styles and I'm sure I think the dress is very pretty."

So Anne, half sobbing, gazed at her pale reflection in the mirror and vowed that never, never, never, if she ever had a little girl would she make her wear anything she disliked, no matter how pretty she herself thought it.

Children have individual preferences and individual tastes. Sometimes their taste is bad, and Mother by precept and example must lead them to see that pink socks really lose all their prettiness when worn with a red dress, and that ruffled, fancy clothes on small girls are a poor choice, excepting on special occasions, because, for one reason, they hamper the freedom of the wearer.

But the wise mother never forces her own personality on her children. Whenever she can, because she wishes them to grow up able to decide wisely, she lets them make decisions. Katherine, selecting a place for the flowers at nine, will at twelve or thirteen, appreciate harmony of color in furniture, hangings and all sorts of things. Her mother is helping her to develop good taste and what is more important still—confidence in her own judgment. Anne, forced to give up her own preferences for her mother's is likely later on to question her own decisions and to be dubious about every choice she is forced to make. It isn't only the lavender dress her mother would force upon her; she would have her accept also the depressing conviction that her opinions are so utterly worthless and unreliable that they must simply be ignored. Probably, this unwise mother will later bewail her child's lack of taste, never thinking that she herself is to blame, while the wise mother will have the double satisfaction and pleasure in her daughter's artistic ability.—Ruth L. Frankel, in National Kindergarten Association.

SYMBOL.

Eugenie du Maurier Meredith.

Three long days the world has been swathed
In a grey filmy web of fog:
Symbol of the three days Christ lay
In Arimathea's gardens:
Fogs are the travailing of earth
Suing for her sin God's pardon:
After her cleansing earth received,
The sun rose through the mist and the fog:
The whole world in amber was bathed:
Men went forth in gladness that third day
Though the mists of distrust thick did clog:
Then peace among men had a new birth:
God made the sky, and sea, and earth:
God made you, and me, and the fog:
Behold! The birth of light is nigh!
Men oftener cast their eyes to the blue
And beseech God's guidance in the work they do.

Attuned.

In tuning an instrument, the musician must set at least one string right and then adjust the others to it. If that one be wrong, all the others will be wrong. If it have not the pitch to make it agree with other instruments, it will be clear out of harmony. The instrument may do a little for itself, but it cannot take part in the concert. To make heavenly music, each of us must be attuned to Christ—one standard, and, to his life, one key. If out of harmony with Him we are out of harmony with one another.

If I have strength, I owe the service of the strong;
If melody I have, I owe the world a song;
If I can stand when all around my post are falling;
If I can run with speed when needy hearts are calling;
And, if my torch can light the dark of any night,
Then I must pay the debt I owe with living light.

If Heaven's gift has dowered me with some rare gift;
If I can lift some load no other's strength can lift:
If I can heal some wound no other's hand can heal;
If some great truth the speaking skies to me recall;
Then, I must go a broken and a wounded thing,
If to a wounded world my gifts no healing bring.

For any gift God gives to me I cannot pay;
Gifts are most mine when I most give them all away;
God's gifts are like His flowers which show their right to stay,
By giving all their bloom and fragrance away;
Riches are not gold, nor land, estates or marts—
The only wealth that is, is found in human hearts.

Big Brother.

Josephine S. Parker.

It was one of those rare days in Southern Ireland when the sun shone brightly, gilding the thatched roofs with gold and touching with splendor the vivid green of the grass.

But Michael O'Rooke thought not of the day. He sat spinning a top—a pretty red bauble striped red, white and blue, which his brother had sent him from America. It was strange how countries took to color. Ireland was all for the green, but the American flag was red, white and blue.

Wearily and weakly Michael pushed his top aside. He felt sick enough to die today, with strange quivers creeping up and down his spine and his lame leg gripping with pain. Yesterday, while his mother was in the village seeking work, he had gone to gather peat for the fire, when a dark shadow fell across his path. It was the burley red-faced landlord who had come to collect the rent.

"It's the likes of the O'Rooke's that puts the pizen in me blood, fer it's niver convayient yez are," the landlord had said, and he added, that unless the rent was paid in three days he would sell every thing on the place.

Poor Michael was too frightened to speak. He crumpled up like a leaf in a storm. Selling everything meant the loss of the white cow that gave them cream for their oats, which with rye bread was about all they had to eat. Only that morning the cow had looked at Michael with such friendliness in her eyes, that he felt sure she understood and was sorry.

Today Mary O'Rooke plied the shuttle back and forth on the bit of lace that must be done by the morrow and the tears fell upon her work. There were deep furrows in her cheeks, and it seemed to Michael that she had grown pitifully shrunken since he had told her of the landlord's visit.

"Oh, what shall we do?" Mary O'Rooke sighed again and again. The letter, which was to bring the money for the rent, had not come. Had William forgotten them? They wondered. William was Michael's big brother, who had gone to America, in the hope of making money. Many weeks had passed since they had heard from him.

"Don't yez be after worrintin', Mither. We have two days yit to pay the rent. And the fairies are back in Ireland, Jimmy Burke was tellin' me. Says he was sittin' on a log in the dirt, when he heard a noise like the wings of fairies, and he was after looking and there was a basket on the steps, just full to the brim of good things."

"Oh, if it were only true," thought Mary O'Rooke, who recalled the tales her grandmother told as she sat beside the hearth in the long evenings.

She could see even yet the brown face framed in her snowy cap and the pink sheen of her poplin gown, catching the rays from the burning peat, as she puffed away at her old clay pipe. What wonderful tales she told about the fairies. But the most wonderful of all was how they helped the poor folk.

The more Mary O'Rooke thought of these things, the more determined she was to know the truth. Were there fairies in Ireland now? She took her old plaid shawl from the peg and hurried across the field to Jimmy Burke's house.

Meanwhile Michael fell asleep and dreamed that he was straight of limb like Jimmie Burke and could skip and jump with his playmate.

He saw the fairy Queen winging her way from door to door on errands of mercy. She stopped to rest upon the flowering bush that swept the window ledge of his home. Then preening her wings with a graceful motion, she flew through the open door to Michael's room and lit upon the white deal table where she snapped the threads of Mary's loom, which broke into strange harp-like sounds.

After peeping into Mary's larder, the fairy Queen prepared to leave for her home in the woods. And then a strange thing happened. As she lifted her wings for her homeward flight, there fell in her wake a shower of gold, which swept the shadows from each corner and left a strange brilliance in the room at which even the kettle upon the hearth forgot to sputter and sang for joy.

Later when Michael awoke and his mother returned, they found real gold and a basket of goodies, but best of all a note from Big Brother. Then they knew that it was he, who had played Fairy to the poor folks.

The Shortest Way Home.

"Let's take a short cut home from school this afternoon," said Dave to his younger brother, Joe. "It's most a mile and a half around by the road and takes us half an hour, but I'm sure we could get there in fifteen minutes if we went straight across the lots."

"All right, let's," said Joe. "Are you sure mother won't care?"

"I asked her this morning," replied Dave, "and she told me she didn't think it was a very good plan, but we could try it if we wanted to. And then she said that sometimes the longest way around was the shortest way home. I don't see what she meant by that. The longest way couldn't be the shortest."

"Maybe when mother sees how much sooner we get home this way she'll think it's a good plan, after all," said Joe.

They left the road and crossed the fields in the direction of their home. It was easy walking at first, across a smooth meadow, then over a plowed field. It was April, but spring was late and the ground still frozen.

Over the fence from the field was a stretch of woods. The underbrush was thick, and the boys were forced to go slowly.

"Ouch!" exclaimed Dave, as a climbing green brier scraped across his face. "I'll be glad when we get out of here."

"So will I," said Joe. "My legs are scratched most to pieces, and I've torn a big hole in one stocking."

The woods soon thinned out into a scattered growth of trees, but here the boys found themselves in new trouble. The ground had been sloping down for some time and now might fairly be called a swamp. Here for the first time the boys found ground that was not frozen. Pick their way as carefully as they could, still they made a misstep now and then. In a few minutes both had feet that were wet and muddy to the shoe tops.

"How're we going to get across here, I'd like to know?" demanded Joe. "It's too wide to jump."

"If it were warm weather, we could wade; it isn't deep," said Dave. "But I don't want to get my feet any wetter. They're most frozen now. We'll go along the bank a ways, and maybe we'll find a log we can cross on."

"Wonder what time it is?" said Joe. "Seems to me our short cut isn't so very short. I'm getting tired. We'd have been home long ago if we'd gone around by the road."

"You're right, Joe," agreed his brother. "I begin to understand now what mother meant about the longest way around being the shortest. But cheer up, I see an old tree trunk across the stream ahead, and I guess we can get over on that."

The tree trunk proved to be rather small and did not look very strong, but Joe managed to get safely across. Not so with Dave, however. Though only a year older, he was much heavier than his brother. He was halfway across the stream when there came a sharp crack, and the next instant Dave found himself up to his knees in ice water. It was only a few steps to shore, and he soon scrambled out; but in his excitement he dropped the spelling book and arithmetic which he had been carrying. Before he could get them out they were soaked through and through.

"Well!" exclaimed Dave, putting the dripping books into his lunch box. "Let's hurry up and get home before anything else happens."

They hurried through a short stretch of woods and came out on the edge of a large cleared field.

"Oh, I know where we are now!" cried Dave. "That yellow barn is Mr. Ryder's. The road is just beyond it. But, say," he continued, "I guess we haven't come very straight. We're 'most half a mile past our house."

"Oh, dear!" sighed Joe. "I thought we were 'most home. Well, come on."

They were hardly ten yards from the fence, however, when Dave stopped short; then, seizing his brother by the arm, he whirled him about. "Run!" he shouted. "Run! Back over the fence! Quick!"

The boys threw themselves over the fence with not a second to spare. Mr. Ryder's big white bulldog was scarcely a yard behind.

"I forgot all about him," panted Dave. "He won't let anybody go across the Ryder farm. We've got to go around."

And go around it they did, over sticks, stones, and briers. They were both tired now, and they stumbled and fell often; but at length two cold, wet, scratched boys tumbled over the last fence and into the road.

"Most home now," said Dave, "and I guess we won't try that short cut again very soon."

"I know I won't," said Joe. "And maybe next time you'll believe mother knows best, even though you don't understand."

"I certainly will," agreed Dave.—Sunday School Times.

A ROBIN'S CALL.

Maude Mumma.

What is so sweet as a robin's call,
When first in the spring it is heard;
It thrills our hearts and one and all say,
"That was the song of a bird!"

Far out on a branch at the top of a tree,
He calls to his mate, so gay;
Who is hopping around on bush and ground,
Happy as she can be.

For, are they not home from a journey long,
From fairer lands, maybe;
But they could not sing a happier song
Than they sing in our maple tree!

Getting Along Nicely!

Beatrice M. Parker.

"I think you are getting along nicely," said Aunt Emma with a smile. "Well, we were," replied Beth, "but now we haven't anything at all to do and it is raining so we cannot go outdoors to play."

"We might get along nicely," said Bob with a laugh, "if we were ducks and could shed water from our backs and swim!"

"Speaking of getting along nicely," and Aunt Emma laid down her sewing as the children came up to her chair, "I wonder what other ways we may find of getting along nicely in this world. See if you can tell!"

The children were thinking. Then Ruth said, "Well, we all of us walk here in our family except when we go out in the auto, but autos are not fair, are they?"

"No," replied Aunt Emma with a laugh, and a shake of her head. "I mean natural ways of getting along. Yes, we walk and ducks swim and birds fly, but how many more ways are there, can you think?"

"About a dozen, I guess," said Charley, "but I'm not sure I can think of them all. A worm crawls and a frog jumps—that makes five."

"Not all worms crawl," exclaimed Ruth, "for don't you remember the one that got on Beth while we were picking blueberries one day?"

"Huh!" and Beth made up a little face as she thought of the inchworm that Aunt Emma had to take off her coat. "Such things ought not to get along nicely at all in this world; they are too scary for me!"

"That is surely another way of getting along." And Aunt Emma laughed. "Sometimes we call them measuring worms, for they measure off just so far at each advance as they move along."

"Jelly-fish!" exclaimed Bob. "I remember the one that stung me a year ago down at the beach. That is another way of getting along, isn't it?"

"Yes, the jelly-fish sort of 'swimswiggly'," said Ruth, and they all laughed at this new term. "But it gets there, and if any one gets in its way it stings good and hard!"

"Are there any other sea creatures that get along nicely in their own peculiar way?" asked Aunt Emma. "Now think hard. I have in mind a poem that was written by a famous poet."

"The chambered nautilus!" Beth's reply was quickly given. "That shell-fish has a sail and gets along very nicely indeed, so the books say."

"Good, and that makes seven so far." Charles was anxious to get the dozen he guessed might be found. "How about combinations like the flying squirrel that jump, walk, run and fly?"

"Yes," and Aunt Emma nodded her head. "I don't know that it is actually flying, but that is another way of getting along and can be counted. Can you think of any more combinations?"

"Some spiders make balloons and fly away with the wind," suggested Ruth, "but perhaps that might not be any more fair than using an auto."

"Surely it is," Bob replied generously. "Man has tools to make things like autos and planes, but the spider has to make a balloon from her own web. We'll count it, anyway. That makes nine. Who has the tenth?"

"Clams and oysters!" came Charley's quick response. "They move their shells back and forth and shoot themselves along through the water."

"Are you sure they are both alike in their movements?" asked Aunt Emma. "For you know if they are not, we want to be able to count two instead of one."

Charley supposed they both moved the same way, but when he looked it up in one of Aunt Emma's books, he found that there are some clams which move by stretching out their long arms, attaching the ends to a rock, and pulling themselves along; so the count was two more, making eleven in all.

"Only one more and we shall have a dozen!" Charley exclaimed as he read what he had found.

The twelfth was the monkey that uses his tail in swinging from place to place, and just after Ruth had suggested this animal, Ruth spoke of the parrots that catch hold of things with their beaks; so they had a "baker's dozen", or thirteen.

If anybody thought that thirteen was an unlucky number, the thought did not have to be expressed. For immediately Aunt Emma named snails and bats and flying fish, which brought the total to sixteen.

They did wish to get it up to twenty if they could, and how they did work and think! Seventeen came when Charley happened to see a book called "An Old Barnacle"—and of course the barnacle, with his attachment to the bottoms of ships was added. This made Ruth think of the remora, a fish that attaches itself to the shell of a turtle and goes along from place to place without needing to swim—so there were only two more to think of.

At last the crab came into mind—the shell-fish which does not go ahead or backward, but sidewise, and gets there so nicely that it takes a lot of skill to catch him in deep water. So only one more remained to find, and when Aunt Emma's fur-trimmed hat, which she had out to see that no moths had got into the box, caught Beth's eye, she exclaimed, "The seals! They both swim and flap along, in water and on land!"

"Yes, that is twenty, and plenty!" exclaimed Aunt Emma. "And now I think we have been able to get along very nicely indeed. For it is after five o'clock and I must get supper ready for some hungry little people!"—Beatrice Parker, in Richmond Christian Advocate.

Keep At It.

The girls were resting under the trees after a hearty picnic lunch. The conversation had gradually drifted to school affairs.

"Goodness me!" said Marie, emphatically, "when you begin to talk about arithmetic you might as well count me out of it—I'm going to take a nap."

"Now, Marie, don't give up so easily," remonstrated Ella. "We all know arithmetic is a hard subject for you, but we'll help you what we can this summer if you're willing to keep hammering at it till you conquer it."

"That reminds me of something my brother told us about the other day," remarked Ruth. "He's just returned from a trip to Washington, where he visited a great big steel factory, and he was telling us about a huge bar of steel, weighing some twenty tons, that was suspended from the ceiling. It was almost beyond human power to move this immense bar, yet it was necessary to set it in motion, and I just guess none of you girls can imagine how it was done."

"Oh, we give it up," said Thelma. "We've eaten too much to think. Tell us."

"Very well, then. There was a small cork attached to a piece of common string, that was allowed to swing from the ceiling in such a way that it struck the end of the huge mass of a seemingly immovable steel."

"Oh, go on, Ruth, don't try to tell us that little cork, weighing less than an ounce could possibly move that steel bar weighing twenty tons."

"But it actually did," protested Ruth. "Not at first, you understand, but the repeated striking of that cork against the bar gradually set the particles of which it was composed to vibrating and soon the whole mass of steel began to swing to and fro."

"She's right," assented Elaine, one of the older girls. "We had an illustration in Physics Class last year something like that—besides we've all heard how a drop of water falling constantly on stone will in time wear the stone away."

"It simply shows the power of little things over big," replied Ruth. "And what we want to help Marie to understand is that, if she'll keep everlastingly hammering at her problems—perhaps spending only a few little extra minutes a day at it, in time she is bound to move it out of her way and conquer it."

"Believe I'll take your suggestion," answered Marie, hopefully. "For if a little cork can do such wonders, surely poor me, with the brains and abilities that have been given me, can do even more!"—The Presbyterian Banner.

Love is a great beautifier—not necessarily romantic love, but the pure love, unselfish love, the Christ love, for one's fellow men. Such love blots out expressions of harshness, criticism, hatred; writing on the face instead the gentle beauty of soul, which transforms ugliness into light and softness.—Exchange.

"That this may be a sign among you, that when your children ask their fathers in time to come, saying,

JUST as Joshua commanded the twelve men, one from each tribe of Israel, to take from the bed of the river Jordan, where the feet of the Priests stood firm, each man a stone and with these stones build a monument to commemorate the passing over Jordan—So, as our loved ones pass from our immediate presence over Jordan, should we select the most perfect, the most beautiful and the most lasting stone for the monuments we erect to commemorate their beautiful virtues and accomplishments.

Specify WINNSBORO GRANITE

"The Silk of the Trade"

Its flawless beauty, stalwart strength, and great durability, combined with its adaptability to design make it the ideal monumental stone with which to perpetuate the memory of life's greatest virtues.

Be sure that "Winnsboro Granite" is specified in your contract for monuments. Like other high quality materials, there are many inferior substitutes, which resemble this granite on first appearance, but do not possess its lasting qualities and permanent beauty, because they contain more deleterious elements, such as water, lime and iron. These elements tend to disintegration and discoloration.

Have your monument dealer furnish you with a personal guarantee from the quarries that the monument you purchase is cut in genuine Winnsboro Granite.

The certificate of the quarries is signed by B. H. Heyward, Treas., and General Manager, whose signature insures genuine Winnsboro Granite. A facsimile of this signature is reproduced below.

Deaths

.. .. MRS. SAMUEL W. ZIMMER.

At her home, in Petersburg, after more than a year of ill health, MRS. SAMUEL W. ZIMMER entered into rest.

A mother of rare devotion, brilliant and beautiful, often impelled to acts of loving kindness by noble impulses, battling against sickness and pain, she fought a good fight.

Mrs. Zimmer is survived by her husband, Samuel Watts Zimmer, two children, Polly and William and her mother, Mrs. Mary Blair Pryor Walker, and her brother and sister.

The funeral service was conducted by the Rev. Edwin R. Carter, D. D., rector of Christ Church, Petersburg, of which Mr. Zimmer was a member, and Rev. J. M. B. Gill, rector of St. Paul's.

The body was tenderly laid to rest in Blandford Church yard.

Now the laborious task is over,
Now the battle day is past,
Now upon the farther shore
Lands the voyager at last.

"Father, in Thy gracious keeping,
Leave we now Thy servant sleeping."

CHARLES McILVAINE MILLER.

CHARLES McILVAINE MILLER, formerly of Swanton, Maryland, died at his home in Keyser, West Virginia, June 4, 1928, in the eighty-third year of his age.

He is survived by five daughters, Miss Jennie L. Miller, of Berkeley Springs, W. Va., Mrs. Henry B. Potter, Mrs. J. P. Jones, and Mrs. Myron G. Tucker, of Rhode Island, and Mrs. William J. Kuykendall, of Keyser, W. Va.

He was born December 31, 1845, in Goochland county, Virginia, the son of Narcissus W. and Kitty E. Miller.

One of a family of ten children and reared in an atmosphere of culture, in a home noted for its hospitality, Mr. Miller's early boyhood was indeed a most fortunate one.

But, as he expressed it, his maturing period was cast in a most unhappy time, "the outbreak of the War Between the States", when the prayers for peace must be lost in the shouts for war.

Every able bodied man must then rise in defense of great armies invading the Virginia soil. In the fall of 1863, his eighteenth year, the boy, Charles M. Miller, with his father's consent, joined the second company of Richmond Howitzers, First Regiment of Virginia Artillery, and Second Corps of the Army of Northern Virginia, sharing the history of the famous Stonewall Jackson Corps until the sun of the Confederacy went down.

He was one of only forty-four left in his company that surrendered the morning of April 9, 1865, at Appomattox.

On the battefied of the Widerness he received the rite of baptism from a rusty tin cup, administered by the Rev. Mr. Page, of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and shortly after the war he renewed the vows made by him in baptism when he was confirmed in the Goochland County Court House by the late Bishop Johns.

After the close of the war, while aiding in every way possible to him the reconstruction of his father's wrecked plantation, he managed to obtain nearly two years of study in the academy of Dr. Charles Morris, in Hanover County, Virginian, engaging afterwards in several positions of trust, including manager of a large cotton farm, in Houston County, Georgia. In 1873 Mr. Miller came to Swanton, Garrett County, Maryland, accepting a position offered by eGneral Joseph R. Anderson, of Richmond, as agent of his tract of fifty thousand acres of land in that county.

In 1875 he was married to Miss Elizabeth Lansdale., of Baltimore, Maryland, and they resided in Swanton until moving to Keyser in November, 1911, Mrs. Miller's death occurring November 27, 1920.

In 1873 Mr. Miller became a charter m-mber of the vestry of St. Matthew's Parish, Oakland, Md., remaining a loyal and active worker in that office as long as his residence was in that Parish. He was instrumental in the building of Anderson Chapel, in Swanton, completed in 1882, and there he and Mrs. Miller kept a Sunday school for thirty years and one which has brought many of its pupils to the Bishop for confirmation.

Besides being a Sunday School worker he was lay reader in his Parish and so frequently were they without a Rector at hand that in the course of years he had read the burial service quite as frequently as the average rector in a small parish.

Wherever he saw an opportunity to lend a helping hand in matters temporal or spiritual he was always ready to give that which was needed, even though it might be only a "glad 'Good morning' as he passed along his way".

What more could his children desire than the heritage of the memory of such a life?

cause of its interest in the revival of yachting on the Bay. Consequently, the whole resort has prospered. Most of the permanent summer residents are Episcopalians and certain devoted ones started religious services very early in the history of the settlement. Two years ago a little thatched roof chapel was built, directly on the Bay, called St. Christopher's-by-the-Sea, and resembling in appearance a South Sea habitation. Here services have been held during the summer through the offices of Baltimore clergy and, this summer, by the cooperation of a committee of residents and the Gibson Island Club, plans have been made for a complete schedule of services. The experiment is unique among Chesapeake Bay resorts and is a tribute to the love of the Church by the summer residents.

Healing Services.

For some years Baltimore has had weekly healing services at one of its great down-town churches, Grace and St. Peter's. Also the city has been stirred in the past by the visit of the Hickson Mission. It was therefore appropriate that the Church of the Ascension, the Rev. Robert E. Browning, rector, should recently hold a Mission of Health and Healing. This Mission was under the direction of the Rev. Robert B. H. Bell.

Chinese Choir.

Grace and St. Peter's Church, the Rev. H. P. Almon Abbott, rector, has what is thought to be the only vested Chinese choir in the country. The age of the singers, who are of both sexes, ranges from five to twenty-five. Dressed in vestments of scarlet and white with big scarlet bow ties, the choir of twenty-eight voices lustily sings English Church hymns and chants every Sunday afternoon.

Consecration of Grace Church, Brunswick.

Grace Church, Brunswick, Md., of St. Mark's Parish, the Rev. Edward E. Burgess, rector, was consecrated May 21 by the Rt. Rev. Edward T. Helfenstein, Bishop-Coadjutor, who preached the sermon. The church, opened in 1923, is of Gothic architecture. It is of native stone construction, and with furnishings, cost about $50,000.

St. Paul's Boys' School, Baltimore.

The commencement of St. Paul's Boys' School, Baltimore, came off on the afternoon of June 12 in the new building, which was completely filled. Dr. Wardlaw Miles made the address. The Rev. S. Janney Hutton, Headmaster, announced the graduates and presented the prizes. The graduates were L. P. Temple, R. H. Pembroke, Jr., Clyde B. James, Humphrey W. Garden, Louis M. Wheary, all of whom go to college or the Naval Academy. Temple won the Fellowship, English and Athletic prizes; Pembroke the Alumni Scholarship prize: Wheary that for Progress. L. C. Hastings was awarded the Choir medal, the Mathematics prize and the Tennis cup.

This is a school of sixty boys, with five masters, all college-trained men. High praise was given by the rector, Dr. Kinsolving, to Mr. Hutton, to Miss Sallie H. Barron and Mrs. Noel M. Bush, the two ladies who look after the comfort of the boys so wonderfully, and to the spirit of the School. During the summer a building on the premises is to be converted into a small gymnasium for use in inclement weather.

LOUISIANA.

Rt. Rev. Davis Sessums, D. D., Bishop.

Thirty-seventh Anniversary.

Members of the clergy and laity of the city of New Orleans joined with the Rt. Rev. Davis Sessums in the celebration of the Holy Communion on June 22, the Cathedral, St. Charles Avenue at Sixth Street, New Orleans, in commemoration of the Bishop's thirty-seventh anniversary as Bishop of the Diocese of Louisiana. After the service, the Rev. R. S. Coupland, D. D., President of the Standing Committee, speaking for the Reverend Clergy of the Diocese of Louisiana; and Mr. R. P. Mead, President of the Church Club of Louisiana, speaking for the laity of the diocese, made brief addresses of congratulation, pledging to the Bishop the loyalty and continued cooperation of both clergy and laity. Being escorted to the front of the Cathedral by the Secretary of the Church Club of Louisiana, Dr. Warren Kearney, the Bishop was presented with a Buick Sedan. The Bishop responded in words of appreciation for the gift and the thought that prompted such generosity as well as for the loyal cooperation of both clergy and laity in the work of the Church.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Oscar DeWolf Randolph, rector of St. Mary's-on-the-Highlands, Birmingham, Ala., has accepted a call to become rector of Virginia Episcopal School at Lynchburg, Va., effective September 1, 1928. ### ORDINATIONS.

Sunday, June 17, in Church of the Holy Spirit, Gambier, Ohio, the Rt. Rev. William Andrew Leonard, D. D., LL. D., Bishop of Ohio, ordained to the diaconate, Maxfield Dowell, Herbert Ralph Higgins, Ernest Risley, George Stanley West, Oran Clyde Zaebst and H. L. Woodward. The candidates were presented by the Rev. Jacob Streibert, D. D., Ph. D. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Kirk B. O'Farrall, rector of Emmanuel Church, Cleveland. Ohio.

On June 25, 1928, the Rt. Rev. Clinton S. Quin ordained to the diaconate Charles Summers, Thomas Summers and Lawrence L. Brown in All Saints' Chapel, Austin, Texas. The candidates were presented by the Rev. Harry Masterson, rector of All Saints, who also preached the sermon. The Rev. Everett H. Jones read the Litany.

Charles Summers was assigned work in St. Stephen's Parish, Houston, Texas; Thomas Summers will have charge of the missions near Texas City. The three deacons are graduates of the Theological Seminary in Virginia.

On St. Barnabas' Day, June 11, 1928, the Bishop of Minnesota ordained to the diaconate Mr. John Eliphalet Rowell in St. Mark's Church, Minneapolis. The Rev. Dr. Phillips E. Osgood presented the candidate, and the Rev. William C. Bimson preached the sermon.

Mr. Rowell comes to the church from business life, but since last fall has been lay missionary-in-charge, under the Archdeacon, of Gethsemane Church, Appleton, and Grace Church, Montevideo, with residence at Appleton. He will continue as minister-in-charge of the same field, spending a part of each week at Seabury Divinity School studying in preparation for advancement to the priesthood.

At the Trinity ordinations last Sunday, six deacons and three priests were ordained. One of the deacons, Mr. A. Grant Noble, was ordained here for the Bishop of Central New York; but the other eight men all belong to this diocese, as do two others ordained deacon about a month ago.

Of the priests ordained last Sunday, the Rev. Charles Lawson Willard, Jr., will continue as assistant to the Rev. E. M. McGuffey at St. James' Church, Elmhurst; the Rev. Philip DuMont Davis is in charge of St. Luke's, Forest Hills; and the Rev. E. Warren Cromey continues in charge of St. Lydia's, Brooklyn. Of the deacons just ordained, the Rev. David Thomas Atwater will assist his father at Grace Church, Brooklyn Heights; the Rev. Roy Lawrence Webber will be assistant to the Rev. Arthur R. Cummings at the Church of the Resurrection, Richmond Hill; the Rev. George Robert Lewis is in charge of Christ Church Mission, Stewart Manor; the Rev. Rexford C. S. Holmes will continue his studies, taking graduate courses next year; and the Rev. Parker C. Webb will be associated for July and August with the Rev. J. Clarence Jones, S. T. D., at St. Mary's, Brooklyn.

On June 12, 1928, the Rt. Rev. A. C. Thomson, D. D., advanced to the Priesthood the Rev. David C. George, deacon, in St. James' Church, Boydton, Va. The sermon was preached by the Rev. H. N. Tucker, rector of St. Paul's, Suffolk, Va., and the candidate was presented by the Rev. E. R. Carter, D. D., rector of Christ Church, Petersburg. Others who assisted in the laying on of hands were the Rev. F. A. Sapp and the Rev. Wm. R. Moody. The Rev. Mr. George will continue as rector of the following churches in Mecklenburg County: St. James, Boydton; St. John's, Chase City; St. Timothy, Clarksville, and Christ Mission.

On June 2, at 11 o'clock, in the Pro-Cathedral Church of the Nativity, Bethlehem, Pa., two cousins were ordained by the Rt. Rev. Frank W. Sterrett, D. D., the Bishop of the Diocese. The Rev. Clark Richard Trumbore was advanced to the Priesthood and Mr. Fred W. Trumbore was made a Deacon. Both of these young men are Bethlehem boys and were brought up in Nativity Church.

The Litany was read by the Rev. Steward F. Custard, rector of Grace Church, Allentown. The Rev. Arthur T. Reasoner, Warden of Leonard Hall, preached the sermon, for it was at Leonard Hall these boys made their academic preparations. The candidates were presented by the Very Rev. D. Wilmot Gateson. The Rev. Gordon T. Jones, a school friend of the Trumbores, read the Epistle. Mr. Clark Trumbore read the Holy Gospel and the Rev. John W. Schmalstieg, curate of the Pro-Cathedral, served.

Both boys are graduates of Liberty High School in Bethlehem, Lehigh University, and the Philadelphia Divinity School. Mr. Clark R. Trumbore is curate of Christ Church, Fitchburg, Mass. The Rev. Fred W. Trumbore has been appointed by the Bishop to take charge of the missions of St. James', Canton, and St. Paul's, Troy, in this diocese.

DEATHS.

The Synod of the Diocese of Kiangsu was saddened by the sudden death of the Rev. C. K. Wei, deacon-in-charge of the mission at Quinsan. At the morning session of the Synod Mr. Wei spoke at some length upon the troubles of the Church at Quinsan, where the chapel has been seven times occupied by soldiers. Just before he was to sit down with the other delegates to the noon meal after adjournment he was stricken with apoplexy and died on May 25 in St. Luke's Hospital. He was sixty-three years old and as Bishop Graves says, "What a faithful minister."

The Rev. George S. Grange, rector of St. Stephen's Church, Brooklyn, died Friday, June 22, after an illness of only a few days. He officiated in his church the previous Sunday, though he was not well. His funeral was held in his church on Sunday afternoon, June 24, the Rev. Robert Rogers, Ph. D., the Rev. Charles G. Clark, the Rev. F. M. Townley, D. D., the Rev. Herbert J. Glover, and the Rev. Edgar E. Brice officiating. A large number of the clergy were present.

The Rev. Mr. Grange came to Brooklyn from Jamaica, B. W. I., and become rector of St. Stephen's in March, 1824. He leaves a wife and ten children.

BY THIS BANNER

"The theology of glory which prides itself upon being its own highest authority, bewitches even those who had seemed proof against its enchantments0 and the theology of the Cross, which holds Divine folly to be wiser than men, is regarded as an unscientific lagging behind the steps of progress. . . . But the faith which I professed in my first sermons, . . . remains mine today, undiminished in strength, and immeasurably higher than all earthly knowledge. Even if in many Biblical questions I have to oppose the traditional opinion, certainly my opposition rests on this side of the gulf, on the side of the theology of the Cross, of grace, of miracles! . . . By this banner let us stand; folding ourselfes in it, let us die!"—Professor Delitzsch.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

Time lost in mending nets is saved in catching fish.—Exchange.

Enduring faith is anchored not in the shallows of personal merit, but in the deep waters of divine grace.—Selected.

Begin your web, and God will supply the thread.—Italian Proverb.

Let one unceasing, earnest prayer
Be, too, for light—for strength to bear
Our portion of the weight of care
That crushes into dumb despair
One-half the human race.
—Longfellow.

When the first star glitters in the twilight we may begin the grateful testimony, and when all the host burns in silent glory we may challenge every planet to share with the holy duty of praising God.—Joseph Parker.

The only proof of a living faith that you and I can give is to love mankind as Christ loved it, that souls might be won for His kingdom.

This thing too hard for thee,
This passive need of thine,
Is just the channel I require
To show my grace divine.
—Ruth Thomas.

"We all have to be our own center, but we are not obliged to be our own circumference."—Dean Inge.

To pray with the heart and the understanding, to believe that God hears prayer and yet wisely doeth what pleaseth Him, this surely is the highest exercise of the faculties of the human spirit.—Coleridge.

A living, loving Christian—true of tongue, honest of heart, pure of conduct and yet lovable in daily life, is the unanswerable argument for Christianity.—T. L. Cuyler.

A man who does his daily work as unto the Lord will never be guilty of inefficiency nor be regulated by the amount of the pay envelope.

EDITORIALS

Vol. 93. RICHMOND, VA., JULY 14, 1928. No. 28.

HIRELINGS

"The hireling fleeth because he is an hireling, and careth not for the sheep." Most of us who have employed people, in small matters or large, have had doleful experiences with the mere hirelings, of the type the Saviour describes in the parable of the faithful and the faithless shepherds. From those experiences we recall answers to our requests, or remonstrances, in varying degrees of good or bad grammar and pronunciation, insolence or suavity, like we may imagine was the argument of the shepherd who fled from the sheep, deserting them when they needed his protection—"I'm not hired—I'm not paid—to fight wolves."

The Saviour had compassion far above our comprehension for all human weaknesses. It is hard for us to understand how He, coming down from heaven to suffer fearfully and die for mankind, could forbear bitter contempt for the cowardly and selfish intent only on getting the most possible for doing the least, avoiding with jealous care rendering the slightest service, whatever the emergency, beyond the exact terms of the bargain. Solomon, accustomed to frank expression of his opinions and observations, said the sluggish and unfaithful employee was as vinegar to the teeth and smoke in the eyes. We of the present may recognize that as graphic and exact. The irritation of being confronted with assertion of the technical, legal, right of the hireling as we ask some small favor or concession makes us realize Solomon's emotions, inclines us to sympathize with the hard master in the parable of the talents. By him the servant so afraid of responsibility that he did nothing was cast into outer darkness.

Yet, in the relations of us human creatures with each other the fault of trouble, discord and disloyalty is usually on both sides. If all employers always had been just, considerate and kindly the labor unions would not have been necessary and their sometimes vexatious and arrogant demands, developed by consciousness of power or memory of old wrongs, long endured, would be impossible. Men and women naturally good natured and inclined to generous loyalty and zeal, are made by impositions or by cold denial of recognition of their good service hirelings, grudging or refusing the slightest concession, shunning a minute or a step beyond the stipulated time or task as a degrading act of servitude. They are chilled or bruised to resentment, become most ready of all with the exasperating "I am not hired to do that—not paid to do that" —good and faithful helpers spoiled by mistreatment, transformed and distorted to hirelings.

Each of us, from highest to humblest, humblest to highest, is charged with the duty of doing, while we are here, something toward bringing that good time, promised and surely coming, as Burns sings it:

> "For a' that an' a' that
> It's comin' yet for a' that,
> That man to man the world o'er
> Shall brithers be for a' that."

Therefore it behooves each of us to study honestly and fearlessly our own lives and words and acts to know how much or little we are doing to diminish or increase the number of mere hirelings in the world, to make of ourselves hirelings or loyal, brave and faithful servants and shepherds. The head of a great corporation may be a mean spirited hireling, cowardly and worthless as the runaway shepherd of the parable, if he be intent only on making a good showing to stockholders and holding his own job, regardless of obligations to the public and the rights, interests, feelings of employees. The lowliest of these employees may be just a hireling or a real man and a real force by disregard of or respect for the welfare of the employer and his fellow employees and earnest desire to serve, to do his best on the job, sometimes a little more than he is paid to do. So it is through all stations of life, all our relations with each other. No matter who we are or what we are, if we do no more for God or man than we expect to be paid for we are abject hirelings, false to that great duty of doing our little parts toward the reign of righteous and peace and brotherhood.

There may be hirelings even in pulpits, men who enter the ministry as a means of living or for social position, without real purposes or principles, ready to join with wolves of infidelity or heresy or to flee before wolves of difficulty or hardship or disappointment. Thanks be to Heaven, they are few, becoming fewer. A hundred and fifty years ago Hogarth painted a picture, funny on its face, tragic in its meaning, of a parson peering through his glasses, perfunctorily earning his salary by droning a perfunctorily written sermon to a congregation fast asleep. It is one of many encouraging signs of the time that this type of hireling preacher is disappearing, or has disappeared. Probably some who enlist as hirelings are made valiant soldiers and faithful shepherds by contact with the spiritual beauty, the spiritual cravings and needs, the fire and light in souls, the clegyman finds among his brethren and in his flock. It is among the laity of all churches and denominations that the hireling pretending duty to God and man—the two inextricably interwoven so that neither can be separately neglected or performed—are many. People calling themselves Christians, attached to parishes and congregations by membership or occasional attendance or family tradition or connection, undertake to make for themselves mean and shifty bargains with the Almighty, giving the least possible service for expected eternal happiness and temporal blessings. These flee from self-denials as from wolves. What they give is given grudgingly and of necessity. Confronted with call for sacrifice of pleasure or inclination, their attitude is that of the insolent, defiant, craven hireling—"I'm not paid for that—not hired for that!" They shirk all responsibility for the Master's sheep, flee to amusement or business or idling, do exactly the shameful part of the hireling who deserted because he was an hireling and had abandoned all ambition and intent to be anything else. Such members, indeed, are as vinegar to the teeth and smoke to the eyes of the diligent and earnest pastor sorely needing help in caring for his flock, finding sluggards where he hoped for energetic cooperation, runaways when besetting perils bid him seek staunch comrades.

It may not be a question of temporal prosperity and advancement on one side or failure on the other. It may not be a question of Heaven or Hell for the future. Of that we may not know and God is very merciful. It is a question of manhood and womanhood, of courage or cowardice, of generous loyalty or mean, small, narrow selfishness, whether we shall be faithful, zealous, doing our duties to the God who made us and keeps us, the Saviour who died for us and our brother man; or mere base hirelings, giving the least service our own conceptions of decency and the law will permit.

A REVIEW OF A REVIEW OF THE REAL LINCOLN

By Paul S. Whitcomb

The article below is a review of a review of The Real Lincoln, by C. L. C. Minor, that appeared in the Book Section of the Boston Evening Transcript, April 28, 1928.

Mr. Whitcomb's treatment of the subject is unusually clear and forceful and is well worth a reading.

Gladstone, Ore., June 6, 1928.

The Boston Transcript, Boston, Mass.

To the Editor:

My Dear Sir.—My attention has been called to a book review which recently appeared in your columns—the book being entitled "The Real Lincoln" and the reviewer thereof signing himself F. B.

The bigoted, unopen minded temper of the reviewer impels me to address a review of the review to the reviewer, inasmuch as the review in question touched upon an article of mine on "Lincoln and Democracy" carried in the appendix of the book.

My first impulse was to ignore the review as unworthy of consideration, as it is not in the least way a critical or constructive review of the book or of my article, but is, on the contrary, the product of a mind dominated by the bigotry of a pseudo-patriotism. Consideration of the prestige and repute to the "Transcript" has, however, induced me to address this letter to those responsible for the review and its publication.

I am keenly aware of the fact that there is only one side to the question at issue in the War Between the States and that is the Union side. The vilest of criminals has the right to present his case, but the secessionist has none. The closed-mind attitude of the average Northerner is well illustrated by some remarks anent Lincoln made several years ago by Dr. Marion Le Roy Burton, late President of Michigan University: "The questions which he considered in his day we need have no hesitation in concluding were finally and definitely settled. There is no difference of opinion, no argument about them now. The conclusions which he drew have since been the settled policy of the country."

I was brought up on that idea—that Lincoln was infallible and that whatever he asserted was to be accepted as final authority without even a sub-conscious mental question mark. Just how people know that Lincoln was an infallible thinker I am unaware, unless it be that those who so consider him have arrived at that conclusion after an examination of his arguments and philosophy or have taken their opinions second-hand from those who have so done. His most ardent admirer has not pretended that Lincoln carried parchment credentials from the Almighty certifying as to his infallible wisdom.

Consequently I believe I am justified in assuming that those who consider Lincoln as infallible and that his judgment upon the question of secession eternally settled the matter beyond the slightest hesitation must have arrived at their conclusion either by the exercise of their judgment and perhaps of their critical faculties or else by accepting the judgment of others.

Either that or else we are to assume that the result of the conflict itself determined the question. This is nothing more than the barbaric mediaeval doctrine of trial by combat—a principle supposed to be utterly alien to civilized society. Force as the arbiter of justice contradicts the fundamental philosophy of our system of jurisprudence.

In any event, Lincoln's reputation is not based upon any supernatural credentials, but upon the more or less critical and infallible judgment of his fellows. But that right, of judgment is not a thing of past. We of today possess the same right to pass judgment upon Lincoln as have those of the past, and as we today know more of the man than did his contemporaries, we are at least as fully qualified to pass judgment upon him.

My critical examination of Lincoln's arguments was induced by the controversy waged, immediately subsequent to the late war, between Lloyd George and the Irish leader, De Valera, in which the Irishman quoted the principles of the Declaration of Independence in favor of Irish freedom and the Englishman quoted Lincoln in rebuttal. Any one could see that the arguments of Lincoln were opposed to the pristine principles of America—those principles for which the Revolutionary War was fought. In fact, if they were not, then there was no point to Lloyd George's argument.

The reviewer accuses me of "glibly refuting . . . Lincoln", or rather "the estimates" of Lincoln. As a matter of fact, I made practically no attempt to refute the estimates of Lincoln, the article being mainly devoted to an analysis and a refutation of Lincoln's logic.

Webster's New International defines "glibly" as being synonymous with fluent, voluble, flippant. As the temper of the reviewer is not complimentary and as the article can hardly be described as voluble, I will assume that by glibly the reviewer had in mind flippant. The assumption fits the bigoted temper of the reviewer—than which there is no more intolerant bigotry than that of the pseudo-patriot.

For bigotry—patriots of the type of the reviewer—have the most tory religionists backed clear off the map. The bigotry of patriotism decries the right to a scientific attitude of mind—the willingness to follow the truth wherever it may lead us. The first thing to learn in patriotism—as some one has said of football—is to go crazy!

But Lincoln didn't own the country. He was simply the right he was, and if he was wrong he was. The only way right to his opinion than anybody else. If Lincoln was agent of his fellows, and as such he possessed no more we can know that he was right or wrong is by the critical use of our intellectual faculties, and we are under no a priori obligation to arrive at either conclusion.

The reviewer remarks in regard to my article, "We permit ourselves the comment that the logic is not overwhelming", a comment which I might also make on the review. The review occupies enough space so that an exposé of a typical fallacy could be given, but the reviewer doesn't deign to do so. Perhaps the omission has some significance.

I make no claim to infallibility and my arguments are subject to critical examination and possible refutation.

The article in question was an abridgment of a short article published in Tyler's Quarterly Historical and Genealogical Magazine issue of July, 1927. Dr. Tyler, the editor of the magazine, is president-emeritus of William and Mary College. The original plan of the article was to refute Lincoln's reasoning in regard to secession by his reasoning in regard to slavery principally, but also by the use of principles enunciated in various other addresses. Space compelled a subordination of the plan to a very restricted length.

Now as to my glibness I will call attention to a few of the basic arguments contained in the article, and I ask you to show wherein they are glib, i. e., flippant, and you are welcome to choose any other argument that you consider glib.

On page 252 I state that "he had served in Congress without rising above mediocrity". Webster defines mediocrity as average or ordinary mental development. Applied to his career in Congress, I would define it as average performance. Can you point to anything extraordinary in Lincoln's career in Congress? His spot Resolutions are about the only thing he is known for—coupled with his opposition to the Mexican War—and it is his after reputation which gives them historical interest.

On page 254 I caid that "his waging of the Civil War was the very antithesis of common sense and statesmanship". In what sense is that a mere flippancy? What value do you place upon human life that you assert it to be mere glibness for a person to argue that the retension of six Southern States in the Union was not either moral or social justification for the slaughter of hundreds of thousands of men. Is it nothing more than glibness when I say that the conservation of human values is the function of government—that government exists for man and not man for government? Lincoln said as much. He said that he would save the union if he could do so without throwing "passengers and cargo overboard". And who and what are the passengers and cargo, if they are not the inhabitants and their property? And did he not throw passengers and cargo overboard when he slaughtered men by the hundreds of thousands and destroyed property by the billions of dollars worth in order that the "nation" might live?

What is the "nation" apart from the people that it is better that the people should be destroyed that the "nation" might live? Suppose the war should have continued until the people—both North and South—were utterly destroyed—of what then would the "nation" have consisted? Those "that died had as much right to live as did those who did not die, and those who lived were as much obligated to die—for the "nation"? as were those who did die. Consequently it is no idle question when I ask of what does the "nation" consist that the people must destroy themselves that it may live.

If, as Lincoln argued, secession would have destroyed the nation—and he did not argue it simply as an abstraction, for he said that if the war was lost there would not be need of another President—then it must be that the "nation" consisted of that which would have been changed by secession.

Secession in itself would not have destroyed a dollar's worth of property or a human life. It simply would have restricted the extent of the territorial jurisdiction of the Federal Government. Is it but mere flippancy to assume that the "nation" consisted in the immutability of the territorial jurisdiction of the Federal Government? Is it mere glibness to state that hundreds of thousands of men were slaughtered and billions in property destroyed that the territorial jurisdiction of a political agency might remain unaltered?

And is that a common sense appraisement of social values? Is territorial jurisdiction an end in itself that it is of more value than hundreds of thousands of men and thousands of homes and fathers? Is it sound statesmanship that political jurisdiction must be conserved regardless of the cost in human life? Are you a humanist or a disciple of Machiavelli in your political morality?

Is it a glib comparison which I make of Washington's and Lincoln's philosophy on page 255? If so, in what way? Is it glibness when I say, if South Carolina had a right to secede she had the right to take Fort Sumter? Is it glibness when I say that to "deny a man . . . the right to defend himself and you deny him all other rights? It is no more flippant than the legal axiom, that a law without a sanction attached is no law.

Is it a flippancy when I compare the Federal Government to a watchman? Lincoln stated that the fort was for the protection of the people of South Carolina. In what way is the argument in the first complete paragraph on page 259 flippant?

Is it a flippancy when I say that "the Southern people of 1860 had never entered into a clear compact of government" (page 263), and that one generation possesses no such authority over another. Is it nothing but glibness when I say on page 264, or rather as I did in my complete article, that a sovereign cannot be held in restraint—in refutation of Lincoln's assertion that "a majority, held in restraint by Constitutional checks and limitations—is the only true sovereign of a free people".

This letter is already unduly long and I will not go further, but I will appreciate your showing specifically just wherein my article either in whole or in part deserves the criticism of being "glib"? As a matter of intellectual, not to say moral honesty, I hope you will re-examine the matter. Political bigotry is fully as contemptible as is religious bigotry, and a man who isn't big enough to see the right and do the right—because it doesn't suit his political or religious prejudices doesn't amount to much.

As for your criticism of the book "that the evidence" of these "contemporaries" . . . is wholly without background or textual connection generally—the criticism is purely flippant. Certainly the full text of the quoted authorities could not be given, but the author-volume and page, is given and enough of the text to give the meaning. I challenge you to show that the meaning of the quotation has been altered by an illegitimate severance from the original text. The fact that the foremost Northern authorities favorable to Lincoln were quoted is sufficient to recommend the book.

It simply goes to show that Lincoln has been eulogized at the expense of pertinent and telling facts known to his eulogists. I could quote from many other works on Lincoln to show that he has been eulogized at the expense of facts unfavorable to Lincoln, but which have been minimized by his eulogists.

RAYS OF LIGHT FROM GOD'S LAMP

By W. W. Rugh

Founder and Associate of the Bible Institute of Pennsylvania 1418 North Sixteenth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Note: These simple studies in God's Word are intended for home and class use by those who wish to know our blessed Lord and to make Him known.

III. How was the Bible written?

"All Scripture is given by inspiration of God" (2 Tim. 3:16).

1. Fact of Inspiration.

God clearly states in His Word that all Scriptures was inspired by His Holy Spirit and did not come by the will of man (2 Peter 1:21; 2 Tim. 3:16; Ex. 4:10-15; Deut. 4:2; Jer. 1:7-9; Ezek. 3:4; Micah 3:8; 1 Peter 1:10, 11; Acts 1:16; 28:25; 1 Cor. 2:13; 14:37; 1 Thess. 2:13).

Jesus regarded all of the Old Testament as the inspired Word of God, obeying its commands, trusting its promises, and fulfilling its predictions (Matt. 1:22, 23; Isa. 7:14; Matt. 2:17, 18, 23; 4:14-16; 5:17: 8: 17; 13:13-15; 21:16; 26:54-56; Luke 4:4, 8, 12, 18-22; 24:25-27, 44-46).

God is working today according to His purpose and plan for this age as revealed by the Holy Spirit in the New Testament (Acts 1:6-8; Matt. 28:18-20; Mark 16:15-18; Luke 24:48, 49; Acts 15:14; Rom. 11:5).

Every believer during this age has proven that the New Testament, as well as the Old Testament, is inspired ("God breathed") by trusting and obeying it, for all have found that God does exactly what He says in His precious Word (Acts 27:25, 34, 44; Heb. 12:6; 1 Peter 5:7, 10).

2. Method of Inspiration.

The Holy Spirit has declared in 2 Peter 1:21 that holy men of God spake as they were moved by Him, and not as they or any man willed. Being holy men, they were yielded to God to do His will, so that the Holy Spirit could inspire, breathe into them or bring to their hearts and minds the message God wished to have spoken or written:

The Spirit employed all of the quickened and illuminated faculties of the writer to express just the thoughts and words God would have men hear in order to know Him and His will.

The Holy Spirit did not destroy the personality of the writer of any book, but used his personality as an aid in revealing the truth of redemption.

A timid, shrinking, reticent priest, who loved the sweet solitude of the presence of the Holy One of Israel, was just the vessel to bear a message of judgment in such a way that the nation of Judah would feel that Jehovah was not a tyrant who delighted in the death of the wicked, but a loving Father whose heart was broken because they refused to have His Mercy and grace (Jer. 1:7; Lam. 3:33, 48). An unfaithful servant like Mark, restored to fellowship through a fuller revelation of the grace of the Servant of God who was "blind" to everything but God's will, became the chosen instrument through which the Spirit could reveal the fathomless grace of the faithful Servant of God (Acts 15:38; 2 Tim. 4:11; Isa. 42:1, 19; Ps. 40:8; Mark 10:45).

3. Measure of Inspiration.

"Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God," was our Lord's answer to the Tempter, which overcame his subtle suggestion (Matt. 4:4; Deut. 8:3).

"One jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law till all be fulfilled" (Matt. 5:17, 18).

The Spirit reveals in the New Testament how the exact words of the Old Testament have been or will be fulfilled, thus proving that the very words were inspired (Matt. 1:23; Isa. 7:14; Matt. 2:15; Hosea 11:1; Matt. 4:13-16; Isa. 9:1, 2; Acts 2:25-32; Ps. 16:10. 11; Heb. 2:5-8; Ps. 8:4-8).

The words and works of wicked men which are mentioned in the Bible are not inspired, but the record of them is inspired (Josh. 9:3-15; Esth. 3).

4. A Value of Inspiration.

Because the Word of God is inspired by the Holy Spirit, spoken by God Himself, who cannot lie, it is a firm, a sure foundation for our faith (Num. 23:19; Titus 1:2; Isa. 55:11).

Because "God breathed", His Word has life-giving power in it, power to beget the new life, and power to nourish that life in the believing heart (Rom. 1:16; 1 Peter 1: 23-25).

Because God's Word is written by the Holy Spirit through holy men of God, it sanctifies, cleanses from sin and keeps clean the heart in which it is hidden (John 17:17; 1 John 1:9; Ps. 119:9, 11).

Because God has spoken, His oracles empower for fruitful service every consecrated believer (2 Tim. 3:16, 17; 1 Peter 4:11).

THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE WORK AMONG THE NEGROES IN THE SOUTH

E. L. Baskerville

IN the program of the development of the work among the Negroes in the Protestant Episcopal Church in the South, there are two phases which should be especially emphasized and advanced at this time:

(1) Educational and (2) Religious or Evangelistic.

I.

The Educational Phase.

For the Educational phase, there is an excellent organization, known as the American Church Institute for Negroes, whose mission is to foster vocational training and higher education among the Negroes. It has greatly extended its influence within the last eight or ten years. It does not deal with the parochial schools or mission stations.

The list of schools under the American Church Institute for Negroes is as follows:

1. St. Augustine's School, Raleigh, N. C., which has recently inaugurated a full four-year college course as a part of the work of the Institution. St. Agnes' Hospital and Training School for Nurses, and Bishop Tuttle Training School for Women are located on its campus. President, Rev. Edgar H. Goold, M. A.

2. St. Paul's Normal and Industrial School, Lawrenceville, Va., Principal, the Ven. J. S. Russell, D. D.

3. Bishop Payne Divinity School, Petersburg, Va., Dean, the Rev. F. G. Ribble, D. D.

4. St. Mark's School, Birmingham, Ala., Principal, the Rev. Charles W. Brooks.

5. Fort Valley High and Industrial School, Fort Valley, Ga., Principal, H. A. Hunt.

6. Hoffman-St. Mary's School, Mason, Tenn., Principal, the Rev. George A. Stams.

7. Okolona Industrial School, Okolona, Miss., Acting Principal, Mrs. Wallace A. Battle.

8. Gaudet Normal and Industrial School, New Orleans, La., Principal, the Rev. Joseph N. Carter.

9. Voorhees Normal and Industrial School, Denmark, S. C., Principal, J. E. Blanton.

The Rev. Robert W. Patton, D. D.

The Director of the American Church Institute for Negroes is the Rev. Robert W. Patton, D. D., during whose tenure of office the Institute has made rapid progress. He is now engaged in a campaign to raise $215,000 for St. Paul's, Lawrenceville, Va., and $300,000 for Fort Valley, Ga. The money is to be used for buildings and equipment for industrial training. We wish him great success in the campaign.

In the work of the advancement of the schools of the Institute, Dr. Patton has on his Board of Trustees some outstanding friends of the Negro race. Among them are Bishops Lloyd and Stires, and Drs. James H. Dillard, George Foster Peabody and William C. Rives. There are many who are not on the Board of Trustees who are exceedingly interested in the work of the Institute. One of them is the Rt. Rev. William T. Manning, D. D., Bishop of New York, who recently held a great mass meeting in Carnegie Hall to extend the work of the schools.

Wallace A. Battle.

The appointment of Wallace A. Battle, former principal of Okolona School, Okolona, Miss., as field secretary of the Institute to assist the Director, should have a telling effect for good in the extending of the work of the schools. His long experience as head of Okolona School makes him competent for the position.

Bishop Payne Divinity School.

Of all the schools that are now under the American Church Institute for Negroes, Bishop Payne Divinity School has the hardest struggle. While the school has given a good account of its stewardship in training men for the sacred ministry, it has not had sufficient funds for its physical equipment and life. No special campaigns have been waged for the development of the physical life of this important Seminary. We call it important because the majority of the Negro clergymen at work in the Church received their training within its walls.

For a long time Bishop Payne Divinity School, with a strong and consecrated Faculty, has been rendering a great service for the Church at Petersburg, Va. All that is needed to enable it to do a much greater work is money for its physical equipment and maintenance. Toward the maintenance of the work of the school, we are glad to say, that the General Board of Missions and also the American Church Institute for Negroes have been making an annual appropriation for some time, but on account of lack of funds in hand, they have not been able to make the appropriations large enough to cover the financial needs for the healthy existence of this institution. We are satisfied, however, that the Nation-Wide movement for the welfare of the schools of the Institute will bring relief to Bishop Payne Divinity School in the future. We believe that all the friends of the work among the Negroes need to know is how much money it will take to put it on first-rate running basis.

The plan is to make the schools of the Institute second to none in the South. At present, as to Colleges in the South, the Negro Denominations, especially the Baptist and the Methodist, are ahead of us. However, the making of St. Augustine's a bona fide college will give us a better rating.

II.

The Religious or Evangelistic Phase

The other phase of vital importance in the development of the work among the Negroes in the Episcopal Church in the South is the Religious, or Evangelistic phase. Religious training schools hold first place in the work. It is the thing which gives life its luster. It is the anchor to hold men and women to the right. In a word, the Christian religion is the way of life for everything which is enduring and worth while in the world. By its continual enlightening influence of the conscience, man learns to realize his proper relation to God and mankind—God, his loving Father, and man, his brother. Any training in our schools and colleges which leaves out God is doomed to failure. It is the Christian religion which enables man to put honesty and Christian character in all he does—in the home life, in the Church and in the community.

The Bishops of the Episcopal Church in the South, as a whole, have been endeavoring for a long time to carry on a religious and educational program among the large colored population in their Dioceses. What they and many of our white church people in the South have lacked in money to extend this urgent work has been shown in their Christian sympathy and love. Especially is this true in the case of the late Rt. Rev. William A. Guerry, D. D., Bishop of South Carolina.

The lack of funds for missionary work in the Southern Dioceses and the small annual appropriations from the General Church have greatly hampered the program for the advancement of the religious training among the Negroes in the South. There is no money in hand for buildings and equipments and the ministers and teachers, for the most part, are poorly paid. When these and other handicaps in the work are taken into consideration, it will be readily seen that what has been done by the Episcopal Church in the South is remarkable, and the Bishops are entitled to much praise for their part in it. It is a wonder to us that they have done so much with such a little with which to do it.

The Church in the South has also contributed in membership to the life of the Church in the North and the West. Should the registers of the colored congregations of the Episcopal Church in the North and West be examined, it will be found that a large per cent of their communicants comes from the colored Episcopal congregations in the South.

An Organization Needed.

To advance and support the religious phase of the work among the Negroes in the South, there is crying need of a strong and active organization of the General Church to cooperate with the Bishops of the Church in the South. This organization could be along the line of the American Church Institute for Negroes to keep before the National Church the religious phase of the work and to raise funds for the success of the same.

The purpose of the organization should be to help the Bishops carry the religious training to the darkest and remotest corners of their respective Dioceses, and to maintain parochial schools in the "back woods" in the rural districts, which the public school system is not able to reach at this time, and also in places where the public schools run only three or four months during the year. Community centres with trained nurses and other social workers should be established in the neglected communities in the country. The object of these centres should be to carry religious and educational training to the people and to aid in making a satisfying country life. We are striving to put over such a program of uplift in the Diocese of South Carolina. We regret to say, however, that we are greatly hampered for lack of funds.

Rev. W. B. Crittenden.

It may be possible to build around our newly appointed General Secretary, for the Negro Work in the Field Department, the Rev. W. B. Crittenden, the kind of organization which could cooperate with the Bishops in the South, and help to advise the line in the religious training of the masses of the Negroes. Something must be done to bring this phase of the development of the work before the National Church. The needs are tremendous.

The Rev. Mr. Crittenden is eminently qualified for the leadership in this important work. In training, he is one of our outstanding clergymen, and he is a deeply spiritual and consecrated man. We believe that his selection as General Secretary will have a wonderful influence in the life and advancement of the work. In fact, it will be epoch-making in the history of our work among the Negroes in our Church. We are certain that the colored clergy throughout the Church will follow his wise leadership and cooperate with him in his work. The Conference of Church Workers among the Colored People has been asking for a general secretary for many years. This request was approved at our General Convention in New Orleans in 1925.

Again, we hope that it may be possible to arrange a special meeting in the interest of the religious phase during the General Convention in Washington, with Mr. Crittenden as the principal speaker. Such a meeting would be far-reaching in its influence and would bring abundant results for good in our work of loving service for the Master. The masses of our people in the country districts need positive Christian teaching, and it is the duty of our Church to help carry it to them.

SHORT FAMILY PRAYERS

Reverend Joshua Peterkin, D. D.

Saturday Morning.

Almighty God, who has promised to hear the petitions of those who ask in Thy Son's name, let Thy merciful ears be opened to this our morning prayer, and that we may obtain our petitions, make us to ask such things as are pleasing to Thee. And do Thou direct us in all our doing with Thy most gracious favour, and further us with Thy continual help, that in all our works begun, continued and ended in Thee, we may glorify Thy holy name.

We thank Thee that we are again permitted to appear before Thee. O make us Thine in heart and life. And if there be any among us who have erred and strayed from the right path, may it please Thee to bring them back into the way of truth.

We have promised, O God, to renounce the world, the flesh and the devil; give us strength so to do. May Thy Holy Spirit abide with us today, disposing us to every good work, directing all our steps, giving us a right judgment in all things, and helping us to live a godly, righteous and sober life.

We pray Thee, O Lord, to animate our minds with those glorious hopes which are set before us in Thy Word, so that if we have any present sacrifices to make, they may seem small to us in comparison with that inward satisfaction and joy, which the gospel gives in the midst of worldly disappointments, and at the same time deliver us from every false hope. May we examine well our title to heaven, till we know that our foundation is sure, and shall never fail us. We confess that we are daily compassed with infirmity; but we pray that every evil habit may be weakened in us; that every temptation may be overcome, and that every terror may at length be done away. May we thus be brought into the true liberty of the children of God, and serve Thee without fear, in holiness and in righteousness, all the days of our lives.

Hear, O Lord, these our prayers, and supply both our temporal and spiritual wants, for the sake of Jesus Christ, our blessed Saviour. Amen.

Our Father, &c.

The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, &c.

Saturday Evening.

Almighty God, our Creator and Preserver, we come before Thee to thank Thee for the mercies of the past day and of the past week. We are not worthy to take Thy holy name upon our lips; but nevertheless we are invited to come boldly to a throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy and find grace to help in time of need. Do Thou teach us how to pray, to seek from Thee, with contrite hearts, the pardon of our sins and the assistance of Thy Holy Spirit, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Forgive us, we beseech Thee, whatever evil Thou hast seen in us this day. Pardon our wasted time, our idle words, and our negligence in the performance of our duty. Work in us a sincere repentance, and enable us hereafter to walk before Thee in newness of life. Save us from an unprofitable life. Make us watchful and circumspect, most earnest to know our duty, and more diligent in its fulfilment.

We praise Thee for all the blessings of this life, but above all for the glorious inheritance which thou hast set before us in the life to come. We now beseech Thee to prepare our minds for the services of the coming Lord's Day. Deliver us from all engrossing thoughts concerning the things of this present world, and fill our hearts with longing desires for the blessings of the world above. Enlighten our minds more and more with the light of the everlasting gospel, graft in our hearts a love of the truth, increase in us true religion, nourish us with all goodness, and of Thy great mercy keep us in the same.

We commend to Thy gracious protection all our relations and friends. Save them from every evil and danger to which they may be exposed, and prepare them, by the events of Thy providence and the guidance of Thy Spirit, for happiness that shall never end. Have mercy upon the poor, the sick and the afflicted, and be pleased to raise them up friends to succor and relieve them. Bless all those who are in authority over us; and in Thine infinite wisdom so order all the affairs of this life that peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and piety, may be established among us for all generations.

These great blessings we humbly ask in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, &c.

A LIVE CHURCH

Two Monthly Bulletins of St. John's Church, Camden, Ark.

Rev. Randolph R. Claiborne, Rector.

What have you been doing lately? Working, of course! A blessed thing—work. It stands between many folks and insanity. God spoke in Wisdom: "Six days thou shalt work!" And He also gives us the Ability to work. Men live by work.

But there is another thing that men live by, too. It is Love. God spoke in Wisdom: "Love one another!" Love makes life worth living. It gives keen joy—to Love and be Loved. Not just homefolks; but all folks. The Love that wants them to have the best; wants them to be happy; that wants to Help make folks happy! That is the stamp of the Christ-spirit.

And there is one more thing that men live by; and that is Worship. Worship Lifts a man up; and brings him consciously into the Presence of God. Worship stretches and widens and deepens a man's Spiritual Self. It brings him into Contact with the Source of Life; and Enables him to draw the power that he needs to Work and to Love.

Of course, by Worship, we do not mean merely "going to Church", or "receiving the Holy Communion". These are Means to Worship. They help us to Worship. But to Worship God means to prostrate our Spirits before Him in Humbleness and Reverence and in conscious emptiness and need. We recognize His Greatness, and Goodness, and Loving Kindness to us. We are filled with gratitude; and surrender ourselves to Him to be filled with His Spirit.

So man is distinguished from other animals in this, that he lives by Work, and Love and Worship. All three are essential to his completeness, and to the true development of his manhood.

Wonderful opportunity is given us for Exercising ourselves in these. There is so much work to be done that is worth doing. And there are so many people longing to be loved and needing it! And there are so many Means to help us come consciously into the immediate Presence of God!

And then, do you consider seriously the Job that Jesus left with His followers at the time of His ascension? In Acts, chapter 1, verse 8: "Ye shall be My Witness bearers," etc. That "gets me". That makes each of us His Particular Witness. "Nobody else is responsible for Me!" How too true!

So I have to say to Myself: "In the work I do, and in the doing of it, I am His Witness." And: "In the broadness of my Love, in its quality; and in the Expression of it, I am His Witness." And: "In my Worship; in the regularity of it; in my Earnestness; in the Example I set; in my Attitude towards Worship; in my Helpfulness in leading others to Worship—I am His Witness-bearer!"

God's Beautiful Time.

We Need God in Hot weather and in cold weather! Jesus Christ is the Great Compensator. He is the Equalizer and Balancer of Life. Take Him In—and the weather is all fine, for Work, and Love, and Worship! In all these we must get away from ourselves! The Church provides plenty of exercise in these three essentials of happiness. There is no monopoly. Avail yourself of the Privilege.

Especially on the Lord's Day, see what you can do to exercise your Ability, your Talent, your Gift for work, Love and Worship. The Worship will be conducted by laymen on June 3 and June 10. You are a layman and a Witness-bearer!

A Thought-Provoking Bulletin.

Remembering our "Profession" as Christians—

(1) By what right do you call yourself a Christian? Would the Lord Jesus agree?

Do you do anything particularly "For Christ's Sake" or "In His Name"?

A. Are you a Living Member of His Body the Church? That is—Do you worship in His Church regularly? Do you advance His cause by working? What do you do to make the Church association attractive? Are you there in time to welcome cordially visitors? And to greet in a friendly manner your own brethren? Do you avail yourself of the Privilege of ushering? and of assisting visitors in the Service?

B. Did you consider that you might help in the choir? That it is Your Duty to do so? That you might offer to help in Sunday School?

C. Do you ever assist some one up or down the steps? Do you notice whether the windows are right for proper ventilation? Whom do you suppose turns on the lights and closes the Church after Service?

D. Have you ever brought one to baptism? or to Confirmation? or to The Holy Communion? How many each week to Worship? Do you feel the empts seats in Church a reproach for you?

E. Is it Correct to say that a Christian is a Christ-believer, a Christ-follower, a Christ-radiator, a Christ-worshipper, a Christ-lover, a Recruiter for Christ's Church and a Worker in His Body?

(2) Or has it been Your Idea that—A Christian is one who has been baptized? One for whom Christ did it all? That a Christian does not have to belong to Church, or go to Worship? Have you thought that a Christian does not have to support the Work, or to Do the Work? That a Christian may Ignore His Body, the Church? And that he is under No Obligation to Do anything?

X. Have you thought that a Christian was a Receiver and Not a Giver? That the Church is put here to baptize Him, Marry Him, Bury Him. Have you thought it the Other Man's business to Keep the Church going for your benefit and Blessing?

Y. And yet You Know a Community is Not Fit to live in without the Church? and that the Church must die unless some one cares for it? You know that schools, hospitals and all charities are Fruits of the Church—and Yet you are Indifferent, and say you don't need it, or that you are good, or as good as any one in the church?

Z. What would you call yourself then—a Christian? God forbid that Christ's Holy Name should be So blasphemed and Outraged. There are really descriptive names of You if that is you—but not "Christian".

(3) Do you substitute your business for the Lord's business? Do you suppose that "Making a living" is accepted in place of "Serving the Lord"? Is House-work, or office-work, or School-work, or any other kind of work a Substitute for Church-work and Worship?

K. What is it to "be good"? Is a man "good" because he "tends to his own business"? Certainly not in Christ's Mind; rather selfishness is Condemned. Is a man "good" because he does not Kill, Steal, Lie, Slander, etc.? We might say that a "Cabbage is a Christian" according to that definition. But a cabbage is good for something. It is good for food.

L. Is not a Christian supposed to be good for something? Did He not Emphasize: Do good; Love. Serve. Help. Make disciples. Preach. Teach. Shine. Work. Give. Worship.

(4) Is it not time for you Christians to Obey His Command. to Make Him known, that His Will may be Done on Earth as in Heaven; and that all men may have the joy of the Life Eternal?

May God Guide us all by His Spirit; and Bless us with the Gift of Himself.

EXCELLENT INSTRUCTION COURSE BY BISHOP BECKWITH.

Bishop Beckwith's last word in regard to his Course of Church School Instruction follows:

I have written "The Church School in The Book of Common Prayer", not to supplant any Course of Instruction now in use, but as a workable foundation for them all. The Church has designated certain fundamental facts as the basis of Christian Education. These must be definitely and accurately learned, if intelligent progress is to be made.

"Apart from the Person of our Blessed Lord, Christianity is a study—a science. No science can be taught as a whole. Having learned the multiplication table, mathematics must be taught and learned by subjects. When the subjects, Arithmetic, Algebra, etc., have been accurately learned, the science of mathematics has been mastered. In like manner Christianity must be taught by subjects. This is the principle underlying our course of instruction.

"In the Infant Department, among many other things that hold the attention and interest of little children, we secure an accurate committing to memory of the Creed, the Lord's Prayer and the Ten Commandments. These are the first things—the fundamental facts; underlying both the personal Christian life and the study of Christianity.

"Then we carry these on by example, enlargement and illustration through four grades:

"Grade I—The Church Catechism, which is only a development of the Creed, the Lord's Prayer and the Ten Commandments.

"Grade II—The Church Year. The first half, from Advent to Trinity, presents the Great Events of our Lord's life. These are in the Creed, as articles of our Faith. The second half of the Church Year, from Trinity to Advent, presents the Moral Law as contained in the Ten Commandments. The Lord's Prayer is involved in both.

"Grade III—The Book of Common Prayer. This carries the Creed, the Lord's Prayer and the Ten Commandments on into the Public Worship of the Church.

"Grade IV—The Collects, Epistles and Gospels. These take us into the introductory study of the Holy Bible, which is the final authority upon which we accept the Creed, the Lord's Prayer and the Ten Commandments.

"This Course of Instruction, compiled from the Book of Common Prayer, we have sent forth as the foundation work of our Church Schools. When this primary work is done, any system for advanced study may be used to the best advantage."

Rev. W. N. Claybrook, of Tyler, Texas, writes:

The third course of your System of Church Teaching is superb. I think it is the very finest thing on Church teaching of anything I have ever seen. It is a wonderful improvement over anything you have yet done—which means that it is the finest thing anybody has ever done. My teachers and superintendent are very enthusiastic over the three courses, but especially over the third number, and all of the teachers being enthusiastic, the pupils are doing better than I have ever had them to do. One of the boys (16) said yesterday, "I am going to keep this book as long as I live. It is wonderful." Nearly all of the children know the entire Catechism, and will receive a certificate of proficiency next week. Bishop—This is the greatest piece of work that has ever been done by anybody for the Church. I rejoice in it, and am more than delighted with it, and feel very grateful for it, and predict that it will gradually take first place of all systems of instruction in the Church. The principle that underlies it will never be supplanted nor improved upon.

Rev. E. W. Gamble, of Selma, Ala., writes:

"I consider 'The Church School in the Book of Common Prayer', by the late Bishop of Alabama, to be the best system of instruction I have ever tried. To my mind, there is nothing equal to it in the Church today. I have tried it before most of it was ever put in printed form with remarkable success, and am now using it in my Church School at this time."

Rev. Willis G. Clark, of Tampa, Fla., writes:

"No child should be allowed to graduate from our Church School without the advantage of 'The Church School in the Book of Common Prayer'. It is especially adapted for the instruction of those who are preparing for Confirmation."

FIFTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY

By Berkeley Minor

Collect.

O God, Who hast prepared for those who love Thee such good things as pass man's understanding; pour into our hearts such love toward Thee that we, loving Thee above all things, may obtain Thy promises, which exceed all that we can desire, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

This collect lacks the attribute, beginning with the address, "O God". A beautiful ascription tells what God has prepared for those who love Him, "such good things as pass man's understanding."

There is nothing in this collect taken from the Epistle or the Gospel for the day; but the ascription comes from Phil. 4:7, the blessing invoked by St. Paul on his beloved disciples of Philippi, "And the peace of God which passeth all understanding shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus" (or R. V., "Guard your hearts and your thoughts in Christ Jesus".

The "good things" spoken of here in the collect are prepared for those who love Him, and the petition, "Pour into our hearts such love to Thee that we, loving Thee above all things, may obtain Thy promises", shows plainly that the love which is to be so blessed is that love enjoined by Christ, "the first great Commandment", wherein we are told, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind", and inasmuch as no love to God is accepted by Him, except such as includes our neighbor, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself", is a commandment as binding as the first and great one.

Thus dwelling on His love for us, who first loved us, did seek us strangers, "wandering from the fold of God, and to save our souls from danger" redeemed us with His blood, we shall be able to sing in full sympathy with Mrs. Prentiss that prayerful hymn, "More Love to Thee, O Christ".

The Epistle for the Sixth Sunday after Trinity is Rom. 6:3-12.

We often come on such passages in the Bible as we find in this Gospel, too deep to be fully fathomed. "Baptized into Jesus Christ", "Baptized into His death", "Buried with Him by baptism into death", are good examples of such obscure passages; yet by prayer to the great Interpreter we get at least some inkling as to the truth He designs us to draw from them; and the Church Catechism, through the teaching of the same Spirit, helps us, telling us, even in our childhood, that "the inward and spiritual grace given unto us" in baptism is "A death unto sin, and a new birth unto righteousness; for being by nature born in sin, and the children of wrath, we are hereby made the children of grace". Hence we see that the Church regards the death here spoken of as that death of sin and Satan's power, wrought for us who live and die in Him by His death on Calvary. Then the Apostle goes on to show how important for our full salvation is our belief in His resurrection. "If we be dead with Christ, we believe that we shall also live with Him; knowing that Christ, being raised from the dead, dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over Him," and so on through the beautiful sentence of the Easter Festival.

So the Church bids us hope and expect a joyful resurrection only "through the grave and gate of death". But may we not at least hope that we may be among those among whom St. Paul hoped to be, those "which are alive and remain", who shall be caught up together with them (the dead in Christ) at the first resurrection, when "the Lord Himself shall descend with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first! That I, in my seventy-sixth year, should cherish this hope, which cannot be fulfilled, "until the trump of God be heard, until the ancient graves be stirred, and with the great commanding word, the Lord shall come", would hardly seem reasonable. Yet it is a possibility, on which it is pleasing to dwell. It all depends on when He will come, and the only clue He gave us ere He went away is in Matt. 24:14, and its parallel, Mark 13:10, "And this Gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come". And (Mark), "And the Gospel must first be published among all nations". What an encouragement to urge on the work of missions!

My old friend and comrade, Thompson Brooke Maury (died July 15, 1923), understands "the end" of Matt. 24: 14 to be the coming of Christ to judge the world, and not His coming declared by Paul in 1 Thess. 4, when "the Lord Himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first ———". "The first resurrection," spoken of by John in Rev. 20:4; and he tells us in verses 4 and 5 who are the "blessed and holy" who have "part in the first resurrection", and "on whom the second death hath no power; but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with Him a thousand years". If my old friend and other pre-millennarians are right (and I incline to think they are), His elect may hope and expect a more speedy return, not to the judgment of the great day, "of the Great White Throne", but to meet His own "in the air"; those who are alive and remain, together with "the dead in Christ". How blest are they who meet Him so, in whichever class they may be found!

The Gospel for the Sixth Sunday after Trinity is Matt. 5:20-26, seven verses of the Sermon on the Mount. In these seven verses there is no material difference between the A. V. and the R. V., save in vs. 22, where the A. V. has, "Whosoever is angry with his brother without a cause shall be in danger of the judgment"; while the R. V. admits no such qualification, leaving out "without a cause"; thus forbidding anger altogether; and this is in accordance with nearly all the New Testament teaching in regard to this dangerous passsion. Eph. 4:26 seems to admit the righteousness of anger in some degree; yet I would much rather take it (as some scholars suggest) as a rhetorical question (thus), "Be ye angry and sin not"?

The great danger of anger is that, once admitted, it is almost sure to take possession and go on to excess. We may sum up the matter by saying that, though God Almighty in the Old Testament is often said to be angry, who can never go to excess in His anger, wherein lies the danger for weak mortals, yet Jesus, God manifest in the flesh, is never angry; for though in His perfection, He might be angry and sin not, He, as our good exemplar, would teach frail humanity to avoid a passion almost certain to lead us, by excess, into sin.

The teaching of this portion of the Sermon on the Mount, before us in this Gospel for the Sixth Sunday after Trinity, is about that righteousness that we must have to "enter into the kingdom of heaven".

Jesus very emphatically declares that this righteousness must exceed that "of the Scribes and Pharisees". How and to what degree it must exceed their righteousness we shall consider later; but first let us consider this righteousness, its nature and value in God's sight.

Did Jesus mean the righteousness of these scribes and Pharisees who were persecuting Him, and at last put Him to death, to whom He addressed the eight woes recorded in Matt. 23,13-33, in all but one of which He brands them as "hypocrites", and in that one (the fourth) calls them "blind guides" and "fools and blind". But we must bear in mind that the dark side of Pharisaism, which is brought before us in the Gospels—the common and current Pharisaism, half hypocritical, half mechanical, and wholly selfish, which justly incurred this lighting of Christ's denunciation, was not the only aspect which Pharisaism could wear.

When we speak of Pharisaism we mean obedience petrified into formalism, religion degraded into ritual, morals cankered by casuistry; we mean the triumph and perpetuity of all the worse and weakest elements of party spirit. But there were Pharisees and Pharisees. The New Testament furnishes us with a favorable picture of the candor and wisdom of a Nicodemus and a Gamalial.

Though Durford commands, "But do not after their works; for they say, and do not". And so to such ignorance as theirs their Lord may have thought it necessary to give warning to His disciples of the worthlessness of the righteousness of these leaders of the nation, yet only blind guides and hypocrites.

But these disciples had much more to learn about the righteousness needed to "enter into the kingdom of heaven", in the progress of doctrine through the life of Christ that was yet to be known to them through His death, resurrection and ascension, in the Gospels, and the Pentecostal and other teaching in the Acts, and the teaching of the Spirit in the Epistles; a righteousness exceeding not only that of these Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites and blind guides, and fools, but of some Pharisees like Paul, when Saul of Tarsus, who was far from being a hypocrite and a fool, but was surely a blind guide before he saw the Light near Damascus, said of himself (Phil. 3:56), "Circumcised the eighth day, of the stock of Israel, of the tribe of Benjamin, a Hebrew of the Hebrews; as touching the Law, a Pharisee; concerning zeal, persecuting the Church; touching the righteousness which is in the law, blameless". But even such a strictly moral and upright life as this Pharisee must have led is counted by him as utterly worthless for entrance into the kingdom of heaven set before us by Jesus in this Gospel (by Paul for Jesus).

Let us consider now how and to what degree must our righteousness exceed that of even the most righteous scribes and Pharisees if we aspire to enter into His kingdom. I say to what degree: but would any righteousness, in any degree to which fallen men can attain, even with His grace, preventing and following, fit us for entrance into the kingdom of heaven? Surely not, as Christ and the whole New Testament teach, "Except a man be born again of water and of the Spirit (John 3:3 and 5), he cannot enter into the kingdom of God". The righteousness put on at this new birth differs entirely in kind from the best that the unregenerate man can have. 'Tis none of his own, viz., "The righteousness which is of faith" (Rom. 10:6); the best of his own is but "filthy rags" in God's sight. See what Isaiah says of such righteousness (ch. 64:6). The regenerate soul has iniquities forgiven and sins covered (Rom. 4:7), covered, no longer seen by God; for being in Christ, and Christ in us, we are accepted of the Godhead. And so to each of us, as to His Church, may be addressed Philip Doddridge's verse:

"Put all Thy beauteous garments on,
And let Thine excellence be known;
Decked in the robes of righteousness,
The world Thy glories shall confess."

AN ORTHODOX SERMON.

Day tells us now Mars Adam mout
Hab been de fus real man;
But back ub him, his kinsfolk wus
A rowdy monkey clan;
An' dat dey chattered in de swamps
An' clum de high'st trees,
De spen de're monins huntin grub,
Day're noon time ketchin fleas.

But wen de change cum roun' an' how
De're ain nobody kno;
Er why a monkey can't talk nun,
An wear ee hair fur cloes;
Den—ef one ape wus born a man—
(Now bredren, cum on, shout)
Huccum de monkey family didn't
Cumpletely peter out.

De monkey's here, an' we is here,
An' do we favers sum,
'Cep' wen de possum be's up dar,
De tree do'n seem lak home.
An' yu kin dress a monkey up
In welwet clos' so fine,
He looks sum lak a man, an' yet,
'E tail stick out behin'.

An' do sum man hab monkey ways,
De monkey put on style,
Dere's no mo' chance ob mixin' um

It's war yu's goin', dat counts."

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed—"Thy word have I hid in my heart" (Psalm 119:11).

This week the following verse was submitted by Mrs. G. H. G. Greer, of Roanoke, Va.:

"Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him." (1 Cor. 2:9.

Book Reviews

THE UNITED STATES OF MAN: By H. Wildon Carr. Macmillan Company. Pp. 213. Price ——.

Man is given his unique status by the emergence in modern philosophy of the positive idea of his freedom. This is the thesis of Dr. Carr's lectures in the School of Religion of the University of Southern California in the spring of 1927, which are contained in this book.

This idea of freedom had its origin in the Christian conception of man's relation to God. From this beginning philosophical history is reviewed and the contention of the author is established. Paul interpreted philosophically this new conception of the status of man. Paul's achievement was the "triumphant affirmation of spiritual freedom". Dr. Carr then treats the theological form of the free-will problem. A man when he falls from grace is free to fall, and since the means of salvation are provided he is free to return to grace. This theological aspect introduces the metaphysical form of the free-will problem. The development of modern philosophy had its origin in the seventeenth century, for not until then were philosophers conscious of the new freedom. Late in this period the metaphysical ideas of Spinoza and of Leibniz, although opposed in nature, arrive at the same conclusion and support the conception of man's freedom.

The history of philosophy is examined further by Dr. Carr in order to trace this idea of freedom. The contention of the Empiricist, John Locke, was that nature inspires men with a romantic freedom. The proponents of the idea of natural religion were refuted effectively by Hume, and this free-will reaffirmed.

More recent philosophical developments, such as mechanism, scientific materialism, the principle of relativity, are studied by the author and found to support the Christian freedom idea. Lastly, living activity was considered as a positive conception of freedom.

A scholarly quality is present throughout the book. For most readers, the philosophical subject matter is exceedingly heavy, and implies at least casual knowledge of philosophical history. As well as being a careful dissertation on the free-will problem, the book is an inspiration to a more complete understanding of the fullness of the heritage we have from Christianity.

WANTED SYMPATHY IN A GREAT CAUSE.

Mr. Editor:

Thirty-six years ago, before the Conference of Church Workers among the Colored People, in St. James' Church, Baltimore, Md., the late Bishop Paret, in addressing the body, said:

"The first difficulty you will have to face in this Conference, as will we who meet in the General Convention, will be the lack of interest and sympathy in the Church at large for this work.

"Another difficulty we have to encounter is the hindrance that comes in the way of reaching the souls that need us.

"A third problem is how to supply the needs of earnest, true and well-trained workers for this field. A high standard of training is necessary, and I should feel that it would be wronging and degrading the race if we set for them a standard lower than that insisted upon for white priests."

The good Bishop was very earnestly urged upon us the consideration of these difficulties. Very soon we discovered a remedy and "a way of escape". It was, indeed, a discovery, for we soon found that the honored predecessor of the then Bishop of Maryland had originated a plan which precisely and actually met all the difficulties indicated. And this plan was the result of the perplexities of the late Bishops Beckwith and Howe, who sincerely and truly aspired to advance the Kingdom among black people. It meets all the difficulties because it eliminates the real cause of "the lack of interest and sympathy"; and, because of the removal of this serious difficulty, the Episcopal Church at once becomes more attractive to the great body of the colored race; and, because it gives a fixed and honorable "status" to colored communicants, it fully solves the third difficulty, for it opens up an honorable career for the brightest and best, mentally and morally, of the young men of the race.

We believe in the existence of an infinite God of Love, Wisdom and Might. Is it thinkable that while we are much exercised over the Prayer Book and the Thirty-nine Articles, with "the lack of interest and sympathy in the Church at large for this work" still existing, that a holy and good God, who, in His providential operations, brought hither the black man for the Church to effectively reach, can be well pleased?

Fifty years ago this very year Archdeacon Russell, then a young man from the country, came to my father's house, Petersburg, Va., to enter the Bishop Payne Divinity School as its first pupil. What he has wrought, and others of the black priesthood, since that time is a challenge to the Church. The Church can never hope for the fullness of God's blessing upon her until she stops "experimenting", and bravely sets herself to win the black man to the Faith. God has shown the way; she needs the will. The door of hope still stands ajar.

HELP ACKNOWLEDGED.

Mr. Editor:

I think that our Southern Churchman is a wonderful paper. I could not do without it in the home. It has been a great help to me in my study of the Bible. The paper has improved a great deal the past year. With my best wishes for its continual success.

ORTHODOX.

Mr. Editor:

In conclusion, I want to tell you how much I enjoy the Churchman. In every sense it is orthodox. You go for the very center of truth, and when you do that you can let the chips fly where they please.

PRAYERS FOR DEPARTED.

Mr. Editor:

I notice that a writer in your issue of 30 ulto., page 6, tries to make it an inference from certain texts (which do not bear directly on the subject) that there is scriptural authority (as well as cogent reason) against praying for the departed. But is not this contrary to (1) The Articles, (2) The Book of Common Prayer, (3) Holy Scripture?

(1) Article VI names the Books of the Maccabees as read by the Church for example of life and instruction in manners. It follows that it commends the practices which are commended in those books.

(2) The Book of Common Prayer brings Maccabees under the name of Holy Scripture.

(3) cf. 2 Maccabees 12:43, 44, 45.

Yours truly,

John Cole McKim.

APPRECIATION.

I enjoy reading the Southern Churchman so much, and thoroughly appreciate the common sense views taken on the different questions and opinions expressed in the paper.

NEW PRAYER BOOK.

Mr. Editor:

We thank God with all our hearts that the House of Commons, in England, rejected the proposed New Prayer Book, for the second time, by an increased majority. We, as loyal Protestant Evangelical Churchmen, ought to be encouraged by such a victory, and should be more determined than ever to reject the New Prayer Book, which the Popish Party in our Church is craftily trying to force upon an unwilling people.

Why cannot we organize united prayer meetings in our churches throughout this land, and ask God to defeat the efforts of these rebels in our Communion, from achieving the disruption of our beloved Church?

If all loyal Protestant Churchmen, never mind what party churchmen may say, would make a united demand that the Triennial Convention reject the changes proposed in the New Prayer Book, by the Popish Party, and recommend a new revision, without affecting the doctrinal teaching of our Church, I believe their recommendation would be accepted, and passed by the Convention.

Let our voice be heard at the Convention, and let it be clearly understood that we, Protestant Evangelical Churchmen, clergy and laity, will refuse to use the new Prayer Book with its Pro-Roman teachings. We will continue to use the old Prayer Book.

If, God forbid, the proposed Prayer Book with its popish teachings should be passed, and every church should be required to use it, then from the standpoint of conscience we shall be unable to do so, and shall have to withdraw from this Communion.

I can tolerate a Roman Catholic, but I cannot tolerate a counterfeit Roman Catholic in our Communion. If these were honest, truthful men they would go over to Rome, and cease to be a menace in our Communion.

I know there are two Schools of Thought in our Communion, but I am not speaking here of the loyal High-Churchmen, but of the self-styled "Catholic Party", which, of course, is generally known as "the Pro-Roman Party".

Wawasee Conference.

True leadership and a high standard of scholarship were factors which contributed much to the success of the Twelfth Annual Wawasee Conference held at Lake Wawasee, Ind., from June 21 to 27. This was a joint Diocesan Conference of the Diocese of Indianapolis and the Diocese of Northern Indiana. Registrations numbered about sixty besides the faculty, and there were many visitors.

The topic at the Bible Class conducted for the third time by the Rev. E. Ainger Powell, rector of St. Paul's Church, Evansville, was "The Making of the English Bible". Lectures were given on "The Making of the Old Testament", "The Making of the New Testament", "The Anglo-Saxon Versions", "John Wycliffe's Version", "Tyndale's New Testament", and "From Tyndale to Moffatt".

A general course on "Some Problems in Religion", intended to clarify certain intellectual difficulties which hinder many from accepting the teachings of the Christian religion, was given by Dr. Jared S. Moore, Professor of Philosophy, Western Reserve University, Cleveland, Ohio. A course to the clergy on "The Idea of God", also given by Dr. Moore, considered, first, the general theistic conception of God as at the same time transcendent of the world in His eternal reality, and immanent in the world in His works; as King and Father of men, and as at the same time Infinite and Personal; with a special defense of the idea of Divine Personality against some commonly offered objections. The latter and larger portion of the course was devoted to the specific Christian doctrine of the Holy Trinity; its historical background and its rationale; the importance of emphasizing more the Personality of the Holy Spirit; the relation between "Substance" and "Person", and between the "Person" and two "Natures" of our Lord; and the Incarnation and associated doctrines.

Miss Vera Noyes, Secretary of Religious Education of the Diocese of Chicago, conducted a class in Religious Education. The following subjects were touched upon: "The High Purpose of Religious Education", "A Continuous Program of Religious Education", "Answering the Needs of Each Age Level", "Goals to Be Reached by the Pupil", "Techniques to Be Mastered by the Teacher", and "Answering the Learners' Questions". On Sunday morning Miss Noyes conducted a demonstration Church School class, using methods with the children which were explained the next day to those who had observed.

The Mission Study Class was conducted by Mrs. Mary B. Gammack, U. T. O. Field Worker of the Woman's Auxiliary. The purpose of the class was primarily to prepare leaders for the Auxiliary text book for 1929, The New Africa, by Donald Frazer.

Deaconess Fuller's course on "Altar Guilds" showed that worship in a sanctuary and at an altar date from the earliest, pre-historic dawn of the life of mankind; that, in the evolution of religion, the service of Christian women, preparatory to the highest form of that worship, is a privilege without comparison in the history of womanhood. The essentials of this service are dependableness, reverence, a truly Catholic spirit of toleration with a friendly spirit of cooperation, making around the service such a home atmosphere as that in which Martha and Mary of Bethany served the Lord.

The Bishop of Northern Indiana served as Chaplain of the Conference, being Celebrant at the Daily Eucharists, and conducting the Sunset Services each day. At these services the sermons were delivered by the Rev. L. B. Ridgely, S. T. D., formerly Dean of the Central Theological School, Nanking, China.

A pageant was given Tuesday evening, the 26th, which had been worked out by the class in pageantry conducted by the Rev. Earl Ray Hart, LL. D., rector of Trinity Church, Michigan City, Diocesan President of the G. F. S. There were also conferences on Christian Nurture and Church School work, and upon other phases of Parish and Diocesan work, held by appointment with the Leaders.

The Conference was under the direction of the Rev. Cleon E. Bigler, of Kokomo, Ind., Chairman of the Executive Committee, and Mrs. Cleon E. Bigler, Chairman of Program Committee.

English Prayer Book.

The action of the House of Commons in again rejecting the revised Prayer Book has raised the question of the next step, the decision on which rests with the Bishops.

The alternatives which appear to be generally discussed are:

Will the Church now proceed to make the new (or 1927) book the law of the Church by giving it full canonical sanction? Or

Will it adopt the plan of the Bishop of Norwich, delete the disputed Communion Office, and agree to the remaining parts being passed as a relatively non-contentious measure.

The authority of the Bishops has been dealt a heavy blow by a second rebuff at the hands of the House of Commons, and the immediate difficulty will be to restrain individual clergymen from making use of portions of the new book, since it has the impressive moral sanction of the Bishops and is certified by them to involve no change of doctrine.

Before the Canterbury Diocesan Conference, Dr. Davidson, the Archbishop of Canterbury, announced that he would retire in 1930. This year marks his twenty-fifth anniversary as Archbishop.

Archbishops Issue Appeal.

Following the rejection of the Prayer Book Measure in the House of Commons, the Archbishops of Canterbury and York have issued the following appeal:

"The Prayer Book Measure has failed to obtain full Parliamentary sanction. Some of those who have eagerly supported it as a right step on the roadway to orderliness, to harmony, and to new freedom for active service at home and overseas, may be led by disappointment or irritation to advocate forthwith rash or irregular action. May we plead for quietness, for a little patience, and for abstention from any angry or unkindly word? The new responsibility laid upon the Bishops by tonight's vote is very grave. They are fully alive to it, and will, with the least possible delay, give such counsel or direction as is required. This must needs take a little time, and meanwhile, prayers will not be lacking that they may be guided to interpret aright God's will and purpose for the Church.

Fair and Warmer.

The statement is fair, perhaps a bit better than fair. Total receipts show a decrease from last year of $35,844.35 and only thirty-five Dioceses and districts are in the 100 per cent class as compared with forty-four last year, yet 87 per cent of the minimum due July 1 has been paid.

The weather is warmer. Some have started on vacations, others are dreaming about vacations to come. The missionary work of the Church takes no vacation. Ask your people to remember the Church at the Master's work while they are enjoying their rest.

May all your vacations be happy ones.

Call Special Convention of South Carolina.

Charleston, S. C.—A special convention for the election of a Bishop will be held in St. John's Church, Florence, on Tuesday, September 18, as the result of action taken by the Standing Committee in Charleston recently.

Besides this action, the Standing Committee adopted a resolution expressing the loss of the Diocese through the death of Bishop Guerry, and another extending its sympathy to the family of the Rev. J. H. Woodward, who committed suicide after inflicting the fatal wound upon Bishop Guerry.

Million Raised for St. Luke's.

The $3,556,500 fund for new facilities of the medical centre type for St. Luke's International Hospital in Tokyo has passed the million dollar mark. The fund was brought to this first objective by an anonymous gift of $100,000.

Of the total realized for the new plant $900,000 was raised in a previous campaign. The American Executive Committee has been reorganized for a new phase of the undertaking and now is composed of the Hon. George W. Wickersham, former United States Attorney General, chairman; Samuel Thorne, secretary; Thomas W. Lamont, treasurer; Edward F. Albee, Stephen Baker, William C. Breed, Norman H. Davis, Martin Egan, Lewis B. Franklin, Judge Augustus N. Hand, Robert C. Hill, Hon. Charles MacVeagh, American Ambassador to Japan; Samuel Mather, William Walker Orr, Percy R. Pyne, Sr., Hon. William J. Tally, Allen Wardwell, Dr. John W. Wood and Eugene C. Worden.

Florentine Choir.

From the Rev. John Castelli, Vicar of the Italian Church of San Salvatore, maintained by the Episcopal City Mission Society at 359 Broome Street, comes the following announcement:

The Benelli's Florentine Choir, "I Maestri Cantori", have a few open dates during July and August and is willing to cooperate with churches, societies and institutions for concerts, musicales, etc. For information wire or write Marchese Piero M. Petacci de Prossedi, Assistant Manager and Executive Secretary to the Florentine Choir, 204 West 109th Street, New York.

This choir gave a very exquisite concert at the Church of San Salvatore on the evening of June 29 for the benefit of the playground there. Singing in the handsome costumes of their native Florence, they gave to the beauty of their Italian program an old-world charm and loveliness.

Singing with them, under the direction of Sandro Benelli, was the distinguished soprano, Dora Domar, who has had a notable career at LaScale in Milan and in theatres of Vienna and St. Petersburg.

The Woman's Auxiliary at the General Convention.

The triennial meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary to the National Council has been called to meet in Washington, October 9 to 23. Each Diocesan branch is entitled to five representatives, and, as usual, visitors will be welcome at all sessions. Again, as in many former triennials, a Quiet Hour will be held on the first afternoon; the Corporate Communion with the presentation of the United Thank Offering on Thursday; a closing service on the last day, and—doing again what was done in New Orleans—a Day of Intercession will be held about the middle of the triennial.

Interesting plans have been made, some of which follow old familiar lines, but there are two new ones which it is believed will make the meetings both more interesting and more democratic. In the past most of the subjects suggested for discussion have come through the report of the Executive Secretary. In triennials before 1919 the suggestions did not come before the delegates until the report was presented at the first business meeting. Since then suggestions to be brought to the triennial have been considered first by the Executive Board and then been sent to the Diocesan branches six months before the time of meeting. It is believed that a very real improvement can be made in Washington by stressing two important features.

(1) Consideration at the triennial with the Departments of the National Council regarding the various phases and plans for which they are responsible. Since we are auxiliary to the National Council, this is necessarily our chief concern.

(2) The appointment of a committee to report findings based on suggestions and discussions of previous sessions as well as on suggestions contained in the Executive Secretary's report.

It is impossible to forecast every subject which may be brought up at the triennial by the delegates. Some subjects will be brought out only in meetings, and of course ample opportunity will be given for this, but in order that as much as possible may be known beforehand, the following statement has been sent out in order that branches may be informed of the general plan, which will be the basis of discussion.

General Plan.

I. Personal Religion and Evangelism (to be discussed with Bishop Murray and the Commission on Evangelism).

II. Missionary Problems Created by World Conditions (to be discussed with the secretaries of the Department of Missions).

III. Christianizing Relationships (to be discussed with the secretaries of the Department of Social Service).

(1) Home; (2) Social; (3) Church; (4) Industrial; (5) Racial; (6) International.

IV. Gifts (to be discussed with the secretaries of the Departments of Finance, Missions and Field).

(1) Principles of Stewardship; (2) Quota; (3) Advance Work; (4) The United Thank Offering; (5) Supplies.

V. Education (to be discussed with the secretaries of the Department of Religious Education).

(1) The Program of Study for Adults; (2) Plans for Cooperating in Work for College Women; (3) Plans for Cooperating in the Religious Education of Children.

VI. Publicity and Promotion (to be discussed with the secretaries of the Field and Publicity Departments).

(1) Program of Service; (2) Promotional Education; (3) Methods of Publicity; (4) Cooperation in Publicity.

VII. Workers and Training (to be discussed with the secretaries of the Department of Missions).

(1) Recruiting; (2) Training; (a) Tuttle House in Raleigh; (b) Windham House in New York; (c) Taylor Hall in Racine; (d) Summer Conferences; (3) Retiring Allowances.

VIII. Enlisting Others—

(1) Uninterested Women; (2) Younger Women; (3) Business and Professional Women.

In New Orleans study classes were planned for men and women and this arrangement is to develop in Washington into a still larger and more fully cooperative plan, a Training Institute.

The coming triennial should be the best the Woman's Auxiliary has ever known, and as one means of bringing this to pass, the Executive Board has prepared a leaflet, With Christ Where He Is, to be used between now and then. If copies of this leaflet have not been received from Diocesan officers, they can be procured from headquarters at 281 Fourth Avenue, New York. Ask for W. A. No. 43. The price is $1.50 per hundred.

Council of Diocese of Tokyo Elects Successor to Bishop Motoda.

Twenty-six clergy and thirty-eight delegates met for celebration of Holy Communion in Holy Trinity Church at 11 o'clock on St. Barnabas' Day. The Rev. I. Tagawa preached an impressive sermon from 1 Sam. 16:7. The Bishop was assisted at Holy Communion by the Rev. Y. Matsui and the Rev. S. Yamada as gospeler and epistoler. The Council met for preliminary routine business in the parish house, after which they met in the church for the election, first singing the Veni Creator and offering silent prayer for the guidance of the Holy Spirit.

The ballot box was placed on a small table before the altar, with a clerical and a lay teller standing at either end of the table. There were no nominating speeches. As the secretary called the roll of the clergy each one came forward and placed his ballot in the box, and after a reverence to the altar returned to his seat. After the clergy had balloted the roll of the lay delegates was called and their ballots were cast in like manner as the clergy. The Rev. Yonetaro Matsui was elected by a large majority of both clergy and laity on the fifth ballot. As soon as the election was announced the Bishop called Mr. Matsui to the altar rail, and after praying for God's blessing and guidance for the Bishop-elect, presented him to the congregation, whom he briefly addressed with much emotion. With the signing of the canonical credentials the Council adjourned.

The consent of a majority of the House of Bishops in Japan is all that is necessary to confirm the election. The consent of the Standing Committee is not required as in America. The date of consecration will probably be St. James' Day, July 25.

Mr. Matsui is about sixty years of age. He was baptized in 1888 and was educated for the ministry at Holy Trinity Divinity School, Osaka. After serving several years as instructor in the Divinity School he was sent for postgraduate study to Wickliff College, Toronto. After his return to Japan he was called as rector, some twenty years ago, to St. Paul's Church, Tokyo, of which he is still the beloved and honored pastor. The prayers of our friends in America are earnestly requested for God's guidance and blessing for the Bishop-elect.

University of the South.

At the sixtieth commencement exercises of the University of the South, Sewanee, Tenn., held on June 12, 1928, there were awarded in the College of Arts and Sciences twenty-five Bachelor of Arts degrees, fourteen Bachelor of Science degrees, and one Master of Arts degree; in the Theological Department two Bachelor of Divinity degrees were awarded.

The honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity was awarded to the Rt. Rev. Thomas Casady, Missionary Bishop of Oklahoma; the Rev. James Gamewell Class, Archdeacon of South Florida, Orlando, Fla.; the Rev. Charles Clingman, rector of the Church of the Advent, Birmingham, Ala.; and the Rev. Henry Erskine Hill, provost of St. Andrew's Cathedral, Aberdeen, Scotland.

The honorary degree of Doctor of Civil Law was awarded to Mr. Warren Kearny, of New Orleans, La., and to United States Senator Lawrence D. Tyson, of Knoxville, Tenn.

The honorary degree of Doctor of Literature was awarded to Mr. Archibald R. Hoxton, Principal of the Episcopal High School, of Alexandria, Va.

The Rev. Caleb R. Stetson, rector of Trinity Parish, New York City, and Bishop Robert E. Campbell, of Liberia, were present and had conferred on them the degree of Doctor of Divinity which had been awarded in previous years.

Laymen's Association Meeting.

The Annual Laymen's Association Meeting of the Rappahannock Valley Convocation took place on Thursday, July 12, at St. Margaret's Summer School in Tappahannock, Va.

The meeting was outlined in the last Virginia Churchman. This meeting had as its object not a call for money, but a call for service, for individual spiritual uplift to rise to a higher plane of individual usefulness and a deeper sense of individual responsibility for service.

The meeting was opened with a Corporate Communion in St. John's Church, with prayers for strength and consecration in the work.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop.

Rev. G. Otis Mead Resigns Christ Church, Roanoke.

At the morning service on Sunday, July 8th, the Rev. George Otis Mead announced his resignation as rector of Christ Church, Roanoke, effective August 6th next.

Following Mr. Mead's brief statement Mr. C. Edwin Michael, Senior Warden, made a short address to the congregation in the course of which he expressed in a touching way the love of the vestry and people of Christ Church for Mr. Mead and their deep regret that on account of the state of his health he has found it necessary to resign. Mr. Michael also spoke of Mr. Mead's popularity in Roanoke and the intimate association he has with the various movements for the beterment and uplift of the community. Mr. Mead's resignation had been formally presented to and accepted by the vestry at its meeting on Monday night, July 2nd.

Mr. Mead has not enjoyed the best of health for several years and for the greater part of the past twelve months he has been taking a rest in the hope that he might rebuild his strength. This hope, however, has not been realized and he felt that he must surrender his charge.

Under Mr. Mead's leadership since his coming to the work in April, 1913, Christ Church has experienced a splendid progress. A concrete evidence of this is the handsome plant—church and parish house at the corner of Washington Avenue and Franklin Road, S. W. The church is to be consecrated on August 5th next.

Mr Mead has been one of the most active men in the work of the Diocese. Before the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia was formed in 1919 he was prominent in the home mission work of the then Diocese of Southern Virginia. Since the formation of the new Diocese he has been several years a member of the Diocesan Executive Board, as he is at present. He is also one of the Trustees of the Boys' Home at Covington and represented this Diocese in the last two sections of the General Convention.

He is also prominent in civic affairs and is an enthusiastic member of the Roanoke Rotary Club.

Christ Church has at present a communicant list of 574 and its property is valued at $130,000.

In adopting its resolution accepting Mr. Mead's resignation the vestry expressed its great regret at losing him and the hope that many blessings may come to him and to Mrs. Mead and that he may soon be restored to health and strength.

Deaconess Adams Retires.

After twenty years' active and faithful service as a Deaconess in what is now the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia, Deaconess Blanche Adams has given up her work as missionary at Keokee, in Lee County, and in future will make her home at No. 26 Elm Avenue, S. W., Roanoke, Virginia.

"The Little Deaconess" is one of the best known and most beloved women workers in this Diocese. Born in England, Miss Blanche Adams came to America in 1893 and settled in Radford, Virginia. She remained there for about fourteen years, serving most of the time as a teacher in private families.

On Mrch 30, 1908, Bishop Tucker set her apart as a Deaconess and in August of the same year she was appointed as assistant to Deaconess Charlotte, who was in charge of St. Andrew's Mission at the thriving little coal mining town of Keokee. Shortly after this Deaconess Charlotte married and Deaconess Adams succeeded her in 1909 as Missionary-in-Charge. Trained as a nurse before she left England, the Deaconess has done a wonderful work at Keokee, where she has remained during all of her splendid ministry.

The mine at Keokee is now closed and the industrial work of the community being at a low ebb and the population of the place very much smaller than it was, Bishop Jett has decided to close the mission there; certainly for the time being. Lee County, the farthest to the southwest in the State of Virginia, is now entirely without any contact with the Episcopal Church, except as occasional services may be held in the county from time to time by visiting clergymen.

Activity at Wytheville.

At St. John's Church, of which the Rev. Devall L. Gwathmey is rector, the organ was recently completely overhauled and an electric blower was installed.

On St. John Baptist's Day Mr. Gwathmey celebrated the seventh anniversary of his coming to the parish. The early celebration of the Holy Communion was well attended, esepcially by those who have been confirmed during Mr. Gwathmey's ministry. At the eleven o'clock service the rector accepted and dedicated a cross given in memory of the late Miss Ella R. Goodwin, a devoted and saintly member of the parish. The cross is of copper, covered with gold leaf and will surmount the cupola of the church.

Clergyman Located at Dante.

The Rev. J. Jaquelin Ambler, who graduated this year at Virginia Seminary and on May 1st was ordained to the diaconate, has been assigned by Bishop Jett to work in the Associate Missions Field with his headquarters at Dante, in Russell County. He entered upon his duties there on June 14th.

The Rev. Alfred C. Bussingham, who has been taking special work at Virginia Seminary during the past year, has resumed his activities as Deacon in Charge of St. Peter's Church, Roanoke, Virginia. He and Mrs. Bussingham are now established in their new home at No. 1701 Melrose Avenue, N. W., Roanoke.

Virginia Seminary Students at Work During Vacation.

Mr. George Purnell Gunn, of Lynchburg, a Candidate for Holy Orders in this Diocese, is serving under special appointment by the Bishop as minister in charge of the churches at Altavista, Evington and Gladys, all in Campbell County, during the summer months. While engaged in this work Mr. Gunn and his mother are making their home in the rectory at Altavista.

Mr. William Charles Baxter, also a Candidate for Holy Orders, is serving as minister to the churches at Buena Vista, Glasgow and Natural Bridge Station, with residence at Buena Vista.

Mr. John A. Winslow, of the Diocese of Southern Ohio, served during the month of June at St. Thomas' Church, Abingdon, Va. This, however, was not Mr. Winslow's first experience in Southwestern Virginia, as last summer he was engaged as one of the assistants of the Rev. H. H. Young in the Associate Missions Field.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rt. Rev. Thomas J. Garland, D. D., Bishop.

1680 Anniversary of Old Swedes Church.

The 168th anniversary of Christ Church (Old Swedes) was observed Sunday, June 24. The church, located on River Road, Upper Merion township, had special services for the day, arranged by Rev. James Hart Lamb, Jr., rector.

Coupled with this old edifice are many events which have gone down in history. The church was completed and dedicated in the year 1760—and that on occasion, the sermon was delivered by Rev. Dr. Charles Magnus Wranger, who had been sent to this country by the Archbishop of Upsal, Sweden, the previous year.

At the time of its dedication Christ Church was connected with St. James Church, Kingsessing, Old St. David's, Radnor and under the care of the mother church, Gloria Dei. In the year 1843 Christ Church separated from these churches and became independent.

The last Swedish rector of the church was Rev. Nicholas Collin, of Upsal, Sweden. The first clergyman from the Episcopal call was Rev. Edwin N. Lightner. Since that time the church has had but eleven rectors, including the present rector.

Christ (Old Swedes) has had in its long years of service many distinguished visitors from all parts of the world. George Washington and General Anthony Wayne, while encamped at Valley Forge, worshipped in this old church.

Prince Oscar, of Sweden, and representatives of the Royal Navy. In 1876 while stationed on a vessel in the Delaware River, near Philadelphia, visited the church in Upper Merion.

At the close of the Philadelphia Centennial in 1876 this delegation presented to Christ Swedes flags of Sweden which may be viewed by visitors to the church, June 24.

A baptismal font was sent from the people of Sweden with the inscription on the bowl, "Sweden's Blessing on Sweden's Children".

Another gift was the memorial altar of Caen stone, "To the Glory of God, in loving memory of George Washington Holstein, M. D. 1820-1908." The choir room was also a gift.

Many improvements are being made since Mr. Lamb's restorship. The church interior has been renovated and the outside has been improved. The old church yard, with its quaint stones, is being kept in good condition. Hedges have been planted. And those who visit the historic spot realize the important place the church takes in the community and country today.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop

WASHINGTON.

Edward Gabler, the new rector of Christ Church, Washington Parish, assumed his duties there on Sunday, July 8, conducting the 7:30 and 11 A. M. services. He follows there the Rev. Calvert Buck, who recently resigned to take the position of Superintendent of the Episcopal Eye, Ear and Throat Hospital.

Mr. Gabler comes to Washington from Garden City, N. Y., where he was assistant to the dean of the Cathedral of the Incarnation. He was graduated from the General Theological Seminary in 1912, took charge of All Saints' Church, Scotch Plains, N. Y., in 1913, and from 1914 to 1918 was vicar of St. Mark's Chapel, New York City. From 1918 to 1925 he served as assistant at St. George's Church, New York. In 1923 he received the degree of S. T. B., General Theological Seminary, New York. From 1925 to 1928 he has served as assistant to the dean at the Cathedral of the Incarnation, Garden City, N. Y. This year he was elected President of the Alumni and Former Students' Association of St. Stephen's College.

Mr. Gabler's work has been distinguished for his success with young people's activities.

Church Workers' Conference.

An unusually large attendance of Washington Church Workers is expected at the Blue Mountain Conference of Church Workers, to be held at Hood College, Frederick, Md., according to registrations coming in to Rev. A. A. McCallum, registrar for the Diocese. The Conference will be in session from July 9 to July 21 and will include fifteen courses of intensive educational work. A school of religious drama will be a feature of the Conference and the social life of the students will also be consciously planned for. Evening lectures at 8 o'clock are open to the public, and this may include some Washington persons who will motor to Frederick for the evening.

Convention "Forerunner".

The third number of the "Forerunner of the General Convention" has made its appearance, and, like its predecessors, is an interesting publication. It is published under the authority of the Bishop of Washington and the Diocesan Committee of the General Convention, by Canon Robert Johnston, Canon D. Wellington Curran and Mr. Hugh T. Nelson, General Secretary of the Convention Committee.

It contains pictures and accounts of places of interest in Washington—perhaps a sort of lure to far-away people to come and see the wonders of their nation's capital city.

Short sketches, like-word pictures, of clergymen at work in the Diocese and others who will visit here give an intimation of the great gathering in the fall of the Convention.

Historic churches in Southern Maryland and some of the landmarks of interest there are described, being an important part of the life of the Diocese of Washington.

Questions which will be paramount in the deliberations of the Convention are dealt with also. The question of the Thirty-nine Articles is discussed from two opposing viewpoints, by Rev. George C. Foley, D. D., and Rev. Carl E. Grammar, S. T. D. Affiliating organizations to meet in convention in Washington are also discussed. An article about the Woman's Auxiliary, by Mrs. William D. Hurd, and one by the director of the Church Periodical Club in Washington, give some insight of the work outside the Convention itself. These and other worth-while contributions make the "Forerunner" good reading, and it is intimated that the next number, appearing in September, will equal, if not surpass, those which have gone before. Copies of this publication may be procured from Mr. Hugh T. Nelson, 927 Fifteenth Street, N. W.

Church Cornerstone Laid.

The cornerstone of the new St. Stephen's Church, including the Chapel of the Incarnation, Sixteenth and Newton Streets, Washington, was laid by Bishop James A. Freeman, of the Diocese of Washington, July 5. The chapel is a memorial to the Rev. William Tayloe Snyder, who was long rector of the Church of the Incarnation. The Rev. Dr. George Fiske Dudley, rector of St. Stephen's, celebrated the thirty-fifth anniversary of his rectorship last week.

O God, who hast prepared for those who love Thee such good things as pass man's understanding; Pour into our hearts such love toward Thee, that we, loving Thee above all things, may obtain Thy promises, which exceed all that we can desire, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

TO HIM THAT HATH.

F. R. Stone.

We have a little light!
Oh, let Thy radiance reach each nook within,
So we may see and hate
The hideous thing that tempts us into sin.

We have a little faith!
Oh, multiply that faith a thousandfold!
Increase our little love,
So fill our hearts that they may ne'er grow cold.

And for our mite of joy,
Oh, give Thy joy that naught can take away;
For intermittent peace,
The peace that passeth knowledge, send, we pray.

The Measure of a Life.

Louis Deschamps.

In an old English churchyard there is a tombstone inscribed: "Here Lies John Spicer, Born a Man, Died a Grocer". Such an epitaph suggests that the measure of a life is often in terms of the task to which one gave himself. Business, profession, or occupation do require the greater part of one's life, yet who would be satisfied to have his life remembered by that alone, as if there were no greater significance of human life at large? To measure lives by purely human standards, as is thoughtlessly done, is to make such perishable things as wealth and fame the standards of merit. On the other hand, to measure lives by spiritual standards is for many a vague and remote idealism, resembling fatalism in that it suggests that a life may be what it may and yet fit into some scheme of religious significance. And so many people lose the inspiration of their own life, blindly hoping amid the daily work that the profound and imponderable question of ultimate measure will take care of itself.

Much needless worry and harmful bitterness would be avoided by striving religiously to derive definite and satisfying conclusions as to the measure of one's life. Great discoveries of science fade in importance beside the experience of a humble Christian beginning to learn the meaning of such a truth as "Whosoever would save his life will lose it, but whosoever would lose his life will save it." God has revealed Himself to man, and a great purpose of religion, Christianity above all, is to give every individual the inspiration and the joy of knowing the measure of his life, the pride and power for good that only an invincible faith can impart. In times of unbelief and skepticism the fact that the essence of real religion is a reverent inward experience from a spiritual vision seems unintelligible to many profound minds and philosophers. Yet little children exceed them in the wisdom of love and faith.

Apart from trade, profession, or daily occupation, there is a common purpose of mortal existence. Regardless of wealth, poverty, obscurity, or misfortune, each individual has within himself the potential knowledge of the divine measure of his life according to his special talent. King and pauper have a common allegiance to God. There are inspiring ideals of manhood and service to fellowmen that are universally effective in every walk of life. It is a world-wide citizenship of all who would make prevail the finer, nobler ideals of Christian living. Every one should be more than an individual working out his own salvation—he should have a mind for the great humanity of which he is a member, an inspiring consciousness of universal duty as "heir of all the ages, foremost in the ranks of time". Narrowness of outlook, petty selfishness, and bitterness vanish in the invigorating atmosphere of such thoughts. Let all who envy; who are embittered with the inequalities of the imperfect social order; who fear the prosperity of wickedness; who disdain the humble duties of their place in the world—let all these follow the human career to its inevitable end and realize that the measure of a life is the same to all: ". . . do justice, love mercy, and walk humbly before thy God."

In the toil and turmoil of work and pleasure, it is every one's duty to keep open one channel of thought for life in the large, life universal, life eternal in God. The brotherhood of man to the glory of God should be a part of every one's prayer. In varied contacts with others it is good to cultivate and cherish a charitable attitude toward all mankind. Let us not be born men, only to die grocers, lawyers, clerks, and business men alone. To provide prosperity and comfort for loved ones is worthy of efforts that demand the greater part of a life, yet thehre is a warning in the words: "Seek first the Kingdom of God . . ." The measure of a life! Sometimes it is immeasurable. The poet Bailey caught the vision when he wrote:

"We live in deeds, not years—in thoughts, not breaths—
In feelings, not in figures on a dial—
We should count time by heart-throbs.
He most lives,
Who thinks most—feels the noblest—acts the best.

Divine Grace is not Static.

While the mystery of the Trinity is utterly beyond our comprehension, we know through faith the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost, three in person, one in essence. Apart from direct connection with the Triune God, there are no uplifting forces, nor saving truths, nor instruments of redemption. Apart from God and His infinite, gracious will, there is no nature human or material. Through Him and for Him. the universe and all that is in it exists and continues.

Because God's highest attribute is that of person, His will is directed toward persons. Everything else of which we know finds its real value only in relation to persons. Abstracts exist only in thought; they have no reality. Persons survive. Persons inherit eternal life. Persons are so much like unto God, their Maker, that He can and does manifest Himself to them and bestows divine grace upon them. Through grace we know Him, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom He hath sent.

But divine grace is never separated from its source and is efficient only to serve persons. It comes from the living God to living beings. It cannot be isolated from its personal source and its personal objective. You cannot confine it within the covers of a book, nor enshrine it upon an altar, nor bestow it upon a relic, nor bind it into a form or a symbol. The grace of God is never static.

We do not seek it; we seek Him; and while we find Him through the Word and commune with Him according to His Word, and while the Word and sacraments are the instruments by which we attain unto His presence and obtain the life of His Kingdom, we reverence Word and sacraments because through them we have Him. Him only, the Triune God we adore.—Lutheran.

Power for Self-Sacrifice.

In New Brunswick the tides rise very high. A friend of mine whose life was spent in the region of St. Johns tells of a river near there which flows with tremendous force into the sea. When the tide rises, however, there begins a fierce battle between the river, drawn down by gravitation, earth's force, and the tides, rising under the influence of the moon, heaven's force. At length the tide proves to be the stronger, and gradually the fresh waters are forced back by the waters of the sea. The salt water has been known to flow up the river a distance of eighty-four miles. As the only force that could turn back the river is the force of the sea, so the only power to turn back the currents of our sin and selfishness is the tide of God's life and love.—S. S. Times.

On the Other Side of Death.

Part II.

All who live lives of loving faithfulness, ministering to others in Christ's name, shall have reward according to their works. In this sense their works will follow them. Then the works of believers follow them in their character. Everything we do in this world leaves its impression upon our own life. This is the deeper meaning of Paul's word: "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." The man himself shall reap. "He that soweth unto his own flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth unto the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap eternal life." The reaping will be in the man's own life and character. The things we do affect others, but they also affect ourselves. Our Lord said too: "It is more blessed to give than to receive." Your gifts bless others, but your giving writes its record of divine beauty and produces its enlargement in your own soul. In this sense also will our works follow us. We ourselves when we enter heaven will carry in our own souls all the things we have done upon the earth. The Revised Version seems to suggest this meaning: "Their works follow with them."

Once again, our works fill follow us in the sense that we shall continue in them in heaven. Heaven is not a place of rest from service. We shall rest from our labors—that is, from all that is painful and burdensome and sad, but our "works" shall follow with us. We shall not cease doing them. Here is a mother who has been loving and interceding for her child on earth. Do you suppose she will cease doing that "work" when she goes into heaven? Will she not love the child truly, tenderly, as ever? Will she not think about it, plan for it, talk to Christ about it, even more than she did when she was on the earth? Those who are busy here in Christ's service, doing good to men in His name, will in some way continue their "works" in heaven. We wonder sometimes why certain useful persons are taken away from their work when they are needed so much. They are not taken from their work—"their works follow with them". I am sure that heaven will be a place of work for Christ. We shall be as the angels, and they are forever busy in the service of their Lord, helping weary souls, delivering tempted ones, guarding children. We shall be like Christ, and Christ is ever doing good. Love shall be perfect in our hearts, and love cannot but serve; it must be ever giving, doing, ministering. Here we only learn to work for Christ, only train our powers for His service; it is there we shall really work.

We have one glimpse in the Scriptures of the ministry of redeemed saints. On the transfiguration mount we see Moses and Elijah, who had come to this earth to comfort and strengthen our blessed Lord Himself, as He set out for His cross. At His temptation and again in the garden, angels ministered to Him, but here the ministrants were redeemed ones from heaven. They talked with Jesus about His work and His sufferings, and cheered Him for the painful journey. May not this be a glimpse, a revealing, of what other redeemed ones may be called to do in heaven? May we not be sent to this earth to help, to comfort, to strengthen, to bless weary ones in their danger or their sorrow? What our work shall be we know not, but we are sure that our work done on earth shall follow us to heaven—that we shall there continue to do the things we have learned to do here.

Note, finally, the emphasis which is put upon the statements in this verse. I do not recall any other passage which is so emphasized. First, it is declared by a voice from heaven. Only a few times have voices spoken thus from the skies. The commandments were given thus. Thus too was our Lord's Sonship declared. It shows the importance of this revelation that it was made by a voice from heaven. Second, it was made by the Holy Spirit. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord: yea, saith the Spirit." It was not an angel who said it, but the Spirit Himself. Third, it was to be written. "Write, Blessed are the dead." The truth was too precious to be left merely in tradition; it must be written down among the sacred revelations from God, so that all shall have it.

It ought to comfort us concerning our beloved ones who have died in the Lord. Their hearts shall never have another pang. No thorn shall ever pierce their feet. They rest from their labors. The reward of their toils and services is gathering about them. Why should we not rejoice in their blessedness?

Then this revealing ought to put new hope into our own hearts. Death ought not to have terrors for us, if these things are true. It is not the end of life; it is promotion to a new sphere of life. It is not away from Christ; it is to come yet nearer to Him. It is not into darkness and mystery and loneliness, but into blessedness. It is not the laying down of our work, but is to larger spheres of service. When Austin Phelps was dying he said, "Now I begin to live". Oh, blessed life immortal! Then we shall be free from the infirmities that fetter us, the chains that shackle us. Out of darkness into marvelous light!

Remember, we are making now our own heaven. The life there will be the outcome, the harvest, the reward, of the life here. Let us be earnest, diligent, faithful, in our Lord's work in this world, and then our reward in glory shall be rich and blessed, and we shall go from toilsome, painful service to service of joy, of praise, before the face of the King. 'Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth: yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; for their works follow with them."—Sunday School Times.

THE LOVE OF CHRIST!

What is Thy love, O Christ? A dew
That falls to comfort and renew;
A sun that flushes into flame
My heart whene'er I hear Thy name.

What is Thy love, O Christ? Ah, this:
A partnership of joy and bliss;
Communion full of tenderness,
And gentle as a child's caress.

What is Thy love, O Christ? A wall
About me to protect my all;
A sword to drive my sin away;
A shield to guard me every day.

What is Thy love, O Christ? Ah, me—
I cannot tell; it's like the sea,
So boundless wide, it has no shore,
We sail its depths for evermore.

—George H. Lorah.

"No Children Taken."

There is something more than hardness and selfishness in the desire that people have, in choosing their summer home, to go where but few children are taken. One who has had to choose the smaller hotels and boarding houses of our country or seaside resorts, who has had experience of a summer in which the children are allowed "to be happy in their own way"—which means to make the place a bedlam, to make the parlors and the halls their playground, to indulge in unlimited screeching and yelling at their games, to daub their little faces in the process of cramming their little stomachs at the table—will sympathize with the landlord who declines to fill his house with children.

And yet childhood, in the abstract, is lovely. There is no reason why there should not be in America, as well as in other countries, jolly, happy, well-bred, and well-behaved children. There are no brighter children than our own, none more sensitive and susceptible to the best influences. We have lovely families, where the child-life is regulated not only by affection, but by kindly common sense. The poor little things may be shunned, but it is their elders who are to be blamed for the state of things that robs childhood of its sweetness and charm, and changes the love that would naturally go out toward children if not into positive dislike, into thankfulness when they are out of sight. It is the grown people who are the sinners in this whole matter. If we are happier by allowing our children to become torments to everybody but ourselves, our selfishness will naturally stand in the way of any change; but if we have any apprehension of what awaits the children in the future, if we who love them so dearly would secure for them the love of other people, a change is surely needed, and we ought to teach them quite early in life that there are other people in the world to be attracted or repelled, whose dislike will be their punishment or whose love their best reward.—Selected.

SPENT ARROWS.

Marie W. Vandegrift.

Old Time, the archer, draws his bow
And sights his shining mark.
He seeks with slow deliberate aim
Our venturous mounting wings to maim,
Yet here and there he finds one blent
Of flint and flaming fire
Who will not yield his heart's desire,
And so, his arrows spent
He turns with discontented sigh,
Another target needs must try.

"Our Father."

If our Lord had never spoken other words than the opening words of His immortal prayer, "Our Father", He would have taught men more about God than all other teachers in history. He it is who makes the divine fatherhood actual, real, compelling. If God be our Father, it is enough. Do you recall how your father stood to you in your thought in days of childhood? He was as a God to you. The passing years revealed the fact that he had his limitations of power, or wisdom, and perchance you may have thought sometimes of good will. But Jesus reveals a fatherhood infinite in interest, in goodness, in wisdom, in love, in power. —Selected.

A TRUST SONG.

Mary E. Jones.

"He shall cover thee with His feathers and under His wings shalt thou trust" (Isaiah 91:4).

"Under His wings" we are safe, I said,
Sheltered in sunshine and rain.
"Under His wings," a bird overhead
Eechoed my thought back again.
A little brown bird on her nest in the tree
In the hush of the twilight sang softly to me.

Waiting till morning I bide in my nest,
Rough though the east wind may blow,
Under the wings of my mother I rest
Gently I rock to and fro.
Hidden and safe 'neath her feathers, you see.
Trust is the lesson she's singing to me.

Under His wings thou hast come to trust.
His work thou hast striven to do.
Under His wings then He will and He must
In tender love watch over you.
So sweet is His promise I cannot but sing
God keepeth His loved ones safe under His wing.

I was awakened the other morning about four o'clock by a little voice just behind my bed, asking for a drink. I got the little lad a drink and he lay quiet a moment and then he said, "Father, may I sing myself to sleep"? And I said, "Yes, dear, go ahead". But soon he got up so much enthusiasm that I told him he would better stop, or none of the rest of us could sleep. Then he was quiet awhile, but soon I heard his little voice again in the perfect stillness of the night, "Father, have you got your face turned toward me"? And I said, "Yes, little boy", and the darkness was the light of day to him".—Robert E. Speer.

"CONSIDER THE LILIES OF THE FIELD."

Flowers preach to us if we will hear:—
The rose saith in the dewy morn,
"I am most fair;
Yet all my loveliness is born
Upon a thorn."
The poppy saith amid the corn:
"Let but my scarlet head appear
And I am held in scorn;
Yet juice of subtle virtue lies
Within my cup of curious dyes."
The lilies, say: "Behold how we Preach without words of purity."
The violets whisper from the shade
Which their own leaves have made:
"Men scent our fragrance on the air,
Yet take no heed
Of humble lessons we would read."

But not alone the fairest flowers:
The merest grass
Along the roadside where we pass,
Lichen and moss and sturdy weed,
Tell of His love who sends the dew,
The rain and sunshine, too,
To nourish one small seed.

—Christina Rossetti.

Christ and Nature.

Christ loved nature, and He teaches us of God's loving care in providing thus for our bodily needs. The beauty of the flowers comes from the perfect Father who causes the seed to grow and the blossoms to appear and the fruit to ripen. He has a message for us in every flower and tree. We need not worry, but we should pray, as thus declaring our faith in God "from whom all good things do come". From the living beauty comes a call to that beauty of character which God alone can give. From the sown seed comes the assurance that our use of the means of grace will surely bring the harvest of loving faith in word and deed. We are to grow, and the same Father who brings these spring days will bless our daily living and make us good children, redeemed by Christ and made fruitful by the Holy Spirit. Our part is to trust and obey. God's never-failing part is to give the increase.—Rev. Floyd W. Tomkins, D. D., in The Living Church.

Out of the Storm.

When Margaret Chester opened the front door the snow blew into her face, almost blinding her.

"Oh, dear!" she said to her younger brother. "It is a terrible storm! I am sure it is the worst we have had this winter. I wish father and mother were home. But they won't be here until dark—they had to go into the city to do some shopping and the train will not be in for a long time yet."

Margaret's eyes had lost their usual merry twinkle, and she closed the door slowly. She did not like the feel of the house, with no one there but herself and Walter, her two years' younger brother. She had been brave enough when Mr. and Mrs. Chester had started out; and had said she would look after the home during their absence, but it was different now with the storm raging outside. It seemed so lonely and friendless.

After gazing soberly out of the window for some time, the two children turned to their playthings, and in the interest of the village they began to build on the dining room floor forgot their uneasiness. It was great fun, making cardboard stores and houses; a cardboard box was utilized to construct a splendid station, and Walter had his mechanical train in its proper place in front of the station platform. Altogether the village and its surroundings were progressing finely, and the afternoon was quickly coming to a close.

"This is going to be a fine store when I have it all finished," said Margaret. "I have the windows and doors cut now, and it is all done but putting a sign over the front. This is to be the main street where it is, and—"

She stopped abruptly, and listened to a faint knocking.

"That sounds like some one knocking at the door," she said. "But it can't be, for no one would come here in this storm today."

"It is a knock." Walter bent his head to one side. "It is a knock, I am sure it is. Listen, Margaret! It is louder and louder."

Margaret rose from the floor and went to the front window.

"There is some one at the door," she whispered to Walter, peering through a crack she had made by lifting the curtain slightly. "And, Walter, it is a man! A great big man. And I don't know who it is."

"Mother said we were not to open the door to any one unless we knew them," Walter whispered back. "Maybe he's a burglar, or a bank robber, or a tramp."

"He hardly looks like a tramp." Margaret craned her neck to have a nearer view of the broad shoulders. "He is dressed most too well for that, though, of course, one cannot tell very much with all that snow on him. But he might be a des—perado, yes, I guess that is what he is."

Meanwhile the knocking proceeded with energy and vehemance. Whoever was at the door was determined to enter.

Margaret and Walter kept still, and watched. They were not going to have a desperado, as Margaret had termed the man, come into their house, if they could help it.

Suddenly Margaret bethought herself of the back door, which she had left unlocked.

"Oh, dear! He may take a notion to try the kitchen door. We must go and lock it."

At once they hurried to the rear of the house and turned the key to the door. Then, as they were half way through the pantry, they heard footsteps stumbling through the drifted snow on the back porch, and presently a resounding knock rattled the panels of the kitchen door.

"Oh, dear!" exclaimed Margaret. "It is a des-perado, I am sure it is! What shall we do?"

"Let us catch him," proposed Walter. "Let us catch him and tell the police."

Margaret shook her head. She had no desire to try anything so daring. Her one thought was for protection for her brother and herself.

"We must go next door and tell them that a terrible man is trying to get in," she said. "Come on, Walter! Put on your things and we'll go out the front door and it will latch behind us. We'll go before he comes back from hammering on the back door."

They donned their coats and toques, and slipped out into the storm. The wind nearly took their breath away, and it seemed a long, long way to the street.

Their next door neighbor did not live very far; at least it appeared a considerable distance to the children, when they had to face the storm. But they pulled their toques father over their foreheads, and struggled bravely on. Before going many yards Margaret turned around to see if she could see the man who had frightened them. Yes! There he was on the veranda at the front and was endeavoring to open the window that belonged to the cloak room off the hall.

"Oh, Walter; he is going to climb in through the window! I am sure he is. Let us hurry!"

They tried to run, but the snow was too deep, and the wind too strong. They had to go step by step and use all their strength to make any headway.

'My! But I am glad we came out," said Walter, puffing with his efforts. "I would like to catch him, but I'd rather not be there to do it. Perhaps he will catch himself, like a mouse does in a trap, and be there when we go back. But, Margaret, I don't think we had better go back until father and mother come, do you?"

"No," agreed his sister. "We will wait for them. They will not be long now, for it is almost train time." She turned in from the street. They had reached their neighbor's house, and were soon inside telling their story.

"A terrible man," Margaret ended her recital. "He is a great, big, huge man, and we didn't let him in."

Margaret and Walter waited until they heard the whistle of the train that was bringing their parents home, and would have gone to meet them, but the kindly neighbor, alone with her small baby, insisted that they remain until her husband returned, when he would escort them. She was not willing for the children to go out into the storm and darkness, especially when they had told such a disturbing story of the stranger at their home.

"He will be here any minute now. You have your things on ready to go with him when he comes," she said to them.

Shortly after, the man of the house returned, and piloted the children through the snow drifts. He went with them to their door, and they almost collided with Mr. Chester, who came hurrying out.

"Why, Margaret and Walter! Where have you been. Your mother and I have only now returned and you were not here. We were alarmed about you."

"Oh, father! A man—a terrible man—a des-perado was trying to get into the house, and we went to tell about it. He banged at the back door and at the front door, but we would not open for him. Then he tried to get in the window." Margaret paused, out of breath.

'And we wanted to catch him," put in Walter. "But we were too 'fraid to stay here and do it. Perhaps he caught himself, like a mouse does. Perhaps he got in the window and couldn't get out."

By this time they were inside the hall, and there, in the doorway leading to the living room stood a tall, broad-shouldered man, divested of his coat and hat, and apparently very much at home.

"Oh, Uncle Harry!" cried Margaret. "Oh, Uncle Harry! Where did you come from?" She ran to give her uncle a hug.

"Out of the storm," was the good-natured reply. "And if you young rascals had only opened the door when I knocked and knocked, I would not have been obliged to climb in that undersized window—nearly got stuck in it, too."

Margaret and Walter opened their eyes in amazement. "And were you the des-perado, Uncle Harry?" asked Margaret.

"Yes. I fancy I am. I came on a surprise visit, and finding no one at home, at least there seemed to be no one, I decided to enter the best way I could, and wait here, instead of out in the storm."

"Oh!" For a minute that was all the children could say. They had had no idea that the stranger was their uncle and had not recognized him in the swirling snow. Then Margaret said: "I am so sorry we did not open the door. If we had only known who you were we would have. But mother said not to let a person we did not know come in."

"You did quite right," her uncle replied. "Your mother's advice was good, and you were only obeying orders. That is the proper thing to do. It just happened that I came along today, and it might have been some one whom it would not have been wise to let in."—Junior World.

A WATER LILY.

E. G.

Golden-Hearted water lily
Floating in the sun,
Lifting up your petals
Toward God's Holy One—
Breathe the secret to us,
Tell us how you keep
Your petals shining brightly
While mud is at your feet?

The rains they wash my petals,
And then at night they fold
O'er my heart, dear one,
That is of purest gold.
It's what we pray and think
That keeps us pure and white—
To live the best we can
In God's Holy sight.

The Squirrel's Nest.

Sometimes we think that birds are the only wild creatures that build nests, but we are forgetting a large number of our near neighbors. The pretty gray squirrels that become so tame in the city parks are really famous nest-builders. I have seen them at work gathering branches and carrying them into the tree-tops for a summer home while many people passed quite near them. They show no fear of the curious crowd, but keep steadily at their work.

The summer home of the squirrels is a very important place, for it is to hold the tiny baby squirrels until they are big enough to go about. So the parents fashion this nest with much care. They lay a foundation of coarse twigs, which they cut with their own sharp teeth. Inside this outer layer of sticks they place several layers of coarse leaves; then they line all with strips of bark cut very finely. Over the top they place a roof of leaves, arranged like shingles, to keep out the rain, and at one side they leave a little round doorway just large enough for their own use.

The baby squirrels are very small, and, having no fur, they look like baby rats and mice. They grow very fast, however, and soon look more like their pretty gray parents. The nest in the top of the tree makes a good home unless some one bothers them. In case this happens, the babies are quickly moved to another place for safety. When an unwelcome visitor approaches, the parents hurry away and remain at a safe distance until the trouble is over. But they take no second chance, for the babies are moved before another visit can take place.

In the winter the squirrels like a nest in a hollow tree. Sometimes they take possession of boxes built for birds. When none of these can be found they build a rough nest of dry leaves high in a tree-top. They are not so well built as the summer homes, but they serve to protect the little wild creatures from the storms and cold.—Ruby Denon, in Our Dumb Animals.

LIFE.

Maude Mumma.

Life; it is not good enough.
Is the way too hard and rough?
Do not say such words to me,
When I have seen a bird and tree!

I have seen enough in dreams,
To furnish me a thousand themes;
And, when I behold a rose,
My heart with gladness, overflows!

When I hear the song of wren,
My heart with gladness sings again;
In praise to Him who made for me,
The bird, the flower and the tree!

Glories of the earth and seas,
Are everywhere revealed in these;
And in the glow of sunset skies,
The wonderment of Heaven lies!

Patty's Party.

"Mother, may I have a birthday party?" asked Pat. "May I have a birthday party when I have no one to play with me?"

Mother drew Patty to her and whispered something, and Patty clapped her hands and cried, "Oh, goody! goody!"

Then she took her little table and placed it under the big snowball bush. On it she put a white cloth and her pretty gold-and-white dishes, and in the center was a cake with a gold frosting and six little white candles, to match the gold-and-white dishes.

Then Patty called her guests.

The first guest to arrive had a nice biscuit, and when he had finished he trotted away saying, "Bow-wow!" which was his way of saying, "Thank you".

"Come again, Dicky Dog," said Patty.

Next came Kitty Cat with a new pink bow on her collar. She had a nice saucer of cream. After she had finished she licked her little gray paws and washed her face clean. 'Meow! meow! thank you!" she said as she ran away to sleep.

Next Robby Robin flew down near the table. Patty sat very still while he ate a large ripe strawberry. 'Thank you! thank you!" he trilled as he flew away.

Hop, hop. And along came Teddy Toad. Such a nice feast as he had on the flies and bugs that had come to Patty's party. Yes, they had come without being invited, but Teddy Toad thought they were just for him. "What a nice little girl!" he said as he hopped away.

Betty Butterfly spread her golden wings and alighted near a crumb of frosting. She put out her long tongue and ate it all up. "Thank you," she breathed as she spread her wings and flew away.

Then mother and daddy came down the path, and they sat with Patty at the little table, and each had a piece of the cake with gold frosting, and a drink of yellow lemonade that mother brought out in a glass pitcher. It was a very delightful and different kind of party indeed.

"What a lovely birthday party I had!" Patty said.—Emma Florence Bush, in Our Little Ones.

Make Some Marguerites.

Marguerites are easy to make—ever so easy. And they're far better for small tummies than candy, for they're not nearly so sweet as candy!

To make them you need some saltine crackers, and some peanuts, and some powdered sugar and some egg whites.

Perhaps two egg whites will be enough unless you want to make ever so many Marguerites!

Beat the egg whites very stiff, indeed, with either an egg beater or a fork. It takes longer to do it with a fork, though. And then add the powdered sugar, enough of it to make the egg whites look like frosting for a cake. And then add the peanuts—that have been shelled, of course! But then nobody would be so silly as to use them with the shells on, would they?

Put a dab of the egg whites, mixed with the sugar and the peanuts, upon each saltine. Quite a good sized dab, in the middle of each cracker. And then (but don't do this unless some grown-up is in the kitchen with you—for it isn't safe to use ovens when you are little!) put the crackers in the part of the oven that browns. And leave them in just long enough for the dab of egg white and peanuts and sugar to get a nice goldy color.

And then put the crackers on a platter and let them cool—it won't take very long.

And, oh, how much you'll enjoy eating them!—Christian Herald.

"YOU SLEEP TOO LATE."

A sunbeam touched by little bed.
"Good morning, dear," he gently said.
I opened wide my sleepy eyes,
And said, "Good morning", with surprise;
"I cannot think that night is gone;
And you are sure this is the morn?"

The sunbeam laughed and shook his head:
"Last night you would not go to bed,
And that is why you sleep so late,
And make me climb the window gate
To say, "Wake up, you sleepy dear!
Wake up! God bless you! Morning's here!"

A Musical Instrument From Old Bottles.

An amusing and clever musical instrument may be made from a number of old bottles, such as we buy lime juice or vinegar in. Even medicine bottles will do, but the bottles should all be the same size.

Having collected our bottles, we take an ordinary broomstick and rest this on the backs of two chairs, placed several feet apart. Then we tie the bottles to this stick, so that they hang loosely and not too close together.

Now comes the work of tuning up, and this we do by pouring water into the bottles, a different quantity in each, putting more water for a low note and less for a high. To get the note of each, we tap it with a stick—the edge of a boxwood rule is a very good thing for this purpose. With patience and perseverance and a little ordinary care and skill, we shall at last have our bottles all tuned and ready for use, and we can now play the curious instrument by striking the bottles with the edge of the rule.

Of course the bottles need to be strong, or the striking would break them; but we need not strike very hard. It will be found that simple tunes can be played on the bottle-bells, and after some practice we can take two sticks and thus play quicker tunes.

It is, of course, essential that the bottles should be hung at such a distance that they do not knock against each other when struck with a rule or stick.

Much fun can be obtained from this home-made instrument, which should only be used out of doors, as the water runs out on the ground in case the bottles break; although there is no need if care be exercised, to have any such accident.—Virginia Guide.

Something About Peacocks.

A very handsome bird is the peacock, which originally came from the East Indies, but which is now common in most parts of the world. In the Bible we read that King Solomon sent ships which came back every three years, bringing gold, silver, ivory, apes and peacocks.

In ancient times the Romans were fond of peacocks and would often cook them and serve them at banquets.

The peacock loses its brilliant plumes at the approach of winter and renews them again in the springtime. For this reason the peacock has been used as a symbol or emblem of the resurrection, and the figure of a peacock carved on a stone was often used to mark the graves of Christians in the Roman cemeteries. Peacocks like to live out in the open air. Even on the coldest nights a peacock prefers to roost upon the branch of a tree or on the top of a house or stack rather than to submit to the confinement of a house.

The peacock has one quality which is not to its credit. It is very proud of its beautiful feathers, and by the way it struts around it shows its vain spirit. This is the reason we sometimes speak of persons as being "vain as a peacock".—Our Dumb Animals.

Cultivate Bird Friendships.

In England many of the wild birds have become so tame that they live about houses and gardens. In Paris the flocks of pigeons and other birds about the squares and parks are so numerous that flying and crawling insects are rarely seen even in the small cities.

Why not have a few birds about our gardens? If we cultivate their acquaintance properly, there is no reason why the average country and suburban garden should not be alive with the little, winged creatures. Even in the downtown districts many sorts of birds will make their homes, if they are not disturbed.—Junior Life.

TO THE LAITY OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

There is in circulation among the laity of the Protestant Episcopal Church a petition, prepared by one of our Bishops, to the General Convention which will assemble in Washington next October, asking that body to refuse its assent to the proposal to eliminate the Thirty-nine Articles of Religion from the Book of Common Prayer, which would mean their abrogation.

"WHEREAS, the last General Convention adopted tentatively a resolution to revise the Book of Common Prayer by omitting the publication in connection therewith of the Articles of Religion; and

"WHEREAS, there is no provision for publishing elsewhere or for recognizing in any other way the Articles of Religion except in connection with the Book of Common Prayer; and

"WHEREAS, the Constitution of this Church has ever since 1801 recognized in this way the Articles of Religion; and

"WHEREAS, the Articles of Religion define the Church and state clearly the historic doctrinal differences between the Anglican Communion and the Roman Catholic Church;

"THEREFORE, we the undersigned adult communicants of the Protestant Episcopal Church do most earnestly memorialize our Right Reverend Fathers-in-God, our Reverend Clerical Deputies and Honorable Lay Deputies, in General Convention assembled in their respective Houses, to vote against the resolution to omit the Articles of Religion from publication in connection with the Book of Common Prayer and to vote against any proposed amendment to the Constitution that would omit reference to the Articles of Religion.

"AND we do further memorialize our Fathers-in-God, the Bishops, to send us a message of assurance that the name, the doctrine, the ceremonies and nomenclature of our Church and her missionary purpose and her fraternal love for all Christian people are and should be as expressed in the Book of Common Prayer.

"So we believe you will bring comfort and peace to the hearts of many, give confidence to those within our Communion and make clear to all men the true Catholic nature and Protestant heritage of our dear Church and revive zeal for the salvation of souls through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen."

We believe that a great majority of the communicants of the Church are opposed to the elimination of these Articles of Religion, established by the Church in 1801, and are likewise opposed to the introduction into the Church of the Mass, Reservation and Adoration of the Sacrament Prayers to the Virgin Mary, Invocation of Saints, Worship of Images and Relics, Auricular Confession, Penance, use of the Rosary, Holy Water and other doctrines and ceremonies peculiar to the Church of Rome.

We therefore heartily endorse this petition and express the hope that all Protestant Episcopalians will signify their approval of it by their signatures and by aiding in the widest possible circulation of it.

Copies of this petition may be procured without cost from Latsch & Arnold, 97 N. Second Street, Memphis, Tenn.

GEORGE STROTHER CABLE.

GEORGE STROTHER CABLE passed into life eternal on June 26, 1928, at the home of his daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. S. B. Moss, of near Markham, Va., age sixty-nine years.

He had been a great sufferer for several months from sinus, but an operation in May had seemed to relieve him, and he was thought to be improving.

He was having repaired a house lately purchased at Markham, for a home for himself and wife, and had just returned from a drive to this work when he suddenly fell to the floor, dying almost immediately.

He is survived by his second wife, formerly Miss Katie Green, of Markham, two daughters, Mrs. S. B. Moss and Mrs. T. M. Triplett, Jr., both of Markham, Va., and an only son, George S. Cable, Jr., of Warrenton, Va.; also three sisters, Miss Jennie Cable and Mrs. E. T. Phillips, of Alexandria, and Mrs. H. F. Marshall, of Washington. Burial was from Leeds Church, in the new cemetery at Leeds at one o'clock on June 28th.

Services by Rev. F. W. Hinkel, rector of the Parish.

A better Christian or a kinder man never lived—or one who will be more sorely missed by those who loved him.

IN MEMORIAM.

EVELINA TUCKER BROOKE LUCAS was born on the 20th day of July, 1838, at Woodbury, in Jefferson County, West Virginia (then Virginia), in the Shenandoah Valley.

She was descended from a long line of distinguished ancestors on both sides of her house. To enumerate them would but be to call the roll of the distinguished men of Virginia. Her mother was Virginia Tucker, daughter of Judge Henry St. George Tucker, at one time Professor of Law, at the University of Virginia.

On her father's side she was descended from the Brookes, of Stafford County, Virginia, an illustrious family of Revolutionary fame, numbering among them Judge Francis Brooke, Judge of the Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia, and Robert Brooke, Governor of Virginia. A direct ancestor of Francis and Robert Brooke was of that company of the "Knights of the Golden Horse-shoe", who under Governor Spottswood discovered, so far as white men were concerned, at least, the "Valley of Virginia", in which the subject of this Memorial, spent the most of her long life, and where she rests in the Episcopal Church Yard, of Zion Church, Charles Town, West Virginia.

Descending from such ancestry you would expect high intellectual attainments, culture and all the graces of civilized life, as well as heroism of soul. These qualities Mrs. Lucas possessed in an eminent degree, which made her influence wide, and extensive for good, in her family, and with her friends.

She experienced in her long life, for she was in her ninetieth year, at the time of her death, all the vicissitudes of fate; for she had been affluent, and associated with people of refinement, who had the leisure to improve themselves in the graces of life, and she had experienced also the discipline of poverty, brought on by financial reverses and the Civil War. Still "the night brings out the stars" and the Harp of the Holy Ghost, as some one has said, is not only heard in the songs of praise and thanksgiving, but in the sorrowful minor chords of the sweet Psalmist of Israel, and no matter what were Mrs. Lucas's surroundings, she was ever the Virginia gentlewoman.

In 1869 she married Judge Daniel Bedinger Lucas, poet, distinguished lawyer and jurist, and was ever a helpmate to him in his career as statesman and literateur. By this marriage there was issue, one daughter, Virginia, also like her distinguished father, a poet.

Again in the death of this noble woman one of the ties that binds the so-called "New South" with the "Old South" is broken. So marked is the difference that when her husband wrote that exquisite laudatory poem of the "Old South", "In the Land We Were Dreaming" he must have had a prophetic vision, for is not the "Old South", and its traditions and ideals, a dream, in this work-a-day modern, materialistic world? Like a purple twilight at the end of a summer day, the "Old South" falls as a mantle over the lives of those who were actors on the stage of life at that time, a world of romance, of chivalry, or idealism, of heroism, as detached, as if a scene enacted in some far removed century.

To draw aside the curtain and speak of the personal loss to her devoted daughter would be indelicate, but to use the language of another expressing emotions under similar circumstances, we might say for her: "The mother who was as my own soul, the desire of my eyes, the guide of my youth, is taken away and the place that knew her knows her no more; but He taketh away and who can hinder Him? The whole garden is His, and He has a right to do what He will with His own. He saw her meet for the change; and she is an unspeakable gainer by the removal.

"Other lilies (lilies of the field) when gathered fade, but this shall bloom for ever and ever."

JOHN RICHARD WHEAT, M. D.

In the death of DR. JOHN R. WHEAT, which occurred at Grace Hospital, Richmond, on June 2, 1928, the Church in Virginia has lost one of her most loyal and devoted sons, the medical profession an ornament and the poor of Richmond a friend whose like they will hardly see again

John Richard Wheat was born December 11, 1850, at Dumfries, Prince William County, Virginia, the son of Dr. J. R. Wheat, of that place. He received his early education at "Bloomington", the School and home of the late Peyton Moncure, in Stafford County, where he numbered among his playmates several members of the Moncure family, with whom he maintained the most intimate and cordial relations all his life.

The close of the War Between the States, in which his two elder brothers had played a gallant part, found his family in impoverished circumstances. Nothing daunted, however, by adverse conditions, the boy determined to follow in the footsteps of his father and become a physician. Coming to Richmond, he entered the old Medical College of Virginia, from which he was in due course graduated. Shortly afterward, while interne in the recently established Retreat for the Sick Hospital, he became acquainted with Mrs. Annabelle R. Jenkins, the founder of that institution. From that time until the death of Mrs. Jenkins in 1901, Dr. Wheat was her devoted friend and helper. What the Retreat for the Sick is today is due in large measure to the unselfishness of Dr. Wheat, who with unparalleled generosity gave of his time, his talents and his means to the furthering of the cause of humanity as represented by that institution.

In 1892 Dr. Wheat married Miss Florence August Coffin, of "Chesley", Cumberland County, Virginia, daughter of Dr. W. H. Coffin, Surgeon in the Confederate States Army, who survives him. From that time until the household was broken up by the death of Mrs. Jenkins, Dr. and Mrs. Wheat made their home with her at No. 14 West Main Street. Later he divided his time between his own home in Richmond and "Chesley", the birthplace of his wife in Cumberland County.

Such in brief outline was the life of Dr. Wheat, apparently as simple and uneventful as could well be imagined. Beginning life poor and dying poor, he was perhaps one of the very greatest benefactors of humanity in his day and generation in Richmond. Literally hundreds yet living have reason to bless his name and revere his memory.

As a specialist in orthopedic surgery, Dr. Wheat might easily have made an outstanding name for himself, while his success in the practice of medicine, particularly in the treatment of typhoid fever, was remarkable. He had but to stretch out his hand, and fame would have been his. However, he was that rare combination, a man of great talents, of utter self forgetfulness and of boundless charity, and to fame and worldly success he never gave a thought, His many gifts in the art of healing he consecrated wholly to the service of his Lord and Master Jesus Christ, never considering himself and never sparing himself where the good of a fellow human being was concerned.

To those of us who knew him intimately Dr. Wheat seemed more truly the Good Physician than any other man we ever knew. His faults, if they could be called such, were an excess of modesty, which prevented his being known as he deserved to be known, and a total indifference to those things which make for ease and worldly comfort.

A busy man all his days, Dr. Wheat found time for the discharge of every religious duty. With him religion always came first. He was a devoted member of Grace Church, Richmond, for years serving on the vestry, and a life-long friend of his rector, the late Rev. Landon R. Mason, D. D. But his love for the poor, the unfortunate, for the unsheperded had to find an outlet wider than his own parish, and he became one of the gfounders and chief supporters of St. Luke's Church, Idlewood and Lombardy Streets—now the Osgood Memorial Church—where for years he was regular in his attendance and a tower of strength to the congregation

Although not blessed with children of his own, Dr. Wheat was a lover of children; and in his intercourse with them, whether as physician and surgeon or merely as friend, he was as tender as a woman and as loving as a mother. The sight of Dr. Wheat surrounded by his little friends of the Children's Ward in the "Old Retreat" was one never to be forgotten.

Looking back upon the life of Dr. Wheat and it was our privilege to know him intimately for more than thirty years—we can think of no words that better describe him than those of St. Paul when he says:

picturing the true minister of Christ, "as poor, yet making many rich; as having nothing, and yet possessing all things", and St. Peter's description of our blessed Lord, "who went about doing good and healing all that were oppressed—for God was with him".

JOHN LEWIS SCOTT.

JOHN LEWIS SCOTT was born at Manakin Farms, Powhatan County, Virginia, the son of the late Edward Scott and Eliza Madison Hockley, his wife, and died April 12, 1928, at Johnston-Willis Hospital, Richmond, Va., after an operation for appendicitis. He was buried at Manakin Church, with a large congregation of relatives and friends and many colored people present. The floral emblems were both numerous and beautiful.

He is survived by the following brothers: C. Selden, Robert H. and Samuel, and one sister, Lucia Beverley Scott, all of Powhatan County, and by his widow, formerly Lucy Elizabeth Robins, of Gloucester County, Va., and by a daughter, Mrs. William J. Candler, and a son, William Edward Scott, both of Richmond, who were children of his first wife, Bessie Campbell Hening, of Powhatan County, and the following grandchildren: William Scott Candler and Anne Elizabeth Candler and Elizabeth Hart Scott.

John Lewis was a Christian gentleman of the old school and a lovable character, with a large circle of friends and acquaintances, among all classes. He was admired and loved by all who knew him. He was noted for his broad and generous kindliness, neither thinking or speaking evil of others and fulfilling his obligations in family, church and community with great devotion.

His hospitality was widely known and appreciated. He was ever ready to help the needy and depressed. A member of old Manakin Church for all his life and a vestryman for many years and treasurer as well, interested in the work of the Sunday school, ever ready to serve his Master; ground in the faith and love of his Church and her worship.

He lived and farmed the old Manakin Farm as his father and family had done before him; his family having owned and operated this well-known and great old James River estate since the year 1756. He loved animals and especially a good horse and the life and work of the farm was ever of the greatest interest to him. His pasing is a great loss.

REV. THOMAS HUGH LACY, D. D.

Resolutions.

Whereas, the Divine Providence, which rules over the Universe, has seen fit to remove from our midst the REV. THOMAS HUGH LACY, D. D.; and,

Whereas, Dr. Lacy had for thirty years been rector of Emmanuel and Grace Protestant Episcopal churches, sharing with their members their deep affection for the institutions, laboring with them in unselfish devotion and loyalty toward the consummation of their highest purposes and ideals, and dispensing in these communities comfort and charity without regard to creed or condition; and,

Whereas, in his passing, each member of these churches and every resident within the scope of their influence has lost a true friend, a devoted and consecrated spiritual leader and a citizen of the highest type.

Now, therefore, be it Resolved by the Board of Vestrymen of Emmanuel and Grace Protestant Episcopal Churches, Tillotson Parish, Glenmore, Virginia, That we here express our deep sorrow and heartfelt loss in the death of Rev. Thomas Hugo Lacy, D. D., and extend to his family our most profound sympathy and tender thoughts in their bereavement; and,

Be it further Resolved, That this resolution be printed in the Southern Churchman, and that a copy of it be entered upon the minute book of the Board of Vestrymen of Emmanuel and Grace Churches.

ORDINATIONS.

Mr. Alfred W. Price, of Scranton, was made a deacon in the Church of the Good Shepherd, his native city on June 15, 1928. The Rev. Dr. Stanley R. West, of Calvary Church, Conshohocken, Pa., preached the sermon. The Rev. J. Lyon Hatfield, of St. Mark's Church, Dunmore, Pa., read the Litany; Dr. Thos. E. Winecoff, the rector, read the Epistle, and assisted the Bishop of the Diocese, the Rt. Rev. Frank W. Sterret, LL. D., in the celebration. The Archdeacon presented the candidate to the Bishop.

Other clergy present were the Revs. Robert E. Kreitler, George E. Archer, S. E. Neikirk and Oliver Kingman.

Mr. Price will do social service work in New York City for the summer under the direction of Dean Lathrop.

On Friday, July 6, George Wood, of Kinston, N. C., was ordained to the Diaconate by the Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D., Bishop of East Carolina, in St. Paul's Church, Wilmington, N. C. The candidate was presented by the Rev. Alexander Miller, rector of St. Paul's Church; the Litany was read by the Rev. Walter R. Noe, Executive Secretary of the Diocese, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. E. W. Hallock, rector of St. John's Church, Wilmington.

DEATHS.

Albert Newton Cleaver, for nearly half a century a vestryman of the Pro-Cathedral Church of the Nativity, Bethlehem, Pa., passed away on Saturday, June 30 in his eighty-first year. For many years a distinguished citizen and devout Christian, conspicuous for his service in the community and in all the Councils of the Church, his presence will be greatly missed. May he rest in peace and life perpetual shine upon him.

"THE WONDER OF THE BOOK"

By

Dyson Hague

All lovers of the Bible will find in this book of 95 pp. one of the finest testimonies to the power and blessing of the Bible, as Dr. Griffith Thomas said. A Chinese missionary said that "The Wonder of the Book" was the clearest and most forceful thing of the kind he had found, and a lady valued it so highly than she bought one thousand copies to give to the missionaries and others in India. It has been translated into Chinese, Japanese, Syriac, Spanish, and is being translated into Malayalam in South India for the Syriac Church of Malabar. An American lady said she wished every minister in the world could read it.

It is most valuable for Sunday-school teachers, and for the young people in Bible classes, and makes a splendid gift for a teacher to give the members of a class, or a minister to his workers.

Its closing words are a summary of its substance and standard. "Think not of the Bible as a good book, or even as a better book, but lift it in heart and mind and faith and love, far, far above all, and ever regard it, not as the word of man, but as it is in truth, the Word of God, nay, more, as the Living Word of the Living God; supernatural in origin; eternal in duration; inexpressible in value; infinite in scope; divine in authorship; human in penmanship; regenerative in power; infallible in authority; universal in interest; personal in application; and, as St. Paul declares, inspired in totality.

"THE WONDER OF THE GOSPEL"

By DYSON HAGUE.

A prominent Canadian Christian said not long ago that she considered "The Wonder of the Gospel" to be by far the best thing on the subject she has ever read. It gave such a clear and forcible exposition of the Gospel of Christ, and the way of receiving it.

The work is not original at all. It is a republication of a very famous work that was published by Dr. Horatius Bonar who considered it the finest explanation of the Gospel he had known, with notes and additions for the reader today.

It ought to be read by every minister and Christian teacher. It tells in words of living interest the story of the Old, Old Story; what it means, how it is accepted, what it does. It is indeed "a truly remarkable book", and as a well-known writer said, "It gave me more light on the simplicity of the Gospel way than all the theological treatises I ever studied".

READ IT. READ IT OVER AGAIN. SEND IT TO YOUR MINISTER, AND ESPECIALLY TO YOUNG MINISTERS AND THEOLOGICAL STUDENTS.

Summer Time.

One of the most unique plans for keeping up the summer contributions and one that will work successfully at any time in the year has recently been devised by a progressive supply house. It is a card seven by eleven inches, the center of which bears the name of the church or society with its street and town address together with an appropriate verse. Around the sides of the card are twenty indented circles into which a dime fits snugly. As these circles are filled they are covered with a sticker keeping the coins from falling out.

The exceptional worth of the plan is that it raises money quickly and easily. There are few members of a church, Sunday school or society that are not glad to place ten cents a day in these cards, and they never miss it. But a hundred people doing this brings an income of two hundred dollars. Some small Sunday-school classes and societies buy these cards in hundred lots, and each member pledges to fill the card in a month. Others secure a hundred, which is the smallest quantity in which they can be printed, and work the plan several times a year. It will interest many to know that for slight additional cost one may have whatever wording he wishes on the card and also a picture of the church or the pastor.

Possibly there are among our readers those who have been successful with similar plans or have added new equipment that has been helpful. If they would write to us fully about these, they would help others, and it would be greatly appreciated. We are also glad when our readers write to us about their problems or their proposed purchases. Often we can be a real help. # "TIDEWATER TALES"

A book into which is gathered the folklore, traditions and history of Tidewater Virginia. Written in a delightful informal style by Prof. William C. Garnett.

The President of a College in South Carolina writes in part, "My wife and I have been reading with great interest, 'Tidewater Tales', written by Prof. Garnett. I have never read a work of this kind the style of which I have found more attractive, simple and yet elegant, interesting but never monotonous. I have found the greatest pleasure in reading it, and I am delighted that you called my attention to it."

A prominent representative of a Publishing Co., and a lover of books, writes, "You have built a monument to yourself, and long after the green sod grows over you, this book will be read by our children and children's children. I could read 'A Fox Hunt 'Fo De War' every week in the year and get a thrill each time I read it." One of the most prominent merchants in this section of Virginia writes, "To know the author of 'Tidewater Tales' should guarantee the sale of this work".

A prominent attorney in Washington, and himself a writer, and well-known lecturer, writes in part, " . . . the charming description of the old homes, the history and traditions, and the true-to-life stories in local color, combined to delight me, and enticed my memory to run down the corridors of the past.'

A professor in one of the Virginia Universities writes, "You have put posterity in your debt by presenting so skilfully to them characters that have passed to the beyond. The story of that old Virginia negro in Louisiana touches me deeply."

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"Peace is the caress of Christ."

The soul of a man deserves better usage than to be made a scullion to feed the flesh.

"I am never tired of prayer," said one, "because I have always a definite errand when I pray."

Good resolutions—like a screaming child—should be carried out.—Trohy Veck's Messenger.

The evidences of life in a church are at least fourfold; growth, compassion, union, and emotion.—Morgan.

Who would be without the verse, "Jesus wept"? It softens all the other verses, it interprets all the "woes". It is the key to His character, it is the seal of His priesthood.—Joseph Parker.

The man who kindles the fire on the heartstone of an honest and a righteous home burns the best incense to liberty.—Grady.

When General Gordon was with his army in Khartoum, Africa, there was an hour every day when a white handkerchief lay before his tent door. While that signal was there, no one, however high his rank, ever approached the tent. The most urgent business waited outside. Every one knew that Gordon was at prayer that hour within the tent, and not a man nor an officer came near until the handkerchief was lifted away.

The work of preaching the Gospel to every creature and making disciples of all nations is not the responsibility of a department or the enthusiasm of a few. It is the work of the whole Church. It is the supreme, if not the sole, mission for which the Church exists. The duty of the Church to the heathen does not rest upon considerations of expediency, and comparison. The claims are inevitable, because they are rooted in the nature of Christianity and in the essential character of the Church. It is not a question of expediency, but of loyalty. Foreign missions prosper as the whole Church realizes its obligation to Jesus Christ and His redeeming purpose in the world—Samuel W. Chadwick.

"THE WONDER OF THE BOOK"

By

Dyson Hague

All lovers of the Bible will find in this book of 95 pp. one of the finest testimonies to the power and blessing of the Bible, as Dr. Griffith Thomas said. A Chinese missionary said that "The Wonder of the Book" was the clearest and most forceful thing of the kind he had found, and a lady valued it so highly than she bought one thousand copies to give to the missionaries and others in India. It has been translated into Chinese, Japanese, Syriac, Spanish, and is being translated into Malayalam in South India for the Syriac Church of Malabar. An American lady said she wished every minister in the world could read it.

It is most valuable for Sunday-school teachers, and for the young people in Bible classes, and makes a splendid gift for a teacher to give the members of a class, or a minister to his workers.

Its closing words are a summary of its substance and standard. "Think not of the Bible as a good book, or even as a better book, but lift it in heart and mind and faith and love, far, far above all, and ever regard it, not as the word of man, but as it is in truth, the Word of God, nay, more, as the Living Word of the Living God; supernatural in origin; eternal in duration; inexpressible in value; infinite in scope; divine in authorship; human in penmanship; regenerative in power; infallible in authority; universal in interest; personal in application; and, as St. Paul declares, inspired in totality.

WHERE THE SPIRIT OF GOD IS, IS LIBERTY

By the Right Reverend William A. Guerry

The Baccalaureate Sermon to Have Been Delivered at the University of North Carolina.

I.

Text:—St. John XVI; verse 13: Howbeit, when He, the Spirit of truth is come, He will guide you into all truth; for He shall not speak of Himself; but whatsoever He shall hear, that shall He speak; and He shall shew you things to come.

WE read in the book, Exodus, when Jehovah led His people out of Egypt, He caused a pillar of cloud to shield them by day from the burning rays of the Syrian sun, and a pillar of fire by night to go before and guide them on their way; and so, in somewhat different fashion we read in the words of the text that when Christ was about to take His departure out of this life, realizing that His disciples would need guidance and counsel in carrying out His world-wide scheme of redemption, He promised to send them another Comforter, even the Spirit of truth, whose special mission it would be to guide them into all truth, and thus enable the Christian Church to adjust herself to new conditions and new problems as they arose.

It is therefore the special office and function of the Holy Spirit to teach, to enlighten and to guide. The spirit of God goes before the Church to beckon her on to new discoveries, to open the door to new opportunities of service and to give her people that open-mindedness and love of truth, without which progress is impossible. It follows from what I have said that the idea of progress and development, the ability of Christianity to adjust itself to new conditions and reinterpret and restate the gospel message in the light of the science and philosophy of the day is an essential element in the life of the Church. Any religion which is incapable of change which tends to become stereotyped and fixed, which cannot assimilate new truth, or keep abreast of the best thought and scholarship of the day, is doomed to decay and cannot expect to win the faith and allegiance of thinking men and women.

Power of Adaptation.

To my mind one of the most remarkable features about the Christian religion has been in its marvelous power of adaptation to meet new conditions. From the very first it has been a religion of progress. If this had not been the case it would long since have perished and been forgotten. This quality of growth in the Christian Church made itself felt in the very beginning of the Christian era. Perhaps one of the most severe tests to which any religion was ever subjected occurred in the Apostolic period shortly before the ascension of Christ into heaven. It is well to remember that Christianity started as a Jewish sect; its first converts were Jews. Its greatest apostle was a Hebrew of the Hebrews, but no sooner had this new religion been organized and started on its world-wide career than it was forced to consider how far the ceremonial ritual and law of Moses should be made binding on Gentile converts. Should the Gentiles be required to conform to the requirements of Leviticus? Should the family and household of the Roman centurion, Cornelius, be made to observe the law of the old Dispensation?

A moment's reflection will enable you to see that the very life of Christianity was at stake. Should the Church of Christ remain a Judaizing sect, or should it be set free from the swaddling clothes of an effete Judaism? No more important gathering was ever held in the history of the Christian Church than that which assembled in Jerusalem to consider this matter. You will recall the account given in Acts 15, of how St. Peter rehearsed before the assembled brethren the story of the conversion of Cornelius, and of how St. Paul pleaded for a larger liberty and the glorious freedom of the Sons of God, and of how, after careful and prayerful deliberation, under the direct guidance of the Holy Spirit, the Apostles and brethren put forth that first encyclical letter to Christians throughout the world, which begins, "It seemed good to the Holy Ghost and to us, to lay on you no greater burden than these necessary things, namely, that ye abstain from meats offered to idols, from blood and from things strangled and from fornication: from which if ye keep yourselves ye shall do well".

You will observe that this letter contains not one word about circumcision or the observance of the Jewish Sabbath, or about any of those ritual laws which St. Peter declared were a yoke which neither they nor their fathers had been able to bear.

Second Great Test.

But the second great test of the power of Christianity to adjust itself to new conditions and to assimilate new truths came a generation later when St. John wrote his Gospel. The question which confronted the Church at that time was of an entirely different character from the one which the Apostles and brethren at Jerusalem were called upon to deal with. The question at this later period was, would Christianity be able to commend itself to the acute intelligence and reason of the most highly gifted and cultured people of antiquity? Was Christianity capable of being reinterpreted in the light of Greek philosophy? For if it failed to stand this crucial test how could it ever hope to win over men of such profound learning and keen intelligence as for example, Justin Martyr, the first great Christian Apologist, or Athanasius, or Gregory Nazienzen? But in the face of this supreme crisis, God raised up that inspired saint and seer, St. John, who with a daring that almost takes away our breath, did not hesitate to borrow from the philosophy of Philo of Alexandria that deeply significant word "Logos" and to apply it to the Incarnation of Christ. In the prologue of his Gospel as you may remember, he takes over this key word, "Logos", with all that it connoted and applies it to the person and doctrine of Christ. "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God, and the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us. We beheld his glory; the glory as of the only begotten son of the Father, full of grace and truth."

Worship Risen Christ.

We worship today not a dead Christ, nor an absent Christ, but a risen and present and triumphant Lord God who is ever now visibly at work in His Church preparing the soil for the seed and laying the foundations of that new and heavenly Jerusalem which is now being builded in our midst.

Indeed, as I look back over the Christian centuries today, it seems to me that I cannot do better than to liken the Christian seeker after truth to some mountain climber. Above him towers the snow-capped mountain; far down in the dark valley he begins his slow and toilsome ascent. For a time he is lost amid the mist and clouds which envelope the mountain, and by and by he emerges and stands forth upon some ledge of rock and looks forth upon the whole broad panorama of nature stretched out before him. Again he climbs with painful steps and slow. Again he looks forth upon the whole realm of nature and each time he climbs he sees further; his vision is broadened; he sees now as he did not see before, how the whole topography of the country is related to the mountain. But it is not the mountain which has changed, but the climber who has altered his relation to the mountain. And so it is with the Christian revelation of God in Christ. It is not Christ who has changed; He is the same yesterday, today and forever. The original deposit of faith once delivered, has not been altered; but it is we who have changed our attitude to the truth of God. We have attained to a higher vantage ground than our fathers; to us is given a wider vision and a deeper verities of the Christian religion. We see, as the men of an old generation did not, how every truth of science, of philosophy, or of sociology, is related to the great central fact, of the Incarnation of God in Christ. And so, on this day, standing on the threshold of a new era, we face the future with sure confidence, and with an abiding faith in the regenerating and ever-renewing power of the Christian Gospel to take on new life and to lend itself to new interpretations of the old truth. Only I would sound a note of warning here in connection with the ideal of reinterpretation of the Christian Gospel. Under the cover of that word, reinterpretation, many of our more radical scholars are attempting to explain away the thing to be interpreted. Let me make my meaning clear. The fact of electricity is one thing, but some one's theory or interpretation is quite another.

May Accept Inspiration.

Just so, one can accept the undeniable fact of the divine inspiration of the Bible without tying one's self up to some man-made theory of the literal and verbal inspiration of the Word of God. And if I were asked what today is standing most in the way of the acceptance of Christianity by thoughtful and earnest seekers after God, I would unhesitatingly say, some man-made scheme of doctrine, some perverted and twisted conception of the original Gospel which has been foisted upon the Christian Church, and which today is alienating and estranging thousands of our young men and women from the faith of their fathers. The time has come when we must distinguish between that which is essential in the Christian religion and that which is of purely human origin. I grant you this will call for considerable study and effort on your part. It will not be easy to separate the gold from the dross of human error, but you should remember that Christianity in this respect does not differ from other fields of human study and research. The historian is constantly confronted with the same problem of how to winnow out the chaff from the wheat. If, therefore, Christianity is mingled with error and human speculation, it is only what we might expect, and the young student facing life today can make no greater mistake than to throw over the faith of his childhood because, forsooth, he cannot reconcile the claims of science and so-called Christianity. Between a true and reverent science and the essential truths of the Christian religion there can be no conflict, but I would remind you that between a false and perverted Christianity and a true science there must inevitably be contradiction and conflict.

Believe me, the religious and intellectual problems which confront and conflict the young men and women of this graduating class are serious and call for careful study and thought, but the rewards which lie in store for the earnest seeker after truth are worth all the labor and sacrifice that it costs. I am not afraid, young men and women, of a reverent and thorough-going scholarship, but I am afraid of an irreverent radicalism, and of a superficial knowledge which is not willing to pay the price which those who seek and find the truth must always be willing to pay. The age in which we live presents a challenge to the youth and the nation. This is no time for shirking, or for dodging of issues, or intellectual laziness, or for superficial reading and thinking.

(To be concluded in next issue.)

EXCELLENT REMARKS ON PRAYER

By Bishop Wilson

TRUE devotion consists in always having our hearts devoted to God, as the sole fountain of all happiness, and who is always ready to hear and to help his otherwise helpless and miserable creatures.

It is to be Obtained—

Firstly, By earnest prayer! He that hungers and thirsts after righteousness will certainly be filled.

Secondly, By possessing our hearts with a deep sense of our own misery and sinfulness, our wants and danger.

Thirdly, By considering God's goodness, power and readiness to help.

Lastly, By convincing our hearts of the vanity of everything else to afford us any real help or comfort.

Dying persons are generally more devout than others, because they then see their misery; that nothing in this world can help them, and that God is their only refuge.

The spirit of God will not dwell in a divided heart. We cannot feel the pleasures of devotion, while the world is our delight. Not that all pleasures are criminal, but the closer our union with the world, the less our union with God. A Christian, therefore, who strives after devotion, should taste sensual pleasures very sparingly; should make necessity, not bodily delight, his rule.

He that would be devout, must beware of indulging a habit of wandering in prayer; it is a crime that will grow upon us, and deprive us of the happiness we pray for.

Avoid as much as may be, multiplicity of business. Neither the innocency nor the goodness of our employment will excuse, if it possesses our hearts when we are praying to God.

Never be curious to know what passes in the world, any farther than duty obliges you; it will only distract the mind when it should be better employed.

Never intermit devotion, if you can help it; you will return to your duty like Samson, shorn of his locks, weak and indifferent as other people of the world.

The oftener we renew our intercourse with God, the greater will be our devotion. Frequent prayer as it is an exercise of holy thoughts is a most natural remedy against the power of sin. Importunity makes no change in God, but it creates in us such dispositions as God thinks proper to reward.

Make it a law to yourself to meditate before you pray, as also to make certain pauses, to see if your hearts go along with your lips. They whose hearts desire nothing, pray for nothing.

He that has learnt to pray as he ought, has got the secret of a holy life.

The best way to prevent wandering in prayer, is not to let our minds wander too much at other times; but to have God always in our thoughts, in the whole course of our lives.

The end of prayer is not to inform God, but to give man a sight of his own misery and sinfulness; to raise his soul towards heaven, and to put him in mind that there is his father and his inheritance.

It is rudeness among men to ask a favor, and not to stay for an answer; and do we count it no fault to ask for blessings, and never think of them afterwards? Never to wait for them? Never give God thanks for them?

Let us not run over our prayers with an insensible and distracted mind.

Let your prayer be as particular as may be against the sins of your particular state, for the graces which you in particular do most stand in need of. This is the best preservative against sin; makes us best acquainted with our condition; puts us continually in mind of mending what is amiss; let us see what particular graces we do most need, what are most needful for the cure of our own particular corruption and disorder.

The devil knows that we have a relish for prayer, and apply ourselves in good earnest to it, that we are in the way of life; he, therefore, strives, by every way possible, to divert us.

God will deny us no good thing that we really desire and ask in the name of His Son; when we offer up our prayer through His mediation, it is then He that prays, His love that intercedes, His blood that pleads; it is He that obtains all from His Father.

The neglect of prayer is very often punished by God's leaving men to themselves and to their own wicked ways; which ever did and ever will end in ruin.

The cause of which is plain; constant and wilful omission of this duty is a sure way to lose the knowledge and remembrance of God, His Word and promises, and then men will have no motives to love or to fear God, nor any reason to hope for good from Him. It will also very naturally lead people to depend upon themselves only; to forget their sad condition and misery, that they are liable to God's wrath, and even to damnation.

The most sure way to avoid this, is to dedicate some time every day of our lives to the worship of God; by doing this we shall retain God in our knowledge, provided it be performed out of a deep sense of our own wants and miseries, with a firm faith in God's promises to fulfill the desires of them that fear Him, with an eye to the blood of Jesus our Redeemer, for whose sake and through whose suffering we are reconciled to God, and God to us.

To begin and end the day with God is the likeliest way to make servants faithful, children faithful, wives obedient, and husbands sober, loving and careful, every one acting as in the sight of God.

This is the way to entail piety upon the generations to come. When children and servants come to have families of their own, they cannot be easy till they fall into the same serious method which they have been long used to.

Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it; nor perhaps his children after him for many generations.

Benefit of Morning Prayer.

Very many are the evil consequences of going without God into a world full of dangers and temptations, which, of ourselves, we can neither foresee nor escape. Whoever considers this, and the infinite mischief which may follow, will never venture abroad without praying for God's guidance, protection, and blessing, every morning of his life.

The Great Benefit and Duty of Evening Prayer.

Sleep, said a great man, is so much like death, that I dare not trust it without saying my prayers; and, indeed, for fear of the worst, a thoughtful Christian will take care to make his peace with God before he goes to sleep, and put himself under God's protection every evening of his life, that he may be safe from the fear of evil.

THE SURRENDERED LIFE---IN CHRIST

Conducted by the Reverend Frank Cox

THE rise of the Evangelicals in the Eighteenth Century and after was marked by many illustrations of the hatred of the human heart for the light of the gospel. The religion of the day had became as cold and dismal as could be. Men hated the idea of anything that savored of enthusiasm. The so-called cultured classes were accustomed to make a laughing-stock of Christianity, and the poorer people were in many cases sunk into a condition of degradation. Bishop Butler had to confess that men took for granted that religion was but a fiction. Drunkenness was so prevalent that some one said that if the people continued their gin-drinking for twenty years more there would be few left to drink at all.

The sermons of the day would have delighted the heart of the liberalist of today. Ministers were accustomed to boast that they preached morals and left the deeper and more mysterious truths of religion severely alone. They were accustomed to think of Christianity as a kind of higher rationalism. "Christianity," said one of them, "requires of us only such duties as are suitable to the light of nature and do approve themselves to the best reason of mankind." The Christianity in them soon evaporated. One witness declared that in a round of the London Churches he could not find a sermon that would not have been acceptable in a mosque.

When the Evangelicals found Christ as their Saviour and began to declare Him to men these false prophets rose up in bitter opposition. They were like the Pharisees who would not enter the Kingdom themselves and kept others out who wished to enter. The rectors of the parishes sometimes led the mobs that attacked the preachers of the gospel, and one clergyman attacked his assistant and threw him out of the church because he preached the gospel. These false prophets could tolerate drunkenness, and irreligion, Buddhist or Mohammedan, but not a minister of the gospel.

Men are apt to forget the lessons of history. Now that rationalism is once more raising its head and boasting that it will not accept anything unless it can be understood by man's little intelligence, and now that men are saying that we must revise our faith to meet the new day, it is well that we should be reminded that the feat was attempted more than once before and that the attempt met with miserable failure. There were other parallels between that day and this. Then as now a nation, and through that nation the world, was being challenged by atheism. As the French Revolutionists were attacking God's rule in their day, so the atheistic communist defies heaven.

The answer then as now is the same. It was not by the cold debating of philosophers that the tide was turned, but by the warm-hearted preaching of men whose hearts had been set on fire of the Holy Ghost. The opposition to the gospel was nothing more than the revelation of the enmity that lies hidden in the heart of every man who does not obey God. Where there is no opposition there is frequently no gospel. Opposition is better than indifference, for a strong opponent when converted will make a strong friend. Let us preach a gospel that will search the hidden, unsurrendered places of the heart and that will make every man feel he is being faced with issues that determine destiny. Only then will lives be transformed, and transfigured, and true victories be won.

RAYS OF LIGHT FROM GOD'S LAMP

By W. W. Rugh

Founder and Associate of the Bible Institute of Pennsylvania 1418 North Sixteenth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Note: These simple studies in God's Word are intended for home and class use by those who wish to know our blessed Lord and to make Him known.

IV. WHAT IS THE CHARACTER OF GOD'S WORD?

1. His Word is Perfect (or complete) (Ps. 19:7; 18:30).

It would be unlike the One whose way is perfect not to give us a revelation which would be complete, entire, revealing fully the person and work of His Son, as the One in and through whom all of the Father's counsels in redemption are accomplished, a book also which meets every need of every heart that will come to it in faith (2 Tim. 3:15-17; Rom. 8:32; Phil. 4:19; John 20:31; Ps. 119:103, 105).

2. His Word is Sure (or confirmed) (Ps. 19:7).

The One who cannot lie, but who is faithful and able to perform what He has promised, has confirmed His Word over and over again by fulfilling its exceeding great and precious promises (Num. 23:19; Titus 1:2; Heb. 10:23; 2 Pet. 1:4; Acts 2:23-36; 3:13-18; 10:36-41; 22 Cor. 1:20).

3. His Word is Right (equitable or fair) (Ps. 19:8).

His wonderful Word reveals a plan of redemption which all men have, or will have to admit as being fair, because it provides the same way of acceptance before God for every sinner. Every one who will acknowledge that he is a sinner and will believe that Christ died to save him will find that he has been made accepted in the Beloved (John 14:6; Luke 18:13, 14; Rom. 3:21-26; 10:9, 10; 1 Cor. 15:3, 4; Eph. 1:6; 2:6).

4. His Word is Pure (Ps. 19:8; 12:6; Prov. 30:5, 6).

The Bible was not written as men write books, to sell, but was written to save and sanctify lost men. The translation of the Bible into any language gives the people their language in its purest form. There is no book that will purify the thoughts and desires of men's hearts like the Word of God, because it is the only book written by the Holy Spirit (Ps. 119:9-11; John 17:17; Eph. 5: 25, 26).

Because His Word is pure, it gives light to every darkened heart into which it finds entrance (Ps. 119:130; 1 Pet. 2:9; Eph. 5:8, 11).

5. His Word is Clean (Ps. 19:9).

His Word in this Psalm is spoken of as the fear, or the reverence of the Lord. It is called by this name because in every word, on every line, from Genesis to Revelation, God is exalted, the attitude of reverence is manifested.

That attitude of reverence toward God, of exalting God, of honoring God, giving Him the first place, His right place, in all things in creation and redemption, as the absolute Sovereign over all His works, has a cleansing effect upon the heart in which His Word is hidden. It has power to prevent self-exaltation, the sin of all sins (Gen. 3:5; Luke 4:8; Ps. 119:9).

6. His Word is True (faithful) (Ps. 19:9).

God's judgments or decisions are absolutely dependable, because it is a moral impossibility for Him to lie. His character as the One who is faithful, who is true, is stamped on every page of His written Word (Heb. 10:23; 1 Thess. 5:24; Titus 1:2).

7. His Word is Righteous (Ps. 19:9).

His Word is righteous because it is a revelation of the character of the One who is absolutely holy and who ever acts in harmony with His own nature, and according to His holy law (Rom. 1:17; 3:21, 22).

This manifestation of God's righteousness as revealed through His Holy Word, gives us the foundation for our faith (Ps. 89:14, R. V.; 2 Peter 1:1, R. V.).

SEVENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY

By Berkeley Minor

COLLECT.

Lord of all power and might, who art the Author and Giver of all good things; Graft in our hearts a love of Thy name; increase in us true religion; nourish us with all goodness, and of Thy great mercy keep us in the same; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE petition of this collect (repeated in the collect in the Institution Office) is a prayer for love of His name (or of truth), for an increase of true religion, and for nourishment in all goodness; but the petition of the later collect is for much more than this. It is a prayer addressed to God the Holy Ghost, as "Sanctifier of the faithful", asking Him to "enlighten our minds more and more with the light of the everlasting gospel". Our only hope in these evil days is in the sanctifying power of God the Holy Ghost, giving us a revival of true religion. Visit us, O Lord, with Thy love and power and the blessedness besought in the rest of this beautiful prayer, will surely be ours. In both collects we pray for the restraining and keeping influence of God the Holy Ghost, "who sanctifieth us, and all the people of God", guiding and governing as well as comforting, all who are in Christ Jesus.

THE Epistle for this Seventh Sunday after Trinity is Rom. 6:19-23. In this Epistle and in the whole chapter spiritual life and spiritual death are set before us in strong contrast. The teaching of our Catechism is here, in reply to the fifth question: "What is the inward and spiritual grace (given us in baptism)? viz., A death unto sin, a new birth unto righteousness; for being by nature born in sin, and the children of wrath, we are hereby made the children of grace."

Life and death are both great mysteries, whether physical or spiritual, the former, the antitype of the latter, is far the greater. As we come into physical life at birth, we are born into a condition of spiritual corruption or death, from which the infant or child, as long as he is morally irresponsible is delivered by Christ's atoning blood. No one can say with certainty, when the line is reached, when we become morally accountable; but at that period the soul yields its members servants to uncleanness and to iniquity, or as servants to righteousness unto holiness. Whether consciously or not such a choice is made. The soul accepts the "wages of sin", "death", or the free gift of God, "eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord". I am sure there are some who at this period do finally refuse the wages of sin, and accept the free gift. They are few, but greatly blest, never having come into condemnation, always among the redeemed. Such was Samuel in the Old Testament, and John the Baptist in the New. What now is the relation of the rest to God? Those who have more or less unconsciously given themselves up to those things whose "end (the Epistle says) is death". How shall they, being made free from sin, renouncing its wages, become servants of God and heirs of eternal life? That change of the new birth, the birth from above, so stressed by Jesus to Nicodemus, which to the few spoken of above has come whether theirs by birth, or infant baptism, or later, must come to the rest, if they would see the kingdom of God. The offer of salvation through Christ is open to all. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved" (Acts 16:13). And this belief carries with it this new birth, as appears so plainly in the jailor's behaviour, in his case, and in that of multitudes of believers. But how many fail to feel the need of this salvation, pass on in their own way, careless of the gracious offers. For a time I myself did so, till the voice of God (through my beloved brother) called my attention to the offer of salvation so loudly spoken to us in a revival of religion then existing in our school, where one of my schoolmates had been killed instantly by accidental discharge of his gun. Some, like me, then were converted, and accepted Christ; but as usual many failed to do so.

Among those (the large majority) upon whom the revival apparently had no effect, were representatives doubtless of all the three classes named by Jesus in His parable of the Sower, who missed their opportunity, or failed eventually to profit by it. There were some who heard and understood not, deceived by Satan; some who heard with joy; but the word had no root in them; some in whom it took root, but was choked by the lust of other things. In every revival are found some of all such, and also, thanks be to God the Holy Ghost, some of the fourth class, who hear the word and receive it and bring forth fruit. Of such by His grace was I; but what can I say of the fruit brought forth? This offer of salvation, this opportunity to enter on eternal life by union with Him "that liveth and was dead and is alive forever more, and has the keys of death, and Hades" (Rev. 1:18), is open to all the gospel reaches; but how faintly it comes to some, and how strongly and loudly to others, like me. For it came to me through the voice of my elder brother, who himself then accepting the offer of salvation, was not willing to leave me behind, if by God's grace he might influence me. I remember well his coming to me, and calling my attention to the call of the Holy Spirit, now so clear in our school. Few, if any, of my schoolmates had so dear and faithful a monitor nearby. Why was I so blessed? Surely not from any dessert of mine. I was, I think, as careless and dead to His call as any of my mates; though I am sure none had had more pious and gracious guiding from earliest childhood. Nothing is stranger to me than the inequality of opportunity in this dispensation; but He is most just and most merciful and will doubtless equalize it all in the fulness of time.

THE gospel for this Seventh Sunday after Trinity is St. Mark 8:1-10, the feeding of the four thousand, in the Decapolis, some time between our Lord's third Passover (which He did not attend) and the feast of Tabernacles. As He had not long before fed the five thousand miraculously, it is strange that His disciples ask Him, "From whence can a man satisfy these men with bread here in the wilderness? unless we may read the question with emphasis on man (a mere man), implying that He, being more than man, could satisfy these four thousand as He had the five thousand. St. Matthew describes this miracle in nearly the same words as St. Mark. Our gospel notes that "divers of them came from afar", which St. Matthew omits, who also mentions women and children which St. Mark (in our Gospel) fails to note; but such differences only go to show the independence of the two narratives.

An indication of the more worldly-mindedness of the five thousand is mentioned by John (6:15), "When Jesus therefore perceived that they would come and take Him by force to make Him King. . . .". How strong is this tendency to hero-worship in unregenerate human nature! The soul that is born again, born from above, has its citizenship in heaven, of that "city that hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God" (Heb. 11:10), and can fully gratify that instinct of worship, directed toward the only true object of worship, the Lord our God. But the soul that knows not its liege Lord, Jesus Christ, gratifies its instinct by turning to any claimant that may be near, and ready to assume such guardianship, for money or other tribute. Canon Farrar in his "Life of St. Paul (Vol. I, p. 351) says (of Sergius Paulus' homage to the sorcerer, Bar-Jesus): "It does not in any way impugn the claim of Sergius Paulus to be regarded as a person of intelligence, that he had with him apparently residing in his house, a Jewish impostor named Bar-Jesus, who had arrogated to himself the complimentary title of Elymas, or Wizard. A notorious infidel like Philippe Egalite, though in other respects a man of ability, could yet try to presage his fate by the sort of cup-augury involved in examining the grounds of coffee (cf. Genesis 45:5). A belief in some personal power, the arbiter of man's destiny, above and beyond himself, is a primary necessity of the human mind. Mankind can never dispense with this belief, however superfluous in certain cases, and for a time, it may seem to be to the individual. The Noble Romans who had lost all hold on the national religion, felt themselves driven by a kind of instinctive necessity to get such a connection with the unseen world as could be furnished them by the mysticism of oriental quacks. A Marius had resorted to the prognostications of the Jewess Martha. At this particular epoch (first century) augurers, haruspices, Babylonians, mathematicians, astrologers, Magians, soothsayers, casters of horoscopes, fortune-tellers, ventriloquists, dream-interpreters, flocked to Rome in such multitudes, and acquired such vogue as to attract the indignant notice of both satirists and historians. There was scarcely a Roman family that did not keep or consult its own fore-teller of the future; and Juvenal describes the Emperor Tiberius as seated with a band of Chaldeans on his rock at Capri."

This demand of the Jews on Jesus to be their king, their Messiah, in the worldly sense in which they regarded the successor whom Moses had told them God would raise up unto them, "like unto me" (Deut. 18:15), reminds us of their demand of Samuel "to make us a king to judge us like all the nations" (1 Sam. 8:5). And then God granted their unwise demand after Samuel had, at His command, showed them "the manner of the king", that should reign over them. There is also a similarity in this demand of a king in that the chosen king, Saul, was unwilling to accept the kingship; for when the lot fell on Saul, the son of Kish, as their appointed king, he could not be found, for he had "hid himself among the stuff" (1 Sam. 10:22). Such aspirations can only be satisfied in the hearts of the citizens of that city, the new Jerusalem, described in Rev. 21, the city that had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it; for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the Light thereof" (Rev. 21:23).

"Mother of cities, o'er thy head
Bright peace with healing wings outspread,
Forever more shall dwell.
Let me, blest seat, my name behold,
Among thy citizens enrolled,
And bid the world, farewell."

NOTES SUGGESTED BY THE CONFEDERATE REUNION

By F. C. Hooks

OUR route to Little Rock was over the Southern Railway, which runs through the towns of Grand Junction and LaGrange, Tenn., where was my first pastorate more than —— years ago. These were towns of great colonial residences, occupied by the most aristocratic and cultured people of the entire South. Under the leadership of that unrivaled commander, General N. B. Forrest, we often passed through these towns whose inhabitants cheered us to the echo. From Collierville to Memphis, a distance of twenty-four miles, the improvements eclipsed anything I have seen. It is almost one continuous city. Memphis is a wonderful city. Our reunion here with friends and loved ones of the long ago was a foretaste of heaven. Here we met in the Methodist Hospital the Rev. T. N. Terry, now ninety-four, a member of Morgan's cavalry. We met also the Rev. Dr. E. B. Ramsey—perhaps his great life work is ended—sweet spirited, fundamentalist, "got no better sense than to believe the Bible from kiver to kiver". In this same hospital was Dr. Boothe Baskerville, who belonged to the same regiment with me, about to cross the dark river, and, therefore, too far gone to see me. Boothe was a gold soldier for the Confederacy and no less so for the King of kings. Here I met also W. H. Jackson and his wonderful wife; he was Superintendent of my Sunday School and Chairman of my official board forty years ago, and has kept in loving touch with me through all these years. Spent a day and night in the home of Finley Holmes, whom I married forty years ago to one of the finest girls ever born of earth, recently called to her heavenly home. And mother Holmes, now nearing the ninetieth milestone, still lingers like the aroma of heaven in the family. Like Enoch she has walked with God every day of her life. A Christian character without a flaw—almost divine in her opinions and decisions, never known to be on the wrong side of any question, raised four sons and three daughters, each and all of whom will measure up with the highest type of humanity. I met also in Memphis Colonel H. H. Lewis, who was my comrade in the Fourteenth Tennessee Cavalry, and whose brother was killed by my side in the first battle I chanced to be in, and almost fell in my arms; another comrade, John Johnson, who died the morning I passed through Memphis, I had ridden by his side at every reunion for years. General Collier, Commander in Chief of Forrest's Cavalry Corps, told me that John Johnson was a Ruling Elder in one of the leading Presbyterian Churches in Memphis, and that he had never known a man so honored for his integrity, piety and sterling honesty and veracity as John Johnson. It was genuine honor and pleasure to have Colonel Lewis as chief of my official staff; also Mrs. Stevenson, of Houston, Texas, whom I received into the church more than twenty years ago, as Matron of Honor, and her charming daughter who recently graduated at Rice University of Houston as Maid of Honor. I also met another comrade who belonged to the Fourteenth, Alex Yopp, of Arkansas, who, it was said, killed with his own hand a number of Yankees. These reunions are sweet because of the meeting of friends, who are essential to our happiness in this life and that which is to come. Comrades in war who share the dangers and perils of battles and hardships together become the dearest of all the companions of earth. These reunions will soon end in a more blessed and permanent reunion in a land where are no shadows.

The Confederates were overpowered, but never conquered. The spirit of victors dominates this veteran army. Their triumphs for four years against gigantic odds is one of the marvels of history. The North had a white population of near thirty-five millions. The Southern soldiers killed more of the enemy than they had enrolled in their army.

It was the boast of Abraham Lincoln, infidel as he was, that God was on the side of the heaviest artillery and the most men. Might with him meant right. His vision was clouded. He could not see that right is sometimes overpowered, and cruelty, murder and death sometimes wears a crown and sways a scepter, and virtue and piety sometimes struggles in the depths of poverty and oppression.

The South could have invaded the North at the battle of Manassas, for there never was an army so demoralized and routed as was the Northern army on this occasion. The Southerners could easily have gone into Washington, but the policy of the South was not invasion, all they asked was to be let alone. Hence the Southerners quietly rested under their own vine and fig tree while the North recuperated and returned with overwhelming numbers only to suffer a like defeat. They were no match for the Southerners on the battlefield, whether they were two or ten to one. Forrest never lost a fight, whether he had one to five, or one to ten. Neither Lee nor Jackson was ever defeated. And when he surrendered he had eight thousand men to the enemy's 150,000. To celebrate this famous achievement the North proposes to make a great park at Appomattox. If they do I suggest some inscriptions in bold letters that he who runs may read:

General Grant to General Sheridan: "Make all the Valley of Virginia South of the B. & O. R. R. a desert as near as possible.—U. S. Grant."

General Sheridan to General Grant: "I have so devastated the Shenandoah Valley that a crow passing over will have to carry his rations."

For all of this, Mr. Lincoln telegraphed his congratulations to General Sherman as follows: "I tender you and your brave army the thanks of the nation and my own personal admiration and gratitude for your splendid work in the Shenandoah Valley."—Abraham Lincoln.

On page 3424 of the Lives and Messages of the Presidents, prepared under the direction of a joint committee of the House and Senate of the Fifty-second Congress, may be read this Act, which was inspired and approved by Abraham Lincoln: "An Act, condemning to death and confiscating the property of all who are found guilty of rebellion against the United States." Under this act was confiscated Arlington, the beautiful home of General R. E. Lee, and to put it beyond the possibility of its ever being returned to him they made a grave-yard out of it. This estate was an inheritance by General Lee's wife from her grandmother and great-grandfather by adoption, His Excellency, George Washington, the father of his country. Arlington stands as a witness to a flagrant, inexcusable and high-handed crime of this nation. I should hate to wake up out of a stolen grave on the morning of the resurrection.

On page 3424 of the Lives and Messages of the Presidents is given Lincoln's commendation of Sherman's devastations in Georgia: "This campaign must render you famous in the annals of war and entitles you to the applause and thanks of the nation.—Abraham Lincoln." Mrs. Glassell, of Shreveport, La., give an instance of that campaign: "Mrs. Agnes Adger Law, a widow, my grandfather's sister, living on one of the best streets in Columbia, S. C., had a niece living with her, who, with her infant only a few days' old, occupied a room upstairs. My aunt sent to General Sherman for protection. He granted her request. Two officers were sent and were invited to sit down to a bountiful supper. When they had finished they arose and picked up the lighted candles and proceeded to set fire to all the inflammables in the room. My aunt had just time to get her niece and infant out of the burning building." Kaiser Bill never did anything to cap that, and this is only exceeded by Sheridan's and Hunter's diabolism in the Shenandoah Valley.

Why was all this? Surely it was not because the South had seceded, for Lincoln had said in 1848: "Any people whatever have the right to abolish the existing government and form a new one that suits them better." Horace Greely said, even after Lincoln's election: "If the cotton states shall become satisfied that they can do better outside of the union than in it, we insist on letting them do it. We must ever resist the right of any state to remain in the union and nullify the laws thereof. To withdraw from the union is quite another thing. We hope never to live in a republic whereof one section is pinned to another by bayonets." This is the principle under which the American colonies revolted against the government of England. That would be a farce of a marriage which required bayonets to keep husband and wife together. No high-born husband would desire union with such a wife or wife with such a husband.

Surely it was not to free the Negro, for Lincoln said in his inaugural, "I have neither the right nor the desire to interfere with slavery". Surely it was not because the South was cruel to the Negro. The slaves of the South were the freest and most intelligent to be found on the planet. In most cases they were treated as members of the family more than as slaves. In the same cemetery in which sleep the remains of Stonewall Jackson are two notable monuments, one by a master to a slave and one by a slave to his master. No earthly king could have a more enviable inscription on his tomb than the one on the tomb of this slave; no father could ask for a better than the one placed on the tomb of this master by his slave. When Lincoln finally decided to free the Negro, his proclamation extended only to the unprotected portions of the country in the evident hope that the Negro would rise up and exterminate the whites, as John Brown had sought to do in the beginning. But he was disappointed—the Negroes had been too well trained and too kindly treated for such atrocity. The Republican party must have thought that slavery had done wonders for the Negro to justify them for taking the government from the hands of the whites and placing it in the hands of a heathen race fresh from the wilds of Africa. We can find no other cause for this cruel war than the deep hatred and jealousy of the South.

It is common for our public speakers to grow eloquent in declaring that the country is now "united". Is it? What chance has a Southern man, either as a Republican or Democrat, to be elected President? Bob Church, a Negro, has more political influence in Tennessee than any white Republican or Democrat.

We had a great time in Little Rock. Three thousand veterans, some very feeble, some didn't look to be over forty. Arkansas is rightly called the wonder state. No state on earth has a finer citizenry, they are the highest type of the Anglo-Saxon race. Her care for her old veterans entitles her to everlasting honor and gratitude. There were seventy-five thousand visitors in Little Rock, perhaps more. Arkansas pays her Confederate veterans, all alike, $50 per month. This action was passed, several of her legislators told me, without a dissenting vote. No Massachusetts legislature will ever convene in Arkansas, as it did in Virginia last winter. The enthusiasm that characterized this Little Rock Reunion was at high tide.

THREE DIMENSIONS.

A reader writes as follows: "I would like to see an article from your pen explaining what is meant by 'high', 'low', and 'broad' as descriptive of members of the Church, both in England and America."

Sometimes it is said that such terms refer to parties in the Church, similar to Republican, Democratic, and Socialist political parties in the State. This is a poor comparison because these distinctions in the Church represent tendencies rather than partisan differences. Anything I might write about them will strike somebody wrong, for the lines are not clearly drawn. Also there is the occasional extremist who really represents nobody but himself but is plastered with one of these labels by the people who disagree with him.

These tendencies within the Church are better paralleled in political life by such terms as "conservative", "liberal", and "radical". There are no such political parties but there are such tendencies and the terms indicate certain learnings which are fairly well understood but are seldom clearly defined.

The difference is one of emphasis more than anything else. So-called "High Church" persons throw special stress on the historical catholicity of the Church and its sacramental principles. "Low Church" people emphasize the authority of the Holy Scriptures and personal religious experience. While "Broad Church" people bear down heavily on the ministry of social service and freedom to experiment. Apart from the aforesaid extremists, any one of these groups would subscribe to all three of these classifications, but they will approach them from different angles. It is a question of emphasis. Generally speaking, the High Church group uses more form and ceremony in public worship than the other two, but such differences are relative. I could tell you of a parish using candles, crosses, and eucharistic vestments which would be considered quite "high" by parishes where such things are not used, but would be considered rather "low" by certain other parishes which use a good deal more. Also I could tell you of a parish using very simple externals of worship but teaching strong Catholic principles.

The High Church emphasis is historically associated with the Caroline Divines of the seventeenth century—men like Laud and Andrewes in their staunch Church loyalty as against Puritanism. The Low Church emphasis is sometimes called evangelical and is closely associated with the Evangelical movement inaugurated by the Wesleys in the Church of England. The former appeared in this country in the person of Bishop Seabury while the latter was well illustrated by Bishop White, a century or more ago. The Broad Church emphasis had such men as Kingsley, Maurice, and Arnold of Rugby as its special exponents in England seventy-five years ago. Perhaps the outstanding American example was Phillips Brooks.

It is impossible to shut up High, Low, and Broad in compartments and book everybody in the Church accordingly. Now and then people of a controversial frame of mind make capital out of some passing issue and try to drive everybody into one or another of several carefully segregated camps. I can think of nothing worse for the Church—unless it might be for all of us to think in exactly the same way about everything. Being a normal, reasonably intelligent cross-section of human life, the members of the Episcopal Church enjoy a variety of opinions and a diversity of preferences. They can do this and still be Christians and Churchmen, equally honest and equally entitled to consideration.—F. E. W., in The Witness.

REMORSE.

By the Rev. Henry Darlington.

The fact is that remorse is like a pain in the body which tells us that something is wrong. It warns us that we are slipping from our ideals, and makes us sensitive to them. It implies that the one so suffering feels that the ideal has been lost. Yet remorse should not dicourage us, for that is where the wideness of God's mercy comes in. If we are ready to make acknowledgment that we have failed, our remorse, instead of driving us to despair, reacts for the benefit of our souls.

Too often we forget that there is only one sin that cannot be forgiven, and that sin is against the Holy Spirit. If we say as Lucifer speaks in Paradise Lost, "I am so far down that there is no hope for me", that is a sin which cannot be forgiven.

But when we recognize that sin is anything that separates the soul from God, and when the soul turns to God and decides to wipe out that separation, then begins the newness of life.

Supposing a son realizes that he can never express to the mother who is gone, how he feels about her. Does he still not have his life in this world? Can he not start immediately to retrieve what he has done, by living a life which his mother would have had him live?

I am convinced that we can spiritually send on the knowledge that the son is re-living and re-making himself consecrating his life to good works in her name.

A man who was suffering deep remorse, found in his mother's old trunk a pair of little shoes he had worn when a baby. They were labeled, "The Shoes My Son Wore When He Stood on God's Smile". It recalled the time when, as a child, he had seen a beam of sunlight on the floor after a heavy rain, and, standing on the spot, had told his mother he was standing on God's Smile. Whereupon she had told him to continue always to stand on God's Smile, to serve other people and not think of himself. That remembrance redeemed him. He began to try to think of others, and as he did so he lost his despair and remorse. Today he feels that his loved ones will understand that he has tried to redeem himself.

Let us remember that even if our hearts condemn us, God will forgive, if we have turned to Him. He is greater than our hearts.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed—"Thy word have I hid in my heart" (Psalm 119:11).

This week the following verse was submitted by A. B. W., of Plantersville, S. C.:

"Who shall separate us from the love of Christ?" (Romans 8:35).

Who will send one from the far-away places, as well as very near us?

The Great Commission

APPEAL FROM NORTHEAST INDIA GENERAL MISSION.

We have felt led to acquaint a few of our friends with the remarkable evidence of our Lord's approval of our great work in North East India. Areas that hitherto were closed to our workers, have recently been flung wide open with an appealing invitation to enter and tell them the Glad News of Salvation.

On May 5, we learned from Mr. Roberts, our Field Director in India, that the Heathen Prince, in control of the State of Manipur in Assam—a territory where he has never been permitted to go unhindered to preach—had been thrown open, and the British Governor of Assam had issued an order, opening the whole Southwest portion to our Mission exclusively, and in his manifesto suggests that our Mission open a Medical Station in this area as soon as possible.

The cost of doing this Pioneering Work, locating Stations in areas where the people have never heard of Christ, and planting a Medical Station in Manipur as the Governor of Assam requested, will require approximately $10,000. From friends to whom we have made known these appeals, we have already received a gift of $1,000 from a gentleman in Mississippi, another of $1,000 from Boston, one of $500 from Ohio, another $500 gift from Philadelphia, and a group of ladies have banded themselves together to furnish $1,500. Other gifts have been received, bringing the amount now required down to only $3,500.

Believing that you are interested in Pioneer Missionary work, we are taking the liberty to ask you to join with us in prayer that we may know His will. "Behold, I have set before thee an open door and no man can shut it" (Rev. 3:8).

These appeals are pressing and must be answered. Will you enter in with us?

In His glad service,

H. H. Coleman, Secretary.

MISSION LIBRARY IN NEED.

One small but important department of Boone College, Wuchang, has been functioning cheerfully, especially since Miss Mary E. Wood's return some months ago, and that is the Library School. It has had seven students, and expects a new and larger class in September. Miss Wood, on returning, was delighted to find that many friends had continued to send periodicals all through the stormy times. Mr. Seng, the Chinese who was in charge of the library, stood his ground and, with a faithful servant, who acted as watchman, saw that not a book was stolen. The reference department needs to be built up, however, especially the natural science and economics sections, which are out of date. The Church Periodical Club, 22 West Forty-eighth Street, New York, will supply more exact information.

KOKONOR GOSPEL MISSION: ASSEMBLIES OF GOD.

Tangar, Kansu, China.

It was very interesting to me, on arrival at Calcutta, to read a press clipping which told how I had been murdered by the Tibetans. Later on I heard that a few religious papers said a few nice things about me—as is the usual case when one crosses the great divide. Well, praise the Lord, I am still alive and going pretty well at present. I had a very good time among the Tibetans. No trouble anywhere. God wonderfully blessed.

I left my station on May 18, 1927. I had my caravan loaded to the limit with food and other supplies. Five natives accompanied us and we were off to do what we could to evangelize that section that had never before been penetrated by a foreigner. It was a venture, I admit. All we knew was that there were wild tribes of Tibetans there in this great unexplored region.

We had wonderful opportunities and gave the message of Salvation through Jesus to thousands. We passed as many as one hundred and two tents in one day and tried to reach all with the message. At this time of the year all the men of the Dsun district gather at one place for eight days to read their religious writings. Here they put up two very large tents and several smaller ones for the occasion. It was a wonderful opportunity for me. So I spent a few days there among these people giving them the message of the Cross. As the head of every family was there, I was able to get the gospel to every tent. This was wonderful for Dsun District.

From here to Shiabden Gomba in Central Tibet it took us fifty-one days. Shiabden Gomba is in the district of Nag-chu-kha, north of Lhasa.

At this time there was a fair on here and I spent some days giving the message of the Cross to the great crowds that had come from all parts of this district. One priest asked me, "Where sin came from if we did not take animal life? Where does the very poor person go when he dies?" I explained to him how sin came into the world, that all are sinners regardless of what we have or have not done. Then I told him that rich and poor alike would go to perdition if they did not accept Jesus Christ as their Saviour. I told him more of the Way of Eternal Life and spoke to him of the hollowness of his religion and how that the Christian doctrine helped us to live a pure and honest life and brought happiness into our life.

During my stay at Shiabden Gomba I met some officials from Tashi-lumpo, the home of the great Pan-chen Rin-po-che, of whom you read so much during the past two years. I had a good talk with these men and when they left gave them a Testament. I also saw that the gospel reached the Forbidden City.

At Sonemarg, in Kashmir, the telegraph office was completely smashed, two men killed in the operating room and four others buried in the same place by a great avalanche. The place was completely crushed. Miles of the line was swept away just ahead of us by one of these avalanches. Many people lost their lives in this way this last winter. As we descended the snow very suddenly disappeared at Kangan, just one day from Srinagar. This last day it just poured down rain, previous to this it was all snow, and the road was so muddy. We all were thoroughly soaked and were fine objects in the great up-to-date place of Srinagar where the flowers were in full bloom. Oh! what a change, all in one day from the deep Himalayan snows into the beautiful flower garden. The change was too sudden for my good as I soon began to feel the heat. Srinagar was reached on March 29, 1928. From here, to the railway in India I traveled by auto, a distance of two hundred miles, in a little more than one day. This, too, was a change from seven miles a day by yak to over a hundred miles in less than half the time.

I arrived in Shanghai on May 11, just one year, less a few days, after leaving my station in Tangar. Many thousands have heard the gospel for the first time. I was the only missionary ever to accomplish such a trip in Tibet. For this I praise the Lord. Hard as it was I am very happy that He thought me worthy and helped me through all the difficult and hard places. Time alone will reveal the results of this trip into those unknown parts. Yes, already there is a little fruit for my old faithful yak driver accepted Jesus Christ as his Saviour. And a very decided change has already taken place in his life.

From Tangar to Leh we traveled 183 days—a new camp each day. The distance is approximately 2,437 miles.

This was measured by timing the animals at different times and places and under different traveling conditions, then the average taken. The cost of the trip is slightly over $2,000 U. S. currency, not very much considering the long distance and the time among the people. Since the last literature report we have distributed the following: Bible portions, New Testaments and Gospels in Chinese, 54,187 and 17,265 tracts. In the Tibetan language we distributed—Bible portions and Gospels—73,396, and 46,542 tracts. Praise God for this! Many thousands have gone into places where the Gospel was never heard before.

I hope to return to Tangar as soon as conditions will permit. Then I hope to continue my evangelistic work and travel through the northern parts of Tibet westward and northward. No one has ever been through this part and it is a vast region. Please do not forget to pray for me. For the present I am well, only just a little worn. But that will soon wear off, as I keep moving about. Mail sent to the Shanghai address will always reach me.

Book Reviews

THE CHRIST OF THE BY-WAYS: By the Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., LL. D. Cloth. Pp. 191. Published by the Revell Company, 158 Fifth Avenue, New York City. Price $1.75.

Not often may a reviewer enjoy the privilege of commenting upon the work of a former and deeply loved student. The knowledge of the author reaching back many years, heightens one's appreciation of his later achievements. Following him from his Sunday-school days in a parish marked for its strong evangelical principles and practices, it has been a joy to note that this now illustrious man has never departed from the standards of that early period of his life. This absorbing love for souls is indicated in the volume before us. An insatiable passion to reach and uplift others has been the distinguishing note in Bishop Freeman's preaching and service. When, some years ago, Mr. Franklin, in presenting the Nation-Wide Campaign, referred to a parish in the West whose congregations on Sunday were more than fifty per cent men, there was no hesitancy on the part of those of us who felt we knew, to fix the location of that church. At the close, curiosity led to an inquiry which disclosed the rector to be Dr. Freeman. We may not be amiss if we trace the possibility of the influence upon Bishop Freeman, of the business life which preceded his preparation for the ministry. His filing case system of locating his literary "finds", is apparent in the frequent and fitting quotations which adorn his paragraphs. But most of all, we are charmed by the wide vision of hope in the saving of men through our Lord Jesus, which confirms our notion of his relation to that former life of business association. His pure English suggests his devotion to Shakespeare, which as a student he showed manifestly. Our author is not a dogmatist in doctrine; indeed, in his writings there is a sincere desire to find the good in everything, even the "revolt", which marks the modern attitude toward the ancient faith. If some of us are disposed to be strict in our adherence to, and loyalty for the minute particularities of our cherished beliefs, we may honor one who is so big-hearted that he can discover the truth resident in impalpable error. The only warning we have to offer with regard to this book is that the reader shall prepare himself for an extravagant outlay of cash. For he will no sooner have begun this volume, ere forthwith he will feel the stimulation to get all the books of the Bishop indicated on the title page.

MINISTERIAL ETHICS AND ETIQUETTE: By the Rev. Nolan B. Harmon, Jr., M. A. Cloth. Pp. 180. Published by the Cokesbury Press, Nashville, Tenn. Price $1.50.

If we were humorously affected by the recently reviewed "Morals for Ministers", this book presses the point more minutely into the details of the personality and principles involved in ministerial contacts. It has been said of more than one man, "If we could pen him in the pulpit and keep him from spoiling all the good he does us in his preaching by the inconsistencies of his daily life, we should have an ideal pastor". As gastric juice to the food we take, the digestant of preaching and ministerial labor lies in the longing of the auditors to know with heart-felt intimacy, the man who has been called to be their spiritual leader. The author well defines his purpose in the preface, which should be carefully read. And his list of other contributions on this so-important theme is a revelation to the reader of the deep thought which previous writers have expended in seeking to save the ministry from humiliating failure. The chapters on The Profession, The Man, The Brother Minister, The Pastor, The Church, are full of point and pungency. The entire book has a distinct appeal to both clergy and laity. Let every minister have a copy; and to this end may some kindly layman in every parish see that his pastor has it. We especially commend the valuable index at the close for ready reference to special items. Thus may the book contribute to the furnishing of the man of God in ideal life and fruitful service.

CHANGES IN WORSHIP.

Mr. Editor:

I owe so much to you. Your fine, heroic work in taking up the responsibility of the dear "Southern Church". I feel like saying, "Fling out the banner, let it float", even as our dear Dr. McKim of Epiphany Church, Washington, had us often to sing (after two wars), and I wish daily that another saint in our ministry could or would arise to lead us in singing, "Heaven is My Home" and "He Leadeth Me, O Blessed Thought", familiar hymns, now entirely omitted by paid choirs and young boys. There is little singing by "congregation" here in Baltimore, although good leaders might encourage young people to do so. I am very nearly eighty years old and feel this and many other changes in the worship of the "Protestant Episcopal Church of America".

I thank you for your noble effort to prevent the loss of our "Thirty-nine Articles". My two nephews in Burlington, N. C., and the Rev. Mr. Opie, their minister, are deeply interested in keeping our Church true and loyal to first Principles. The true Faith and purity of our belief in Christ Jesus our Divine Master and to Him only.

I pray daily that your influence may succeed in stemming the tide of worldly pomp and the ambition of bishops. I am mailing as many signatures to your plea to retain the Thirty-nine Articles as I can obtain. I am not a ritualist. I have seen persecutions and losses to our small churches in West North Carolina.

If your office lady can decipher this, I am hoping you may let me hear in other ways that I can lend a helping hand. I am always a subscriber.

MARYLAND'S PART.

Mr. Editor:

Permit me a brief letter, indorsing your editorial, "Danger", in the June 18 issue of The Southern Churchman.

Most timely is your warning against the inter-meddling of Churches in political questions; most truly do you point out how mischievous, in its results, was such inter-meddling by Northern Churches in the great inter-sectional controversy of seventy years ago. (That the real, basic motives of the great anti-Southern crusade were, however, political and commercial or economic.)

My father, the late Wm. B. Everett, Sr., long a Presbyter of the Diocese of Virginia (and one of the Maryland boys who, risking confiscation of their property, ran the blockade into the Confederate army), was studying medicine in Baltimore at the outbreak of the war; and I have heard him state that it was said, at that time, that Baltimore was more Southern in sentiment than was Richmond. And never forget that the first life blood for the Confederacy was shed by civilians of Baltimore on April 19, 1861 ("the Anniversary of Lexington")—there having been no Southern fatality in the taking of Sumter a few days before. See, further, General Bradley T. Johnson's graphic story of Maryland's part, in the work, Confederate Military History; also, Scharf's History of Maryland. (The historical parts of my novel, For Maryland's Honor—copy of descriptive folder inclosed, if I find one—are based largely on Johnson.)

Maryland's star, a lost Pleiad, had its rightful place in the constellation of the Southern Cross, on Dixie's Crucial Banner. My mother (a Virginian, living in North Carolina during the war), told how, in tableaux of the times, young girls represented the Southern States, Maryland being shown by a maiden in chains.

With advance thanks for your indulgence, and with best wishes for yourself and for The Southern Church (subscribed for in our family since 1866, inclusive).

VOICE OF LAYMEN.

Mr. Editor:

Please excuse this informality, but I feel that you are more than a friend, through our dear old Southern Churchman. More thank you than you can ever know for bringing the wanderer back to the Bible Faith our mothers taught us. Last Friday Mrs. Robert Beverley of Essex said to me, "I enjoy the Southern Churchman more than I ever have".

If our laymen and laywomen have a voice, I don't believe we will ever lose our Thirty-nine Articles. I feel we will lose our dear old Church, in time, if they ever are taken out of the Prayer Book.

GRATITUDE.

Mr. Editor:

As one whose family (the Masons of Gunsten Hall, Va.) have been members of the Church as far as we have any records, I take pleasure in signing the enclosed petition, and I shall try to remind all of my friends to sign the said petition. The other day I discovered that some very loyal Church members had not "seen" the petition, though they are constant readers of the Southern Churchman. The Churchman is better with each issue. The entire Church owes you a debt of gratitude for the stand you have taken. I hope that you and your assistants may continue your good work and that your influence may induce our beloved Church to continue steadfast in "the faith once delivered to the saints".

Peninsula Summer School.

The tenth annual session of the Peninsula Summer School was held with great success at Ocean City, Md., June 24 to 29. The enrollment of more than 200 was the greatest in the history of the school. Several of the faculty were unable to attend at the last moment, but their places were filled by able substitutes. The school started each morning with a service of Holy Communion at St. Paul's-by-the-Sea, and the sessions were held in the forenoon in the local high school. The ocean and the bay provided splendid opportunity for recreation in the afternoon. The whole atmosphere of the conference was most instructive and inspiring.

The Peninsula Summer School is under the control of the Dioceses of Delaware and Easton, the Rt. Rev. George W. Davenport, Bishop of Easton being President, and the Rev. Richard W. Trapnell, of Wilmington, Vice-President. The Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, Bishop of Delaware, had charge of the devotional life and conducted a course for the whole School on Personal Religion. Arrangements for the school were in the hands of the Rev. Charles L. Atwater, of Chestertown, Md.

Large Gifts to the Cathedral.

Two anonymous gifts totaling $300,000 were received last week for the National Cathedral at Washington. The donors are said to be prominent citizens of the Middle West, who prefer that their names shall not be revealed. They ask that the money be used to push forward the building.

New Board of Directors for Virginia Episcopal School.

The control of the Virginia Episcopal School at Lynchburg, having been taken over by the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia at the session of the Annual Council in May, it became necessary for the Executive Board, acting for the Council, to elect the new Board of Directors to govern the affairs of the school.

At the meeting of the Executive Board of the Diocese, held in Roanoke, July 12, the Board of Directors of the Virginia Episcopal School was elected as follows:

The Rt. Rev. Robert Carter Jett, D. D., Roanoke, President Ex-Officio.

The Rev. Carleton Barnwell, Lynchburg.

The Rev. Alfred R. Berkeley, Roanoke.

The Rev. John J. Gravatt, Jr., Staunton.

The Rev. Devall L. Gwathmey, Wytheville.

Col. William M. Brodie, Blacksburg.

Mr. Edward L. Carrington, Lynchburg.

Mr. Chas. M. Hunter, Tazewell.

Mr. S. V. Kemp, Lynchburg.

Col. William King, Jr., Lynchburg.

Bishop Jett has issued a call for the first meeting of this Board at the parish house of St. Paul's Church, Lynchburg, on Tuesday, July 24, 1928, at 2:45 P. M.

Episcopal City Mission Society Vacation Centers.

Two hundred and eighty children and their mothers embarked last week by boat or train for vacation centers of the Episcopal City Mission Society, the Rt. Rev. William T. Manning, D. D., President, which opens its thirty-seventh season of fresh air work this week.

Two hundred and ten of these country-bound sojourners will be in charge of Miss Elizabeth Klein, Fresh Air Registrar for the Episcopal Society, who will take them by private train from the Grand Central Station to Sarah Schermerhorn House, the organization's big fresh air center at Milford, Conn. At this center there are facilities, not only for unaccompanied children but for mothers with children, single women and girls in their teens; and, on the same estate, a special camp for small boys of from six to ten years who need to vacation near their mothers.

At the same time that Miss Klein is leaving with her trainload of vacationers, Chaplain T. W. B. Magnan, Director of Boys' Work for the Episcopal Mission Society, will be pushing off from Manhattan at One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street with seventy older boys of from eleven to eighteen years, bound for the Society's new boys' center known as Camp Wanasquetta at Kanohwahke Lakes, Bear Mountain. This well-equipped center has been taken over recently from the Boy Scouts of America and will be used by the Episcopal leaders for the boys who attend its recreational and club activities in the chapels and neighborhood houses operated by the organization.

The two parties leaving today for Milford and Bear Mountain have been chosen from St. Cyprian's Church and St. Martin's Chapel in Harlem, the two colored chapels maintained by the Society. The colored parties will stay two weeks and will be followed by groups from the other churches and neighborhood houses maintained under the same direction.

Another vacation center also administered by the Episcopal City Mission Society, through the courtesy of Mrs. J. Hull Browning, is Rethmore Home at Tenafly, N. J., where vacation periods of from two to twelve weeks are provided for little undernourished children from three to seven years of age. This center opened last Friday, with a census of seventy-five small children. Thus the Society's fresh air season opens with a total enrollment of three hundred and fifty-five boys and girls and their mothers in all its centers enjoying vacation outings.

This year the vacation season will run into September, thus making facilities of this organization available for one thousand five hundred and fifty frail or tired fresh air guests. Already Miss Klein has had applications for practically the full census. As it costs $17.50 for every vacation of two weeks it will be necessary, according to the Superintendent, the Rev. L. Ernest Sunderland, D. D., for the Society to secure $30,000 in order that not a single applicant may be disappointed.

All cheques should be made to Harry P. Robbins, Treasurer, 38 Bleecker Street.

"The Rest" Opens.

For the thirty-sixth year, according to an announcement from the rector, the Rev. Dr. Henry Darlington, the vacation home, known as "The Rest", has been opened by the Church of the Heavenly Rest and Beloved Disciple at Copake Falls in Columbia County.

Located sixteen miles this side of Chatham, one hundred and four miles from New York, The Rest has for its setting one of the most picturesque sections of the Berkshires.

Established at Copake Falls in 1892, through the gift of five acres of land from Mrs. W. J. Cassard and Mrs. E. V. S. Pomeroy, the home was enlarged through the gift of additional acres made in 1893 by the late Dr. and Mrs. Frederick Humphreys. Since that time the house which originally stood upon these pieces of property has been greatly enlarged and improved, until they now meet requirements of a modern vacation home. Girls and women from infancy to old age are received, and boys from infancy to sixteen years. Both accompanied and unaccompanied children are admitted. "It is our belief," stated Dr. Darlington yesterday, "that the Church has a definite obligation to its young people in the matter of their health. We cannot hope to bring spiritual enrichment to their lives if bodies and minds are not ready healthfully to receive and express new spiritual power."

Bequests for Church Purposes.

The will of Rear Admiral Presley M. Rixey, United States Navy, retired, was probated last week in Arlington County, Virginia, where he had made his home the last years of his life. It bequeaths several substantial gifts for work connected with the Episcopal Church. The endowment fund of St. John's Church, Washington City, receives $5,000; St. John's Orphanage, $5,000; building fund of the National Cathedral, $10,000; the House of Mercy of the District of Columbia, $5,000; trustees of St. Mary's, Church of Our Mothers, Rixey Station, Arlington County, especially to protect it from debt, $20,000. Another bequest is of $10,000 to the University of Virginia. The admiral's widow, Mrs. Earlena English Rixey, is left $100,000 and the income on the residue of the estate after payment of bequests. John S. Barbour, to whom $5,000 is left as a special testimonial of friendship, and the Virginia Trust Company, of Richmond, are trustees and executors.

Woman's Auxiliary.

The congregation of St. Luke the Beloved Physician at Excelsior Springs was host to the diocesan branch of the Woman's Auxiliary on May 3. Seventy-five members were present at the celebration of the Holy Communion and sermon by the Rev. Henry N. Hyde and at the luncheon and business sessions. The missionary address in the afternoon was made by the Rev. James P. DeWolfe, rector of St. Andrew's Church, Kansas City. The Auxiliary voted to raise and appropriate an annual sum of six hundred dollars in addition to its regular obligations and objects, for the purpose of assisting the diocese to place a resident clergyman at Nevada and Lamar. Delegates elected for the triennial meeting in Washington in October were Mrs. Benjamin S. Brown, Mrs. Henry Burr, Miss M. Louise Howard and Mrs. Ralph E. Swofford, all of Kansas ityC.

Building at Christ Church, Springfield.

Christ Church, Springfield, is rejoicing in the completion and occupancy of its new chancel. Its walls of Carthage stone rise high above the present nave of wood and bespeak the beauty and impressiveness which are to come. Bishop Partridge confirmed the first class to kneel in the new sanctuary on Whitsunday. The new parish house of stone, adjacent to the church, was completed last autumn. The Rev. Charles G. Fox is rector.

The old home parish of Bishop Ethelbert Talbot, and of Bishop Abiel Leonard, St. Mary's, Fayete, Mo., the second oldest parish in the diocese, dating from 1836, has resumed the holding of regular servces after a year's interruption. Its venerable house of worship is in perfect condition and its interior is a blend of ancient charm and dignity with modern cleanliness and cheerful brightness. Fayette is the site of Central College, of whose faculty and students some are members of the church and attendants at services at St. Mary's. The Rev. Henry N. Hyde, Executive Secretary of the Diocese, is acting for the time as priest-in-charge.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Rt. Rev. H. L. Burleson, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. B. Roberts. D. D., Suffragan.

Annual Convocation.

The forty-fourth annual Convocation of the District of South Dakota began on Sunday morning, June 17. There was an early celebration of the Holy Communion in the Cathedral. Bishop Burleson celebrated, assisted by Bishop Roberts, Dean Woodruff, and Dr. John K. Burleson. At the 10:30 service the Rev. Robert Patton, D. D., Director of the American Church Institute for Negroes, preached the sermon. A quintet from our Southern Negro schools took part in the musical rendering of the service. Dr. Patton and his singers remained throughout the sessions of the Convocation and for a part of the Summer Conference which followed and were a great inspiration and help.

The opening session of Convocation was held Sunday afternoon. The Bishops delivered their addresses, followed by organization and the appointment of committees. At this time the Church Service League of this women organized for their work. In the evening there was a united service in the Congregational Church, at which Dr. Patton preached and the quintet sang. This service was participated in by a large number of our Christian brethren.

The business sessions began Monday morning and lasted until Tuesday noon. The attendance and the interest shown were unusually good. The election of delegates to the General Convention resulted as follows: Clerical, the Ven. Edward Ashley, deputy; the Rev. Messrs. R. P. Frazier and E. B. Woodruff, alternates. Lay, Mr. Max Royhl, deputy; Mr. J. E. Mather, alternate. Mr. Max Royhl, the new chancellor of the district, appointed in the place of the Hon. John H. Gates, deceased.

In connection with the Bishop's address, recognition was made of the work of the Rev. Dr. Edward Ashley, Archdeacon of Niobrara, who, on May 9, completed his fifty-fourth year in the Dakota Indian field. In connection with this, the Bishop read the congratulatory resolutions passed by the recent meeting of the National Council, and on behalf of the Presiding Bishop and the National Council presented to the Archdeacon a beautiful Bible fittingly inscribed.

The record of the business of the year as presented by the Executive Council, was given a careful review by a committee of outstanding laymen, who made helpful recommendations. The report of the Church League of the Isolated was presented by Mrs. Vanix, and showed the following figures: Five hundred and twenty-one families on the regular roll and twenty-five other households. Two thousand, four hundred and seventy-four letters, 2,212 cards, 2,943 papers, 1,768 leaflets and 414 miscellaneous articles have been sent out. The Lenten offering, from the tiny children came to $129.11, averaging $2 per box. The cost of this unique service has been only $150, while the money gifts received from these people have amounted to $191.51. All this is the work of one woman, confined to a hospital, able to use only two fingers in manipulating her typewriter.

Sympathetic and heartfelt memorials were passed upon the death of John H. Gates, Chancellor, and Mrs. Helen E. Burleson, wife of the Bishop.

The Convocation gave much attention to All Saints' School, particularly in connection with the close of the Peabody regime. Forty-four years ago, when the school began, Miss Helen Peabody became principal and acted in that capacity for thirty-eight years. She was succeeded by her younger sister, Miss Eunice D. Peabody, who was principal for six years. During the entire life of the school it has been under the leadership of one family—a most unusual record. With the resignation of Miss Eunice Peabody, a new regime begins, the future principal being Miss Blanche Pittman (M. A., Columbia), daughter of a Newfoundland clergyman. With regret for the severing of old ties is manifested a hopeful expectation for the future.

The inspiring presence of the Rev. Dr. Patton resulted in the adoption of a plan to provide what he called "the missing link", i. e., a district-wide committee of laymen to promote the Church's mission and to organize and lead the congregations. South Dakota is the first diocese to put this into official operation.

On Monday evening the Men's' Club of the Cathedral entertained the men of the Convocation at a dinner and the women of the parish were the hostesses of the Church Service League.

The Convocation adjourned with a feeling of universal satisfaction, after voting to continue the plan tried for the first time at this convocation for meeting in community and living as a family.

The Convocation was followed immediately by the assembly of the ten-day Summer Conference, which opened the same evening with an excellent attendance.

ALABAMA.

Rt. Rev. W. G. McDowell, D. D., Bishop.

Clerical Changes.

There is considerable movement among the clergy of Alabama during the summer. The Ven. V. G. Lowery, since 1924 Archdeacon of the Tennessee Valley, with residence in Sheffield, Ala., will move on the first of September to Ensley, for the purpose of reorganizing St. John's congregation in this thriving suburb of Birmingham. Mr. Lowery will also have charge of Trinity Church, West End, Birmingham. He will retain the title of Archdeacon.

The Rev. Joseph R. Walker, of the "South Baldwin" field, will take charge of Trinity Church, Demopolis, the first Sunday in August.

The Rev. Joseph Fulford, of Trinity Church, West End, Birmingham, on the first Sunday in July became minister-in-charge of "South Baldwin" field, in succession to the Rev. Joseph R. Walker. This field consists of St. Paul's, Floey; St. Alban's, Loxley; St. John's, Robertsdale, and St. Paul's, Daphne. Mr. Fulford will occupy the rectory at Daphne.

After a year's ministry at Marion, Ala., the Rev. E. K. Neff returned to the Church of the Advent, Birmingham, Ala., to assist the Rev. Charles Clingman, D. D. In this capacity Mr. Neff served his diaconate at the Advent, with such satisfaction to rector and congregation that after a year's absence he was induced to return.

The Rev. S. G. Sanchez, recently assistant principal of St. Mark's School, Birmingham, entered upon his duties as minister in charge of the Church of the Good Shepherd (colored), Mobile, Ala., the first Sunday in July.

The Diocese of Alabama sustains a severe loss in the decision of the Rev. Oscar de Wolf Randolph to accept the position of rector and headmaster of the Virginia Episcopal School, Lynchburg, Va. During his ministry of nine years at St. Mary's-on-the-Highlands, Birmingham, the church has made notable progress, both in membership and achievement. Mr. Randolph's influence extended far beyond the bounds of his own congregation. Besides being prominent in civic affairs, he was President of the Standing Committee of the Diocese, a member of the Diocesan Executive Committee and Treasurer of the Department of Missions. Birmingham papers, lamenting the fact of Mr. Randolph's retirement from the work of St. Mary's, spoke appreciatively of the influence of Mrs. Randolph also. Mr. Randolph goes to his new field the middle of August.

Consecration of Churches.

St. Paul's Church, Daphne, Alabama, the Rev. Joseph R. Walker, rector, was consecrated on the Second Sunday after Trinity, by the Rt. Rev. Wm. G. McDowell, D. D. The church was the gift to the congregation of Mr. and Mrs. T. L. Malone, in memory of their son, Gratz Moses Malone. An interesting feature of this church is that the altar and other fittings are products of the Daphne Pottery Company.

The Church of the Holy Comforter, Gadsden, Ala., was consecrated on Trinity Sunday. The Holy Communion was celebrated at 7:30 A. M., by the Rt. Rev. E. C. Seaman, D. D., Bishop of North Texas. At 9 A. M. the Holy Communion was celebrated by the rector, the Rev. C. Morton Murray. The consecration service took place at eleven o'clock, the consecrator being the Rt. Rev. Wm. G. McDowell, D. D., who was also the preacher and celebrant at the Choral Communion Service. At this service the rector was epistler and the gospel was read by the Bishop of Texas. The rite of confirmation was administered by Bishop McDowell.

The cornerstone of All Saints' Parish House, Mobile, was laid Thursday, June 14, by the Rt. Rev. Wm. G. McDowell, D. D. The building is being constructed of field stone, to correspond with the church edifice, which it adjoins. The parish house is to cost above $80,000.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rt. Rev. Thomas J. Garland, D. D., Bishop.

Bequests.

A bequest of $5,000 for endowment of a bed in the Episcopal Hospital in memory of her uncle, Samuel G. King, Mayor of Philadelphia, from 1881 to 1884, was provided by Marie A. Brown, West Philadelphia.

The testatrix also bequeathed $1,000 each to the Home of the Merciful Saviour for Crippled Children, House of St. Michael's and All Angels and the Philadelphia Home for Incurables. Bequests of $500 each were made to Rush Hospital, Sunday Breakfast Association and the Richmond Soup Society. To St. Andrew's Church, and to the Rev. William J. Cox, rector of that church, she bequeathed $250 each.

MISSISSIPPI.

Rt. Rev. T. DuB. Bratton, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. M. Green, D. D., Coadjutor.

The Spirit of the Rural Field.

In a smiling country-side covering two counties and part of the third, which a year ago was a desolate waste of raging waters varying in depth from two to twenty feet, it was the privilege of Captain T. H. Shields, Executive Secretary of the Diocese, to visit the homes of our people the past week. The purpose of his visit was to help them to organize and consolidate themselves into a Church Field. With Rolling Fork in Sharkey County as a center, groups at Cary, Blanton, Mayersville, Anguilla, Nita Yuma, Cameta, Percy, Hollandale and Estill cheerfully subscribed according to their means to the support of the work and the calling of Mr. Elnathan Tartt, who is to be ordained on June 24. A year ago the beautiful little brick church at Rolling Fork, just completed, was submerged by the flood waters; the homes visited were flooded in varying depths and the little church at Mayersville all but wrecked by the same disaster. And yet a year following they are come together, facing a year, as yet, of uncertainty as to the outcome of their crops to say courageously: "Come on, let's go", in the forming of one of the most outstanding rural fields it is our privilege to know of. Through the faithful ministrations of the Rev. C. E. Woodson, of Vicksburg, this devoted band of Church people have in the time of their tribulations been held together as a Church group and they are grateful in the hour of their comeback.

Mission at Tunica.

The Rt. Rev. William Mercer Green, Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of Mississippi, has just closed a wonderful mission held at Tunica, Miss., for the town of Tunica and the surrounding country. This was "Episcopal Year" for the community. Large crowds attended all services. Service was held morning and evening. A large purse was given by the community to the Bishop Coadjutor, to be used at his discretion.

The Very Rev. I. Noe, Dean of St. Mary's Cathedral, Memphis, Tenn., has been invited by the community of Carrollton to hold the Community Revival in the near future.

IDAHO.

Rt. Rev. F. H. Touret, D. D., Bishop.

Work at Moscow.

"Beyond a doubt one of the most important single pieces of work in the State of Idaho is that among the students at Moscow," writes Bishop Barnwell to his missionary district, and what he says applies elsewhere. "Here we have the future leadership of both State and Church. There are nearly two hundred boys and girls there who give our Church as their preference, and many of these are already communicants. We have a nice little church in Moscow, but it is old and inadequate and located a mile from the college center. It is our ambition to put a new church on the edge of the campus, where all that the Church stands for may be presented to the students in the most attractive possible way.

"A certain part of our missionary offering has been designated for this purpose. This will help, but it will not do the work by itself. It will have to be supplemented by the gifts of the people all over the State of Idaho. In a very real sense this work is the work of us all. There is not a parish in the State nor a mission which has not had or will not have some of its finest boys and girls at the university. Those are your boys and girls for whom we are building a church."

FLORIDA.

Rt. Rev. F. A. Juhan, D. D., Bishop.

St. John's Parish, Jacksonville, the second largest congregation in the diocese of Florida, is now in charge of the Rev. Newton Middleton, who entered upon his rectorship on Sunday, June the seventeenth. The Rev. Mr. Middleton comes to Florida from Norfolk, Virginia, and succeeds the late Rev. Menard Doswell, who died suddenly in December, 1927.

The new minister of St. John's is 43 years old, having been born in Washington, D. C., in 1865. He is a graduate of the University of the South, Sewanee, Tennessee, from both the academic and theological departments. He was ordained deacon on June 15, 1915, and accepted a call to St. Paul's Church, Albany, Georgia, his first church. In the fall of the same year he was advanced to the priesthood by the Rt. Rev. R. F. Reese, D. D., Bishop of Georgia.

In 1917 the Rev. Mr. Middelton accepted the rectorship of Trinity Church, Portsmouth, Va., and remained there until 1921, when he became rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Norfolk, his last charge before coming to Jacksonville.

The Church in Florida, and especially in Jacksonville, is fortunate in having secured the Rev. Mr. Middleton and he is already making himself felt in the community of his new home.

The Rev. Cameron Gregg Richardson, a non-parochial priest of the diocese of Atlanta, who has been serving St. John's, Jacksonville, as an assistant to the rector in charge, the Rev. Ambler M. Blackford, since the early spring, has now severed his official connections with St. John's, but he has so endeared himself to the congregation that no complete severing of the ties that bind him to this parish and to Jacksonville, will ever be possible.

Bishop Juhan has arranged to give the Rev. Mr. Richardson summer work in the Chapel of St. Paul's-by-the-Sea, Jacksonville Beach. This will give the summer congregation at Atlantic and Jacksonville beaches the opportunity to worship regularly on Sundays, as there will be morning and evening service and Sunday school each Sunday, and other services as announced. In addition to Church services, beginning on July the 5th, there will be held a Daily Vacation Bible School in the Girls' Friendly House, next door to the Chapel. This will be under Mr. Richardson's direction. He will be assisted by Miss Elizabeth Goodwill and Mr. Sullivan Bedell —the latter being a postulant for Holy Orders, and both of them being communicants of St. Pary's Parish, Jacksonville, and active members of the Young People's Service League.

This Bible School is a new venture but Bishop Juhan believes that it will find welcome and support at the beaches, not only among the summer residents, but also among those who live at the beaches throughout the year.

Mr. Richardson should be addressed at Jacksonville Beach, Fla.

Camp Weed.

Camp Weed has opened for its fourth session. It is located at Beacon Beach, on St. Andrew's Bay, Florida. Bishop Juhan, the Rev. Melville E. Johnson and Miss Hope Baskette are in charge of the young people, some 100 in number, and a splendid faculty and group of leaders have been secured. The Camp opened on July the 2nd and will remain in session until July the 14th.

A large audience witnessed the laying of the cornerstone of the new church building of the Church of the Good Shepherd, in Jacksonville, last Sunday morning, July the 1st. The Rt. Rev. Frank A. Juhan, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese of Florida, officiated and was assisted by the Rev. Peter C. Wolcott, D. D., of Hyde Park, Chicago; the Rev. L. C. Wolcott, of the Church of the Epiphany, Denver, Colorado; the Rev. Newton Middleton, rector of St. John's; the Rev. Edgar L. Pennington, rector of St Andrew's, and the Rev. Charles A. Ashby, rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, all of Jacksonville. In his address Bishop Juhan told of the meaning and aspirations that had prompted the members of the church to build this new edifice and related the prominent part it would play in the religious history of Jacksonville.

The list of articles placed in the cornerstone was read by Rev. E. V. Toomer, acting chairman of the building committee, and then folowed the Office of the Laying of the Cornerstone. This service was the same used by the late Rt. Rev. Edwin Gardner Weed in laying the cornerstone of the Parish House which was the second unit of the plant. The church will be the final unit of the parish for the mental and spiritual education of its people, it was announced.

INDIANA.

Rt. Rev. Jos. M. Francis, D. D., Bishop.

Young People's Conference.

About twenty-five young people attended the Indiana State Young People's Conference held at South Shore Inn, Lake Wawasee, Ind., from June 22 to 24.

The Choral Eucharist at 8 A. M. Sunday morning was attended by the young people as well as by Wawasee Conference members.

Addresses were made by the Rev. L. B. Ridgely, S. T. D., and the Rev. E. Ainger Powell. A pin was adopted during the business session.

NORTH DAKOTA.

Rt. Rev. J. P. Tyler, D. D., Bishop.

Indian Ordination.

The high-spot in the twentieth annual convocation of the Episcopal Church among the Indians of North Dakota was the ordination to the priesthood of the Rev. William Skala Cross, of Cannon Ball. The convocation met at St. Gabriel's Chapel, Breien, June 21, 22, 23 and 24. Bishop Tyler presided at the meetings.

The convocation will meet at St. Luke's Chapel, Fort Yates, next year.

The Rev. Carter Harrison, of Garden City, N. Y., is doing missionary work in the District of North Dakota this summer. His headquarters are at Grand Forks.

Summer School.

The students at the first Summer School of the District of North Dakota voted to have the school at the same place next year and asked for the same faculty. The school was held at Valley City, N. D., June 12 to 20. It was a decided success. The members of the faculty from outside the district were the Rev. Mr. Tragget, of Detroit Lakes, Minn., Miss Elizabeth Beecher, of Hastings, Neb., and Miss Mildred Alley, of Philadelphia.

BETHLEHEM.

Rt. Rev. F. W. Sterrett, D. D., Coadjutor.

Summer School.

The sixteenth session of the Bethlehem Summer School was held during the last week of June at Bishopthorpe Manor, Bethlehem.

This year the school was devoted entirely to young people and seventy-four came from the Diocese of Bethlehem and Pennsylvania. The young people liked the program and the faculty so well that they requested the Department of Religious Education to hold another school year and, if possible, to secure the same faculty.

The great majority of the students took an examination at the close of the school, which, if they pass successfully, will give them credits with the National Accredited Teachers' Association.

Bishop's Vacation.

Bishop Sterrett and his family have taken a cottage on Cape Cod. They will leave about the middle of July and remain until September.

Seventy-fifth Anniversary.

St. Michael's Church, Birdsboro, celebrated for three days, June 18, 19, 20, the seventy-fifth anniversary of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the founding of the parish. The Rev. William DuHamel on Monday read an historical sketch and Archdeacon W. F. Thomson of Delaware and a former rector for many years, preached the sermon. On Tuesday the Bishop confirmed a class and preached. On Wednesday morning there was a corporate celebration of the whole parish, the Bishop being the celebrant. Wednesday evening there was a parish dinner in Brooks' Hall with addresses by the rector, the Rev. A. B. Vossler, vestrymen and others.

COLLECT FOR SEVENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

Lord of all Power and might, Who art the Author and Giver of all good things; Graft in our hearts the love of Thy Name, increase in us true religion, nourish us with all goodness, and of Thy great mercy keep us in the same through Jesus Our Lord. Amen.

COLLECT FOR ST. JAMES THE APOSTLE.

Grant, O Merciful God, that, as Thine Holy Apostle, St. James, leaving his father and all that he had, without delay was obedient unto the calling of Thy Son, Jesus Christ, and followed Him; so we, forsaking all worldly and carnal affections, may be evermore ready to follow Thy Holy Commandments; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

BARNACLES.

My soul is sailing through the sea,
But the past is heavy and hindereth me;
The past hath crusted cumbrous shells
That hold the flesh of cold sea-mells
About my soul.
The huge waves wash, the high waves roll,
Each barnacle clingeth and worketh dole,
And hindereth me from sailing.

Old past, let go and drop i' the sea
Till fathomless waters cover thee!
For I am living, but thou art dead;
Thou drawest back, I strive ahead
The day to find.
Thy shells unbind! Night comes behind
I needs must hurry, with the wind
And trim and beat for sailing.

In Three Parts.

From opposite sides of the street they stared at each other, the big white marble mansion and the little white pushcart. The stately Italian house stared from its luxurious environment of evergreen and rhododendron; from its garden space on either hand where marble backless seats and an occasional statue shone forth white amid the surrounding green, and where billowy masses of box gave to the zephyrs their pungent aroma.

The pushcart, too, stared from a verdant setting, for was it not on the sidewalk close to the thick lustrous privet hedge that surrounded Dupont Circle? It had its seat, too, one of the benches that followed the Circle on the outside of the hedge. For statuary the lovely ladies on the tall white marble fountain within the Circle could be seen over the hedge top. And for aroma, was there not always popcorn or peanut or chestnut, according to the season, any one of which odors was worth, the children could have told you, all the scent of box in the world?

Each had its devotees, the big building and the little cart.

The devotees of the mansion were many. They came in shining limousines driven by handsomely liveried chauffeurs, to pay homage to the great lady who lived there. On her day at home Vaselleos Tergis was obliged to move his cart further along the curb to the next bench, for on that day the street would be a mass of automobiles coming and going honking their horns. If the occasion was a special reception or musicale, there would be an important-looking man with a megaphone, calling out, "The Secretary of State's car!" "The Chief Justice's car," or even "The Executive Mansion car!" Vaselleos lost no trade on such days as, although naturally the visitors in imported garments, who disappeared behind that exclusive door, did not deign to buy chestnuts, still their waiting chauffeurs did, albeit furtively as though feeling that they lost caste thereby.

The devotees of the pushcart did not come in motors. They came toddling or running towards it in stubby shoes or on furry paws or feathered claws. They came just as eagerly, however, as the others, and looked far happier. Like the great house devotees, the children were regaled with refreshments, were there, or were there not, tightly clenched pennies in their fists. As for the squirrels and birds, they looked upon the pushcart as their own particular free-lunch counter, and expected it to feed them, winter or summer.

There were these differences in the matter of approach—but in other respects there were resemblances. The visitors who frequented the dwelling did not notice the humble cart unless it was to deplore the presence of such a plebeian object in an aristocratic neighborhood. And the visitors to the cart, whether they were the children digging in the Circle's four big sand-piles, or the birds calling "tweet! tweet!" to remind Baselleos that they were hungry again, were entirely oblivious of the house. Only the big grandfather squirrel objected to the noise of the megaphone, so that he would jump from his seat on Vaselleos' shoulder to the limb of a convenient maple, from which he would chatter a scolding at the starter.

As regarded the owners of these two popular rallying points, there, indeed, there were vast differences. Take the matter of knowledge. There were many things that the dignified lady of the mansion knew that were a sealed book to Vaselleos Tergis; while of many things that were momentous to him, she was absolutely ignorant. For instance, Tergis, for the life of him, could not have told you what was the proper day on which to leave calling cards at the Embassies; most likely the benighted young fellow was not even aware that there were such places as Embassies. Also, he knew nothing, and cared less, as to which fork to use next at dinner. In fact, Tergis' stock of such knowledge was quite negligible.

Yet he could have told you things about his little friends, the furred and the feathered, that seemed highly important to him. When he pointed upward with a square-tipped finger it might be to call your attention to the faint, sweet chirping of a flock of golden warblers passing over the city on their way back north from wintering in the tropics. At such times he would stand expectantly, a spot of red color in each cheek, watching for some of the little travelers to use a stop-over privilege and drop down into the park to rest a weary wing. If such did, Vaselleos felt that hospitality required him to do the honors—and he always did them.

Or perhaps he would motion for you to listen to the sweet whistle of field sparrows answering each other across bare boughs! or, on a chilly March morning, he might gleefully call your attention to the blackbirds hopping about among such dandelions as had evaded the park keeper's attention. That meant to Vaselleos that spring could be expected soon. And when the musical call of the blue bird gave its definite promise, the young man's face was radiant.

In winter, when the great lady would be in her boudoir clad in a silken negligee, discussing menus with her housekeeper, Tergis, in his flapping white apron, would be scattering grain to the slate-colored snowbirds and a robin redbreast or two. He would move swiftly on tiptoe across the green to view the splendid beauty of a crested cardinal. His smile was warm even for the impudent, greedy English sparrows whose chattering the lady thought a great nuisance.

Alike or different, there they were, day after day, the great social leader and the peanut vendor. Both lived busy lives. She was out of bed late at dinners and balls, and out of bed early at sponsor meetings in the interest of fashionable charities. Still, she did sometimes walk to her window to see, from behind the rose silk curtains, whether the District Commissioners had regarded her plainly expressed desire that that common pushcart should be forbidden to abide in such sacred precincts. She would draw her arched brows together and elevate an aristocratic nostril at seeing it still there. Power! What is power when one cannot get what one wants!

It was trying. And especially so when the young man who owned it gave her that cheery wave every time she emerged from her door to enter her waiting car. Of course one had to bow back. And so, in a way, he forced her, Mrs. Mortimer de Sayles Pauncefort, into his ring of beneficiaries, entirely against her will. She would give a sort of high bred snort and turn impatiently away.

One summer morning when the park beds were lovely with Columbia roses, Mrs. Pauncefort stood on her front door steps with a much younger lady.

"Aunt Gwendolyn," said the latter, "it's so sweet today. Let's go over and sit in the Circle."

"Why—if you like," slowly assented Mrs. Pauncefort.

They came straight across towards the opening in the hedge beside which was stationed Tergis' cart. "Good morning, Mr. Tergis," smiled the young lady; "we are all delighted to hear that the boy has gotten so much stronger—and is doing so well at school, too."

"Yea, yea," answered Tergis in his fragmentary English, doffing his visored cap.

The ladies passed on and sat down on the bench within the Circle which happened to be just behind, across the hedge, from the one on which Tergis was seated.

"How did you know the pushcart man's name?" inquired Mrs. Pauncefort.

"Oh! he is one of our sponsors. He has been supporting a boy at the Corinth Orphanage for some time now. The child had had a terrible experience. He has improved tremendously, in every way, at the school."

Vaselleos, acutely uncomfortable at being the subject of conversation, welcomed the arrival of one of his customers, a little red-headed girl with a turned-up nose and golden freckles, who made a great business of choosing just what she wanted to buy. When she had decided on a lollypop and tripped off, Tergis was again conscious of the voices within the enclosure. Though he, a Greek, spoke very broken English, he understood it perfectly well.

He gathered that the young lady was begging her aunt to help the Near East Relief by being a "patroness" at an approaching entertainment for its benefit. "I am so terribly busy," the aunt protested.

"But, Aunt Gwendolyn, think of what your name means. Just remember that, in spite of the good that has been done, the many orphans who have been saved, and the hard work that has been put in it, there are still thousands—thousands, Aunt Gwendolyn—of little children who are undernourished, uncared for, huddled in masses in refugee barracks, without proper shelter even, getting their food as best they may, though so little is needed to save one of them. When I think of all that I have and of how little they have, it makes me terribly sad.

"Well," answered Mrs. Pauncefort, "with such a sweet pleader, I suppose I shall have to consent to being a patroness. But I had vowed that I would not get into another thing this year."

They moved away.

A MOTHER'S PRAYER.

By Hattie Tremaine Terry.

A little hand, within my own
I hold,
More previous 'tis than silver, gems,
Or gold.

White, dimpled, soft, it nestles
'Neath my arm,
As if once sheltered there, 'twere safe
From harm.

Oh! darling little hand, that clings
To mine.
Oh! loving, trustful eyes, that Softly shine.

You look to me for all that love
Can give,
Will look to me so long as both
Shall live.

I feel my great unfitness for
The task;
More patience, Lord, more gentleness,
I ask.

More love, with which to teach try
Love divine;
Less faith in my own strength, much more
In thine.

More courage, faith, and hope to point
The road,
The narrow road, and straight, which leads To God.

—Good Housekeeping.

The Fellowship of Souls.

Sooner or later every one is brought face to face with the stupendous mystery of death. To buoyant youth in glorious health rejoicing in his strength and freedom, Death, masked and muffled, sometimes comes with startling unexpectedness. To those who are weary with a long struggle against enfeebling pain and illness, Death comes with kindly face and softly whispers: "There, you are tired and suffering. Cease all worry and just lean back upon the Everlasting Arms." Kindly, too, is the visit which Death makes, sometimes, to the little child beloved of mother and of father, for then his voice is very gentle: "The Master is come and calleth for thee." Great as the mystery is, there should be no terror in connection with it.

"Death stands above me, whispering low
I know not what into my ear:
Of this strange language all I know
Is, there is not a word of fear."

And as men die we seem to hear them say: "Birth may be a sleep and a forgetting, but not so is death. There are great spiritual longings within me which refuse to sleep for ever. After I am rested I want to wake and to remember and to have another chance to work and think and laugh and love."

And so it is. Love tells us that death does not mean destruction but that the comradeship of the spirit is beyond the reach of earthly forces of annihilation. Through the centuries God has been directing the development of life and creating as the chief glory of His work the spiritual nature of human personality, rooted and grounded in love. It is unthinkable that this consummation of God's work should ever be destroyed. The spiritual value for which creation exists must persist after material forms have seen their day. As man's love for his fellows and his love for God is the greatest spiritual quality of a personality achieved as the climax of a long struggle, his spiritual nature and his capacity for love will be preserved, for to destroy either would be to make life purposeless and meaningless. It is to be expected, then, that men whose spiritual capacity has not been dulled by disuse will continue to experience uninterrupted and joyous fellowship with the spirits of loved ones whose pilgrimage on earth has ended. In this experience of immortality, which it is possible for us all to have while we are still on earth, we shall find comfort in the loneliness of the physical separation that death brings. Death brings separation, but it is a physical and not a spiritual separation, and by our experience of the communion of saints we know that our loved ones have awakened and are morally active and morally responsible.

"Hence in a season of calm weather,
Though inland far we be,
Our souls have sight of that immortal sea
Which brought us hither,
Can in a moment travel thither;
And see the children sport upon the shore,
And hear the mighty waters rolling evermore."

—Canadian Churchman.

Translating.

Translating from one language to another is no easy matter. That great scholar and renowned Grecian, Basil L. Gildersleeve, once made this paradoxical statement: "The better one knows a foreign language the harder it is to translate it," meaning, of course, that he will see shades of meaning which would escape others and which the scholar's own language might not be able to reproduce satisfactorily.

In this article I am going to give three instances of notable renderings.

1. Professor Jebb, of England, was a contemporary of Dr. Gildersleeve, and hardly had any superior as a Hellenist. His magnum opus was his seven-volume edition of the seven extant plays of Sophocles. In one of them he is translating the scene where Oedipus is leaving the world. In that description occur these six words: "The many lightnings, the many thunders." Very simple, you see. But Jebb was a poet as well as a genius, and he gives this:

The lightning, flash on flash!
The thunder, peal on peal!

2. In Romans, end of chapter four, we have this: "For of him, and through him, and unto him are all things." Here is the way it is given by Dr. Weymouth in "The Modern Speech New Testament": "For the universe owes its origin to Him, was created by Him, and has its aim and purpose in Him."

That is magnificent. It lights up the thought with a golden glow. "But how does he get all that out of the same Greek that gave the other?" I'll tell you. In Greek the two words ta panta, "all the things", is used at times to mean "the universe", and very naturally. Any of you, who may want to review the first chapter in Xenophon's "Memorabilia", will find this meaning there, and it suits the passage in Romans exactly. Weymouth might have given the same rendering in Rev. 4:11, "Thou didst create all things" (ta panta).

Then notice how Weymouth renders the prepositions "of", "through" and "into" in Rom. 11:35. Prepositions are about the most difficult words to translate from one language to another, and a literal rendering frequently makes very little sense. You try this: Turn to Ephesians, ch. 1, verses 3-14. You find "unto" used seven times. Try to replace it each time by something else that would give a clear meaning. Or, do the same thing for "unto", used thirteen times in the first ch. of Peter's first letter.

3. Professor Goodspeed, who died recently, made "an American Translation" of the New Testament. On Sunday I put it into the hands of a trained nurse; and when I came back from church she remarked, 'Why, this reads like a story book. I'm going to get it". It has some blemishes (one very decided one), but the style is excellent, and it is easy to read. In 2 Cor., ch. 11, we have this in the Revised Version: "For such men are false apostles, deceitful workers, fashioning themselves into apostles of Christ. And no marvel, for even Satan fashioneth himself into an angel of light" (verses 13 and 14). Here is Goodspeed's sparkling rendering: "Such men are sham apostles, dishonest workmen, masquerading as apostles of Christ. And no wonder, for even Satan himself masquerades as a shining angel."—Dr. Addison Hogue, in The Presbyterian of the South.

Weighed in the Balance.

In the old-fashioned days there was once a parson who preached a sermon from the text: "Thou art weighed in the balance and found wanting."

The day was very hot and the sermon was very long, and now and then some wearied members of the congregation rose and made their way to the door. Finally the parson lost patience, and as two stragglers wended their way down the aisle he said:

"That's right, gentlemen; as fast as you are weighed, pass out!"

The rest of the congregation kept their seats until the end of the sermon.—Success.

EN RAPPORT.

Eugenie du Maurier Meredith.

Sunday worship helps week-day work;
It teaches people not to shirk:

God gave us six days for our own;
The seventh is for Him alone:

Our earnest worship, prayer and praise
God loves and blesses all our days:

Worship gives God divine honor;
Supplication is prayer's anchor:

Praise is thankful gratitude sung

THE HILLS AHEAD.

The hills ahead look hard and steep and high,
And often we behold them with a sigh,
But, as we near them, level grows the road,
We find on every slope with every load,
The climb is not so steep, the top so far—
The hills ahead look harder than they are.
And so it is with troubles, though they seem so great
That men complain, and fear, and hesitate,
Less difficult the journey than we dreamed,
It never proves as hard as once it seemed,
There never comes a hill, a task, a day,
But as we near it, easier the way."

Polly's Present.

It was the close of the school year, and Miss Rollens, the teacher of Room 5, was leaving and would not be back the following autumn.

"If only I could give her a real present," sighed Polly Moll for the twentieth time. "She's the very nicest teacher we've ever had, and I did so want to give her a specially nice gift. All the others are going to, mother. Evelyn Avers has bought the prettiest ivory toilet set, and Thelma is going to get her an old lace collar, and Billy's mother said he could give her a six-volume set of books, and I," she ended a trifle bitterly, "I'm going to give her a twenty-five-cent cotton handkerchief! Oh, mother, sometimes I just hate being poor."

There was a suspicion of tears in Polly's eyes, in spite of the fact that she was eleven years old and in the fifth grade at school. She hastily brushed them away, then continued, "Mother, wouldn't you hate to give an old white handkerchief if it were you?"

Mrs. Moll carefully put down the sewing on which she had been working.

"I dare say I would, at your age, Polly dear," she replied. "Especially if I loved my teacher as much as you love Miss Rollens. Are you sure you can't give her anything else? How much money have you?"

"Thirty cents"—the words came out almost spitefully—"and I've saved and saved—ever since we heard she wasn't coming back. But that's every bit I could collect."

"What would you like to give her, child?"

"Oh"—Polly's eyes grew large—"oh, if I had the money, there's the loveliest snapshot album down at Carter's—two and a half. But—" and the light faded—"oh, there's no use, mumsey, I can't do it."

"No," her mother acquiesced soberly, "no, we can't, Polly. I often wish I could give you more spending money, dear, but sewing doesn't pay very well, and I thank God every night that He gives us enough for comforts and necessities. I am sorry that you can't always do as the other girls do, and it makes me feel bad to deprive you of any little pleasure."

Polly was all contrition immediately.

"Oh, you dear, dear mumsey! What do I care if I can't give as much as the others, when you have to work so hard for the money?" and Polly swept down on the figure in the rocker with an impetuous bear hug. "I'm just a naughty, ungrateful girl to be complaining. And Miss Rollens is so sweet, I know she'll be just as nice as can be about the handkerchief." Despite her efforts, there was a break in the voice. "After all, a handkerchief is a nice, useful present—and—and—"

Mrs. Moll smiled in spite of herself.

"Perhaps we can think of something else you can get," she suggested.

"I don't believe so—for thirty cents," said Polly, but she looked up hopefully as her mother settled back in the rocker, a pre-occupied expression in her eyes.

"You said you would like to give her a snapshot album?" she asked.

Polly nodded.

"Well, of course, we can't afford the nice, large one; but I wonder. Why couldn't you buy one of those pretty little, fifteen-cent albums they have at the five-and-ten-cent store?"

Polly's face was a protest.

"Oh, mother, she'd know I'd only paid—"

"But we wouldn't give it to her empty," Mrs. Moll hastened to say. "Do you still have all those snapshots that were taken on your school hikes last winter?"

"Yes," Polly answered wonderingly.

"Well, fifteen cents for the book, ten cents for some paste, and five cents for one of those white lead pencils," her mother went on calculatingly. "Just thirty cents. How about that, Polly?"

"Why—why, I don't understand."

Mrs. Moll laughed.

"Just this—get all your pictures together, sort them chronologically, and paste them in the album. Under each make a notation—the date, some little remark. Perhaps you can remember something funny that happened. Didn't you say you have a picture of Thelma when she fell on the ice, and said: 'Where are my feet?' Put that down. Then, where Billy tied his trained goat to the wheelbarrow and took that Christmas box to school. How about 'A Modern Santa Claus'?"

A light was beginning to shine in Polly's eyes.

"Oh, and that picture of me taken at camp when our class was up there last winter. I was hanging to the tree by one hand, and Grace's little dog was underneath, and it looked just as if he had chased me up there. I could call that "Treed', couldn't I? and that picture of Miss Rollens and Grace, when their sled turned over. And Evelyn as a goblin at our Hallowe'en party. You know Mr. Avers took several flashlight pictures that evening, and I've got two of each. And there's one of Miss Rollens and all our class."

"Which might be fine for the first page," suggested Mrs. Moll.

"Yes," Polly nodded, "and for the very, very last page, I'm going to put one of me."

"And you might write, 'To my beloved teacher, from', substituting the picture for your name."

"The very thing!" Polly laughed. "Now I must run and get the pictures.

"Just see, mumsey"—a few minutes later—"aren't there a lot?"

"About enough to fill one of those little albums, I should judge. Now, if you like, you may look them over, and put them in the proper order for pasting."

Presently Polly laughed.

"Look at this funny one, mamma, where we're dressed as little Dutch girls in that play, 'The Holland Lass'. I'd almost forgotten all about it. And here's the picture Grace took of us on Memorial Day. I can call that 'All of us—the fifth-grade class'."

Polly worked industriously, and soon the snapshots lay in a neat little pile, and that afternoon, after she had returned from town, she pasted them in a pretty little, brown album.

* * * *

The last day of school dawned bright and sunny, as June days have a habit of doing, and the teacher's desk in Room 5 was piled high with tissue-wrapped parcels. There was an air of excitement evident among the pupils as Miss Rollens called the class to order, distributed the report cards, collected textbooks and set the room in order generally. Then she turned smilingly toward her desk, and the class broke into spontaneous applause.

One by one the teacher opened the packages, and every one exclaimed over their contents. Polly watched with dancing eyes. There were the exquisite ivory toilet set which Evelyn had brought; Billy's beautifully bound volumes; a silk umbrella—ever so many other lovely presents. Finally came Polly's gift.

"Why—why—" Miss Rollens glanced at it a moment. "Come here, everybody. Let's look at this together," she said, and the class circled around her desk as she slowly turned the leaves. There were exclamations and remarks.

"Oh, isn't that the cleverest thing? Look at this picture of Grace. Oh, Miss Rollens, do you remember the time we went on that sleigh-ride? Wasn't it fun? Don't you wish we could go again? Polly, whatever made you think of this? Why, it's the very best of all!"

And when Miss Rollens had turned the last page, she put an arm around Polly.

"It's just the sweetest present, Polly dear," she said, and there was such a soft light in her eyes. "I'll always, always keep it, and whenever I look at this little book, it will bring back this happy year, and all the good times that we've had together." Then she said something which Polly never forgot. "Always remember, class, it isn't the cost of a present that counts; it's the love that stands behind it."—Junior Life.

Who Watches You?

Two small boys were walking along a path near a railroad, and one of them wanted to walk on the track. But when he first thought of it he said: "I guess I won't now. If my mother should look out of the window she'd see me, and she doesn't like me to walk on the track."

After a while a hillock shut them from view of the houses.

"Now we can walk on the track," cried the boy. "Come on, Joe."

"I guess I don't want to," said Joe.

"Ah, come on, your mother can't see you."

"I guess I don't want to anyway."

Then a lady who was walking behind them smiled at Joe, and said, "Who watches you, laddie?"

"Why, I guess I watch myself, ma'am. Mother says if I don't I won't behave very well, 'cause other folks can't watch me all the time."

Wise little Joe, who had learned to watch himself and see that he did the right thing whether mother or father or teacher could see or not! He will come out all right, where the fellow that needs watching will get into all sorts of trouble.

Who is watching you, boys? Have you learned to stand guard over yourself?—Christian Observer.

GOD'S CARE.

God will take care of you. All through the day
Jesus is near you to keep you from ill;
Waking or resting, at work or at play,
Jesus is with you, and watching you still.

He will take care of you. All through the night
Jesus, the Shepherd, His little one keeps;
Darkness to Him is the same os the light,
He never slumbers and He never sleeps.

He will take care of you. All through the year,
Crowning each day with His kindness and love,
Sending you blessings and shielding from fear,
Leading you on to the bright home above.

He will take care of you. Yes; to the end
Nothing can alter His love for His own,
Children, be glad that you have such a Friend,
He will not leave you one moment alone

The Whistle.

When I was a child of seven years, my friends, on a holiday, filled my pocket with coppers. I went directly to a shop, where they sold toys for children; and, being charmed with the sound of a whistle, that I met by the way in the hands of another boy, I voluntarily offered and gave all my money for one. I then came home, and went whistling all over the house, much pleased with my whistle, but disturbing all the family.

My brothers and sisters and cousins, understanding the bargain I had made, told me I had given four times as much for it as it was worth; put me in mind of what good things I might have bought with the rest of the money; and laughed cried with vexation: and the reflection gave me more chagrin than the whistle gave me pleasure.

This, however, was afterwards of use to me, the impression continuing on my mind; so that often, when I was tempted to buy some unnecessary thing, I said to myself, "Don't give too much for the whistle"; and I saved my money.

As I grew up, came into the world, and observed the actions of men, I thought I met with many, very many, who gave too much for the whistle.

If I knew a miser, who gave up every kind of comfortable living, all the pleasure of doing good to others, all the esteem of his fellow-citizens, and the joys of benevolent friendship, for the sake of accumulating wealth, "Poor man," I would say, "you pay too much for your whistle."—Benjamin Franklin.

The Telephone Game.

There were ten cousins altogether visiting at the farm, and you can just imagine the fun they had together. One day Bob made a telephone with two tin cans and a piece of picture wire, about forty-five feet long, and, of course, all the children wanted to try it. He had put the wire through two holes in the bottom of each can and twisted it to hold it firm.

"I know what let's do," May suggested. "Let's run the telephone wire through the attic and the hall upstairs. Then the wire will be in a straight line. It works better that way. Dick can go to the attic and we'll stay in the hall and sing into the telephone. Dick will guess who is singing, and, if he guesses correctly, the singer will have to give a forfeit."

"That will be fun," cried Dick.

He loosened the wire from one of the cans, put it through the keyhole of the attic door, and fastened it to the can again. Then he held a can to his ear. At the end of the long hall the cousins lifted the other can, one at a time, pulled the wire tight, and sang into it.

Although their voices sounded very queer, Dick guessed who some of the singers were and made them give forfeits. At last there were only two forfeits left.

"What shall the owner do to redeem it?" Sally asked and dangled a handkerchief over Dick's head.

"He shall be a cat," said Dick.

Then Mary, to whom the handkerchief belonged, made every one laugh by sitting on the floor and pretending to wash her face.

"What shall the owner do to redeem it?" Sally asked and held a pocket knife over Dick's head.

"He shall be a dog," said Dick.

And Bob, who owned the knife, began to bark, and chase the cat and the cousins screamed with delight.

It was all so much fun that you may

The Retiring Fund For Deaconesses

There are more than two hundred deaconesses in the Church, the majority of whom are working for a salary too small to permit of saving for old age or infirmity.

The Retiring Fund has been incorporated by the Executive Committee of the National Conference of Deaconesses for the purpose of receiving funds, the income of which will provide for those deaconesses "who on their retirement from active service have insufficient provision for their needs."

No annuities can be paid until the sum of at least $50,000 has been raised and a deaconess must have served not less than ten years before becoming eligible as an annuitant.

The deaconesses have now the responsibility of making the need for this Fund known.

The cooperation of all friends of the Order is asked.

GIFTS both large and small are needed.

PLEDGES to cover several years are acceptable.

BEQUESTS are desired.

For bequests the exact title is: The Retiring Fund for Deaconesses of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America.

The Retiring Fund is incorporated in the State of New York.

"THE REAL LINCOLN"

From the Testimony of His Contemporaries
By Dr. Charles L. C. Minor
Fourth Edition, Revised and Enlarged
(M. D. Carter, Editor)

A composite analysis and startling but little known facts of the Life, Character and Work of the Civil War President made from data gathered from his many biographers, most of them his contemporaries.
An invaluable book for students of the Life of Lincoln and of the Causes that led to "The Irrepressible Conflict".

To Whom These Present Come Greeting:

I have read and take pleasure in commending this history, "The Real Lincoln", by Charles L. C. Minor, M. A., LL.D., The fourth edition revised and enlarged. Edited by M. D. Carter.

I am acquainted with a number of works on the life of Lincoln. But speaking in general terms, the writers, or certainly most of them, try to paint him into glowing terms.

This book of Dr. Minor's, revised by Miss Carter, gives us the real Lincoln. It makes a student feel better to know the man, who is being studied. This book makes us know Lincoln. He was one of the most cruel leaders of a nation and a cause that to me appears on the pages of history. This book makes us see him as he was, not as he is painted. It enables us to see his attitude to the South. And yet he had Southern blood coursing through his veins.

He was a man of many jokes, which were coarse, smutty, to say the least. He was not a Christian, nor did not claim to be. He even said in his debate with Senator Douglas, "I am not a gentleman, and never expect to be". I guess we may accept this as the truth.

This book studies Lincoln from every angle, and as a result gives us the real Lincoln. In calling before me the great presidents, including Jefferson Davis, and the other great men of the United States, I find no associates with whom Lincoln would be at home. Every one in their greatness totally eclipse him.

I commend this book to all students of history and to all others who want to know historical facts. History is made up of the lives of great men. But, sad to say, that sometimes the non-great make history, but when they do it, it is cruel and vindictive.

I hope all young people will read this book and learn who the real Lincoln was.

Very truly yours,

The Liberty Bell.

Here are some things about the Liberty Bell it would be well to cut out and paste in your scrap-book:

July 8, 1776, the bell was rung for the proclamation of the Declaration of Independence.

On October 24, 1781, the bell rang out for the surrender of Cornwallis.

April 16, 1783, it rang out for the proclamation of peace.

September 29, 1824, it rang to welcome Lafayette to the Hall of Independence.

July 4, 1826, it ushered in the year of Jubilee, the fiftieth anniversary of the republic.

July 24, 1826, it tolled for the death of Thomas Jefferson.

July 4, 1831, is the last recorded ringing of this famous bell to commemorate the day of independence.

February 22, 1832, it rang to commemorate the birthday of Washington.

In the same year it tolled the death of the last survivor of the Declaration, Charles Carroll, of Carrollton.

July 2, 1834, it tolled once more. Lafayette was dead.

July 8, 1835, while being tolled for the death of Chief Justice John Marshall, a crack was developed, starting from the rim and inclining in a right-hand direction toward the crown.

Its voice is silent, but its deeds will ring in the hearts of all patriotic people so long as the name of liberty shall last.—Selected.

Some years ago a number of people met together to pray for rain. Showers had not fallen for weeks, and the fields were parched and dry. When they came to the church to pray, only one, a little girl, had an umbrella. "Why did you bring that umbrella?" She said: "Why, I thought we had come to pray for rain." Before that prayer service ended, the shower fell.—Robert P. Wilder.

"THE WONDER OF THE GOSPEL"

By DYSON HAGUE.

A prominent Canadian Christian said not long ago that she considered "The Wonder of the Gospel" to be by far the best thing on the subject she has ever read. It gave such a clear and forcible exposition of the Gospel of Christ, and the way of receiving it.

The work is not original at all. It is a republication of a very famous work that was published by Dr. Horatius Bonar who considered it the finest explanation of the Gospel he had known, with notes and additions for the reader today.

It ought to be read by every minister and Christian teacher. It tells in words of living interest the story of the Old, Old Story; what it means, how it is accepted, what it does. It is indeed "a truly remarkable book", and as a well-known writer said, "It gave me more light on the simplicity of the Gospel way than all the theological treatises I ever studied".

READ IT. READ IT OVER AGAIN. SEND IT TO YOUR MINISTER, AND ESPECIALLY TO YOUNG MINISTERS AND THEOLOGICAL STUDENTS.

THE CHURCH SCHOOL IN THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

By RT. REV. C. M. BECKWITH, D. D.

This course of instruction, the fruit of a life-long, devoted study by the late Bishop Beckwith, of Alabama, is now offered complete to the Church. The first two grades were issued a few months ago. The Book of Common Prayer, the last of the series, is just from the press.

The Prayer Book of 1892 is used as a basis; at the end of each chapter is an addenda noting the changes in the revision of 1925 and their significance.

The system of questions and answers is used throughout, interspersed with explanatory notes. The arrangement and sequence of the services, and each part of every service, are clearly set forth. The aim of the author is to help win the student to a glad attendance upon the worship of the Church, and arouse a deeper appreciation of our priceless heritage.

No child should be allowed to graduate from our Church School without the advantage of this course on the Prayer Book. It is especially adapted for the instruction of those who are preparing for confirmation.

Rev. W. E. Cox, of Bisbee, Arizona, says: "Every time I look into Bishop Beckwith's Courses of Instruction for the Church School, I think how truly they present the fundamentals, as he says, of the Church's life, in which every child of the Church ought to be thoroughly versed. It is difficult to determine which course is his best, for all are excellent to a degree.

"I pick up his course on The Book of Common Prayer and I think this is his masterpiece. Then I look into his course on The Church Year, and I think there is nothing in print that I have ever seen that equals it, or is comparable to it. Turning to his course on The Church Catechism, which my whole Church School is now studying, it puts in a simple, impressive, and appealing way the heart of the Church Catechism as only one who has made a life study of it can put it.

"There is but one way to know the value of these Courses of Instruction: Get them; study them, not casually, but carefully and repeatedly. Increasing familiarity with them brings increased appreciation of them."

---

"I have been using 'The Church School in the Book of Common Prayer,' a course of instruction by the late Bishop Beckwith, ever since it came from the press, and take pleasure in recommending this valuable work to the clergy and people of the Church. This course of instruction, which is the result of a life-time study and work, is adaptable, comprehensive, and loyal to the teaching of the Church as contained in the Book of Common Prayer. No child should be permitted to graduate from our Church Schools without the benefit of this most valuable course of instruction."

In May Mr. W. M. Danner, General Secretary for the American Mission to Lepers, was in Richmond for a few hours to confer with the officers of the Richmond Branch on important matters pertaining to the work. We are glad to report a great increase in gifts and interest in the past few months.

I attended a lovely meeting of the Junior Branch, of which Miss Annie Allison is President, not long ago. About twenty people were present, among them dear little children, who took part in the service and are being taught love for missions all over the world, the lepers included.

Beautiful posters had been made by the President, one a tall tree full of green leaves. Each person plucked off a leaf and read aloud a story of some phase of work for lepers pasted underneath. Truly, "the leaves of the tree are for the healing of the nations".

All contributions most gratefully received and acknowledged by

MISS EVELYN P. MERIWETHER,
President-Treasurer, Richmond Branch, Branch, Leper Mission.

Deaths

MORRISON: Died, Saturday, June 23, 1928, at his home, Rosedale, Culpeper, Va., HAMILTON FARNHAM MORRISON. Services from St. Mark's Chapel, Rixeyville, Va. Interment in Masonic Cemetery. Rev. Kensey Johns Hammond officiating.

HARRISON: Entered into the Life Eternal at his home, "West Hill", near Staunton, Va., March 23, 1928, EDWARD CARRINGTON HARRISON, son of the late Henry Harrison, in the sixty-eighth year of his age.

"The pure in heart shall see God."

IN MEMORIAM.
Marion Colesberry Wood.

Entered into Eternal Life at the midnight hour, while in the hospital in Brunswick, Ga., MARION COLESBERRY WOOD, widow of the late Alfred Vincent Wood, and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Colesberry, formerly of Philadelphia, later of Brunswick, Ga. She is survived by seven children: Mrs. J. H. Hopkins, Thos. C. Wood, Ralph M. Wood, Alfred V. Wood, Mrs. J. D. Gould, Miss Marion C. Wood and Laurence R. Wood; seven grandchildren, two sisters: Misses Lula C. and Nellie M. Colesberry. Mrs. Wood was born in Philadelphia, August 3, 1862, and when, at the age of five years, her mother and father brouiht her to Brunswick, where her father was engaged in the U. S. Revenut Cutter. Service until his death. She was a lifelong, consistent, and active member of St. Mark's Episcopal Church at the time of her death was president of the Woman's Auxiliary, and was deeply interested in all activities, both religious and civic. Her beloved husband preceded her to the grave a little over two years, his death, so sad and so sudden, was a shock from which she never hardly rallied. It was in the freedom of this devoted family circle that one best learned the love, the tenderness, the consideration and charm of her nature, but the beauty and strength of her life lay not in what she received, but what she gave—so thoughtful of others, wise in her counsel, generous in her judgments, she gave all that Christian character can give to sweeten and ennoble life; and used these atributes every day, and in the using there came forth a soul so sweet, so lovely, that we will always say, "I thank God for her". A loving and devoted wife and mother, an affectionate sister, kind and sympathetic to relations and friends, yet, for the last year frail in health, but her indomitable spirit lifted and upheld her above depression, which is often induced by sickness, and she met each day till the last with unfailing patience and cheerfulness. Devoted to her church, and of all the services, especially did she love and consider it her precious privilege to attend the Holy Communion. As sweetly closes the flowers at eventide, so her pure spirit passed from amongst us, not changed but glorified:

"And God will not make the glorified so new,
That they are lost to me and you."

"I just begin to think about the gladness and that day,
When 'they' shall tell us all about the way,
That 'they' have learned to go—
Heaven's pathway show."

God pity and bless those sweet, faithful, and devoted children, bereft in two short years of a precious father and mother.

"And so for 'them' there is no sting of death,
And so the grave has lost its victory;
It is but crossing with abated breath,
And white-set face a little strip of sea—
To find the loved ones waiting on the shore,
More beautiful, more precious than before."

MAJOR WM. F. ANDERSON.

Peacefully, on the afternoon of June 29, MAJOR WM. F. ANDERSON, in his eighty-eighth year, passed into the great beyond. He died as he had lived, calm and unafraid, the soldier that he was.

His march was straight and steady; his standard high; and his vision clear.

He served in the Confederate Army throughout the Civil War, so it seemed nothing more than fitting, and just as he would desire, that the Confederate flag should serve as a pall, while he lay so peacefully sleeping. His love for little children, his friends, and the beautiful things of life brought their own reward to a beautifully rounded life.

Whatsoever things are true, honest, just and of good report were the things emblazoned on his motto.

The burial service took place from his late home, Covington, Va., the Rev. D. Whittle in charge. Surrounded by his family and friends, he was tenderly laid to rest in the Covington cemetery by the side of his wife.

Major Anderson is survived by his six children: Mrs. J. Howard Gibbon of Frankfort, Ky.; Miss S. Josie Anderson and Mrs. David L. Luke of Tarrytown, N. Y., Mrs. Wm. Sangster of Peterboro, Canada; Mr. Wm. F. Anderson, Jr., and Miss Ida M. Anderson of Covington, Va.

PERSONAL NOTES.

Cross, Uniontown, of which he has been in charge since March.

On June 16, 1928, the Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray ordained to the diaconate in the Bishop's Chapel of the Diocesan House, Baltimore, Claud Hill Leyfield. The candidate was presented by the Rev. W. D. Morgan. The Rev. Mr. Leyfield served for some years in the Methodist ministry and is now assisting the Rev. Arthur McKinstry in Albany, N. Y.

On June 24, at St. Gabriel's Chapel, Breien, N. D., the Rt. Rev. John Poyntz Tyler ordained to the priesthood William Skala Cross, of Cannon Ball. The Rev. H. H. Welsh, of St. Luke's Chapel, Fort Yates, presented the candidate. Bishop Tyler preached the sermon. Mr. Cross is the first Indian, born and raised in North Dakota, to be ordained in that district.

On the Feast of St. John the Baptist, being the Third Sunday after Trinity, in Calvary Cathedral, Sioux Falls, Kelley Brent Woodruff, son of the Dean of the Cathedral, was ordained to the diaconate by the Bishop of South Dakota. Sermon was preached by the Rev. Paul H. Barbour; Litany was read by the Rev. E. Croft Gear; and the Dean presented his son for ordination. Mr. Woodruff has spent his boyhood in the Cathedral parish and will enter the Dakota Indian field on the Standing Rock Reservation.

On the Feast of St. Peter, in All Saints' Chapel, Sioux Falls, the Rev. Alfred J. Haines, Deacon, was ordained to the priesthood by the Bishop of South Dakota. The Rev. E. Croft Gear preached the sermon. The Rev. Conrad H. Gesner read the Litany, and the candidate was presented by the Rev. James G. Ward.

On February 29, 1928, Robert Howe Daniell was ordained Deacon in St. Paul's Church, Augusta, Ga., by the Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese, the Rev. J. A. Schaad, rector of St. Paul's Church, presented the candidate, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. Mercer P. Logan, D. D., Dean of the DuBose Memorial Training School.

Mr. Daniell is a student at the DuBose School until the completion of his course in December next.

On June 2, 1928, Henry James Charles Bowden was ordained to the diaconate in St. Athanasius' Church, Brunswick, Ga., by the Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese. The Rev. R. K. Tucker, rector of St. Mark's Church, Brunswick, presented the candidate, and the Rev. J. C. Perry, rector of St. Athanasius' Church, preached the sermon. There were present also the Rev. C. H. Lee, D. D., of St. Simon's Island, the Rev. J. H. Brown, Archdeacon, of Savannah, and the Rev. H. R. Moore.

Mr. Bowden has become a Curate of St. Philip's Church, New York City, still remaining canonically connected with this diocese.

On June 24, 1928, Francis Hopkinson Craighill, Jr., was ordained to the diaconate in the Church of the Good Shepherd, Rocky Mount, N. C., by the Rt. Rev. F. F. Reese. The Rev. Francis Hopkinson Craighill, rector of that church, presented the candidate and preached the sermon.

Mr. Craighill is temporarily in charge of Calvary Church, Americus, Ga., and will return to the Theological Department of the University of the South at the opening of the next scholastic year.

It was a matter of interest in this case that the candidate who was ordained, was the son of the rector of the parish and the grandson of the Bishop who ordained him.

In San Francisco, at Grace Cathedral, on Ember Wednesday in Whitsun Week, May 30, following the commencement exercises of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific, the Rt. Rev. Edward Lambe Parsons, D. D., Bishop of California, ordained to the diaconate Ohmer Marcus Bailey, A. B., Mus. B., William Lloyd Cornwell, and Edward Underwood, A. M., Mr. Cornwell being ordained for the Bishop of Los Angeles.

The candidates were presented by the Very Rev. Herbert H. Powell, Ph. D., S. T. D., Dean of the Church Divinity School, Messrs. Bailey and Cornwell being graduates of this year, and Mr. Underwood instructor in New Testament Greek and lecturer in the philosophy of religion, as well as a special student at the school.

The Litany was read by the Ven. Noel Porter, Ph. D., Archdeacon of the Diocese. The Very Rev. J. Wilmer Gresham, D. D., Dean of Grace Cathedral, was epistoler, the Rev. Ohmer M. Bailey, senior candidate to be ordained, gospeller, and the Rev. William A. Brewer, D. D., Dean of the Convocation of San Jose, and rector of St. Paul's Church, Burlingame, preached the sermon.

The Rev. Mr. Bailey will continue for the present as assistant choir-master of Grace Cathedral, but expects to leave soon for Cambridge, Mass., where he will enter the Episcopal Theological School in the fall as a graduate student. His address is at present 1051 Taylor Street, San Francisco.

Rev. Mr. Cornwell has entered upon his duties as curate at St. Paul's Church, Oakland, where he has been working during his senior year. His address is 2605 Ninth Avenue, Oakland, telephone Merritt 3206.

The Rev. Mr. Underwood will continue as instructor in New Testament Greek and lecturer in the philosophy of religion at the Church Divinity School of the Pacific. He has also assumed charge of St. Matthew's Church, Berkeley. His address will continue to be 1051 Taylor Street, San Francisco.

DEATHS.

On Saturday, June 30, 1928, in Bethlehem, Mr. Albert N. Cleaver fell asleep. For the past few months the infirmities of age made rapid inroads on his strength, but he reached his four score years and a little more.

Mr. Cleaver was one of Bethlehem's foremost citizens and philanthropists. For more than a generation he was a vestryman of the Pro-Cathedral of Nativity and always in his place. He was one of the old-fashioned type of Christian gentlemen, whose sympathies and help were given to all in need.

Bishop Sterrett and Dean Gateson conducted the funeral services on Monday at 2:30 P. M., July 2, 1928. His widow, who was Miss Elizabeth Hent Sayre, daughter of Robert Haysham Sayre, one of the pioneers who built the Lehigh Valley Railroad, remains with memories of a most happy and blessed union with one of God's saints for more than fifty years. May light and peace perpetual shine upon him.

AMERICAN PRAYER BOOK

This is an informing book that every Churchman should read.

Rev. Samuel Wallis, former Professor of Liturgics at the Theological Seminary in Virginia, says: "I am delighted with it and regard it as the best I have yet read for general reading and for college and Seminary use. It is clear, definite and complete in every way and, what so few writers attain, interesting. If I were still Professor of Liturgics, as I was among other chairs at the Virginia Seminary, I would use it as a companion to my notes and I trust it will have a large sale."

A Youth's History of the Great Civil War

By R. G. HORTON
Edited by Lloyd T. Everett and Mary D. Carter.

Rev. W. R. Chapman, Ph. D., D. D.
Minister.
Bealeton, Fauquier Co., Va.
June 5, 1928.

To Whom These Presents Come Greetings:

I have just read and feel it my duty to commend this history, "A Youth's History of the Great Civil War in the United States", by R. G. Horton, edited by Lloyd T. Everett and Mary D. Carter. The 1927 edition is a revised edition. The earlier editions came out in 1866-1868.

It seems that Mr. Horton wrote the book primarily for young readers and students. But I wish to say it will be helpful to adult readers and students of all ages.

It is the most honest and trustworthy history of The War Between the States I ever read. I wish every boy and girl; and indeed, every adult in the South would read it, and make it a real study. It is worthy to be studied carefully by all who want to know the truth, and all who would read history, should want to read it and study an honest work.

To this wish, I must add one more: I wish every boy and girl in the North, and indeed, in the whole country, would and study the book, you would look upon the days now past in an attitude of a better understanding.

The material given to the public in this book is to the point. It should be placed in every library, especially high school library in this country. It is a fine vindication of the Southern side of the memorable controversy of those times from 1861-1865.

I want to thank the editors of this new edition for giving to the world this great history. You have done your work well.

Very truly yours,
W. R. CHAPMAN.

OUR PRAYER BOOK

The investigation of origins is always attractive to the thoughtful mind, but the study of the history of the Anglican Prayer Book must ever be possessed of a fascinating interest to the English Churchman. The Prayer Book has a charm like the charm of home to the man who loves it, and when we think of the Prayer Book and its beauty and its power, in the past as well as in the present, we cannot but be animated by a desire to know how it was produced, what were its origins, and the methods of the minds that were at work in its production.

Now the starting point of all our reading and thinking must be this: The Prayer Book was the product of an Age. That Age was the Reformation. The men who produced it were the Anglican Reformers. They were Scripture-inspired, Spirit-led men, who represented in that cardinal epoch of England's history the leadership of the English Church. The Church of England was not born at the Reformation. That is an historical error. But it was born again then. And our Prayer Book represents the new birth of that era. It came from men whose eyes were opened to see, whose hearts were inflamed with the love of Christ to do and to dare. As the product, therefore, of that age and of these men, the Prayer Book is the exponent of the distinctive principles of the re-formation of the Church of England. It stands to-day as a bulwark of the scriptural truth that those men re-discovered for the Church; of the rights and liberties of the laity of England's Church that they then secured; of the recovery of the spiritual worship of the Apostolic Church that they re-established; and, above all, of the revival of Apostolic Christianity.

The history of the Prayer Book is, in one sense, the history of the Reformation of the Church of England. For it was:

The result of the repudiation of the papal supremacy.

The logical consequence of the abolition of the mediaeval service from the English Church.

The expression of the new worship of the national Church in its form and language and ritual and purpose.

The recovery of the right of the laity to participate intelligently in a people's service.

The re-assertion of the primitive truth on the lines of the New Testament and the Apostolic teaching.

In one word, the re-formation of the worship, and of the doctrinal system of the Church of England.

The Prayer Book, as a book, represents in its contents the productions of many ages and the writings of many authors. It is not the production of a single writer on one subject. It is a compilation. And its contents and materials cover a period of about three thousand years. It represents the best of the liturgical material of all the churches: the inspired outpourings of prophet and psalmist, and of the Apostles in the Apostolic Age, the work of the anonymous authors of the Ante-Nicene and Post-Nicene eras; of the early and later mediaeval periods; of the Roman; of the Anglo-Saxon; of the Lutheran and other reformers; and of the divines of the Caroline era. As far as the material is concerned, the fine illustration of Canon Daniels in his Preface, of a cathedral built of many materials, with stones brought from many quarries, by many builders, but built on one great architectural plan and unified by one constructive mind and inspiring spirit, is accurate and descriptive. The vast historical reach of the Prayer Book is almost a revelation to the thoughtful student.—Dyson Hague.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

Many mean things are done in the family for which moods are put forward as the excuse, when the moods themselves are the most inexcusable things of all. A man or a woman in tolerable health has no moral right to indulge in an unpleasant mood.

Be it ours to see great things in the little.

"By valley and by upland the breezes blow, by forests and o'er far seas, but never do they waft sweet coolness where God's Spirit is not found. Never is there human heart beat unfelt by the Father's Love."

The life that spends most money on itself is the least impressive.—Rev. Wm. Porkess.

We never see anything truly until we see it in the light of the glory of God. Set a dull duty in that light and it shines like a diamond. Set a bit of drudgery in that light and it becomes transfigured like the wing of a starling when the sunshine falls upon it. Everything is seen amiss until we see it in the glory! And therefore it is my wisdom to set everything in that light, and whether I eat or drink, or whatever I do, to do all to the glory of God.—J. H. Jowett.

The deepest experience of the Christian is no "flight of the alone to the alone", but a union in God, now known as Love, with Angels and Archangels and all the company of Heaven. The religious soul finds God within itself in all ages. But when God is revealed as Love, this can no longer be a solitary experience; it becomes an incorporation into the fellowship of all those whom God loves and who in answer are beginning to love Him.—Bishop Temple.

That God's whole program may be triumphantly completed, He is waiting for men and women who will not stagger at the promise through unbelief. He has had such men in the past, true sons of faithful Abraham whom He made the spiritual fathers of multitudes. Of such were within recent times, the Wesleys, the Moodys, the Hudson Taylors—mighty men of valour, who by faith, subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, and turned to flight the armies of the aliens.—Exchange.

Sydnor & Hundley

700 E. Grace St. Richmond, Va.

Perhaps the crescent moon smiles in doubt at being told that it is a fragment awaiting perfection.—Tagore.

"Even in heaven," says Plotinus, "we must follow the upward path, ever attaining, and ever aspiring."

'There is One, so fair, so bright,
So good, so gracious! Love, and Life, and Light,
Are His rich titles. Oh, for Him I long,
To be my Hope, my Joy, my Strength, my Song!
Earth's shadow melts in conquering light away
Before the rising Day-star's earliest ray."

O praying ones, who long have prayed
And yet no answer heard,
Have ye been sometimes half afraid
God might not keep His word?

It isn't work that kills men, it is worry. Work is healthy; you can hardly put more upon a man than he can bear. Worry is the rust upon the blade. It is not the revolution that destroys the machinery; it is the friction.—Henry Ward Beecher.

CHARLEY'S OPINION.

The girls may have their dollies,
Made of china or of wax;
I prefer a little hammer
And a paper full of tacks.

There's such comfort in a chisel!
And such music in a file!
I wish that little pocket-saws
Would get to be the style!

My kite may fly up in the tree,
My sled be stuck in mud,
And all my hopes of digging wells
Be nipped off in the bud.

But with a little box of nails,
A gimlet and a screw,
I'm happier than any king—
I've work enough to do!

—Anna E. Treat.

CHEATS

Fifty-five years ago one of the most brilliant, lovable and attractive men ever born from the fine old aristocracy of Southern Georgia, studying for the Presbyterian ministry, was beset and overcome by doubts of essential doctrines of Christianity and his own Church. Few men ever have faced a test more cruel than his. Left an orphan, he had been brought up by an aunt whose fervent desire and constant prayer were to see his splendid talents and beautiful personality active in the Christian ministry. Gratitude and tender love urged him to gratify her heart's desire. Manhood and honor demanded that he should not profess to believe and promise to teach what his mind rejected. The strong, high-bred, old woman submitted without a murmur to frustration of her dream and hope and ambition. She preferred that a man of her blood and about whom her affections were wrapped so closely be or do or incur anything rather than be a cheat and hypocrite, or stoop to earn his living by false pretenses.

Her prayers were partly answered after her death. Like many another man, the nephew, after a time of doubting and searching and thinking and faithful study and observation, was led to become a very humble, devout, believer, a practical, working, praying Christian. Perhaps he had been abnormally and unnecessarily sensitive. So far as is known now, he never told what his doubts and fears were. He may have shrunk from the possibility of disturbing the faith of others. Probably if he had talked freely and frankly with those qualified to inform and advise the clouds on his soul would have cleared quickly. If he had continued his studies, completed his vows and begun his ministry, actual experiences might have convinced him. He was young and shy, knowing little of life and men, and was in a perilous and troubled time when the old, inherited hopes given by Christianity made all the hope left for a defeated people and an uptorn civilization. This man had reached arms' bearing age only in time to serve as a soldier in the last moments of the Confederacy, but had done his full part for a doomed cause and in a dissolving army. He returned home to find every heart bleeding from a new wound, shadowed with new dreads, every face turned to darkness apparently impenetrable, the fundamental confidence in the Wisdom and Mercy of God, the mediation of the Saviour and reunions, deliverance and happiness beyond the clouds and the grave yet strong and triumphant and the one remaining comfort. He heard men and women sing General Lee's favorite hymn, "How Firm a Foundation", by the ashes of their homes, when there seemed to be no earthly foundation on which to build: "Jesus, Lover of My Soul", while the waves of trouble rolled ceaselessly and the tempests were beating hard: "Rock of Ages", while only the Cross remained to which any might cling. When the history of that time in the "Bible Belt", at which Mr. Menckin and The New York Churchman sneer so scornfully, is fully written and understood it will be known that the inspiration to restoration and new and richer and stronger growth for a smitten and conquered people was allegiance, from mountains to coasts, to the old time, simple, sturdy, stalwart, Christianity, handed down from fathers and mothers, the unconquerable belief in God and Christ, the Scriptures and the Divine promises. No fancy, hand-made, namby-pamby, and confused theology could have met the need.

The man sealed his lips and turned to face a life far different from that for which he had hoped, which had been hoped for him, for which he had been nurtured and trained. He found a little job as assistant teacher in a private school at forty dollars a month, eight months of the year. Afterward he found other employment, but he worked and lived and died with poverty menacing always, obscure except in his own narrow circle. He had no talent for acquisition or self-advertising. Yet, to the end he was happy with a wife in all stress his loyal and cheerful comrade. He left a family of useful citizens and went hence, his conscience clear, a gentleman unafraid and dauntless, after a stainless life assured of forgiveness for his errors and wanderings and of joyful resurrection.

This man's life, however serious and grievous its mistakes, is a glorious and beautiful contrast to that of men who assume the vows and responsibilities of the Christian ministry and before or after that most solemn of all human acts lose their faith or pervert it, secretly or openly desert the banner under which they enlist and pretend to serve. No other cheats are so horrible. The swindler who imposes on credulity by misrepresenting his wares, giving short weight or measure, or taking money for something worthless is the object of universal detestation and contempt and goes to jail if detected. Human law provides no penalty for the man professing to be a Christian minister while he has persuaded himself that Christianity is false and the Bible a collection of short stories, allegories and fables, receiving pay and trust from a Christian organization while doing all he can to destroy it, its principles and doctrines, and lead away its membership. It is impossible to imagine sacrilege or blasphemy more awful than that of an Episcopal minister, for instance, signing the forhead of an innocent child with the sign of the cross while rejecting the divinity of Christ, or reading the service for the desperately sick beneath the shadow of the Death's Angel's wing, reciting the Creed which he regards and describes as a mere meaningless mass of words.

Such are not new afflictions, obstacles, snares, cheats. The Saviour warned against them—false prophets in sheep's clothing, inwardly ravening wolves. Brief experience taught St. Paul that after his departure from Ephesus men would arise in the flock teaching perverse things. So it has been since the beginning. The Power and Mercy of God and belief and faith in Him have endured since the serpent, the first cheat, tempted the woman to seek knowledge forbidden to finite limitations; since Cain decided that his merits were unappreciated, since the golden calf was worshipped and Baalam son of Beor, the soothsayer, could not see the angel in his path, plain to the sight of his humble and beaten creature.

Stealing, or holding, the livery of heaven in which to serve the devil is old as sin. The punishment of it in the hereafter is something of which we may not know and with which we have nothing to do. Dante draws a fantastic and somewhat ridiculous picture of the tortures of those who traffic in sacred things and the hypocrites. Laboriously made armor of vanity and self-satisfaction may protect the cheats against pangs of conscience and shame in this life. It cannot avert from them the scorn of the honest or the contemptuous pity of those who know that the Almighty cannot be deceived. "Thou God seest me."

Alfred B. Williams.

RAYS OF LIGHT FROM GOD'S LAMP

By W. W. Rugh

Founder and Associate of the Bible Institute of Pennsylvania 1418 North Sixteenth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Note: These simple studies in God's Word are intended for home and class use by those who wish to know our blessed Lord and to make Him known.

V. How are we to use God's Word?

1. As a Mirror (James 1:21-23; 2 Cor. 3:18).

The first thing that our sinful hearts need is to know their exceeding sinfulness in God's sight. Therefore He has given us a full life-size photograph of all our meanness by nature and by conduct in Rom. 1:18 to 3:18.

In this and many other Scriptures the Spirit reveals what man may become as the descendant of the one who followed his own desires rather than obeying the Word of God.

But, thanks be to God, He has revealed in the mirror of His Word more than the exceeding sinfulness of fallen man. He has also revealed the glory of His only begotten Son, as the One into whose image we are to be conformed (Rom. 8:29).

Every believing heart will be transformed into His image from glory to glory by beholding His glory, what He really is, as to His nature or character, as revealed in the written Word. We behold the perfect picture of Him into whose image we are to be conformed in (Col. 3:12, 13, alsso James 3:17, and in 1 Cor. 13:4-7).

2. As a Laver (Ex. 30:17-21; Eph. 5:25, 26).

The laver was like a mirror, revealing uncleanness, but it also held water for the cleansing of the hands and feet of the priests. It is to us a type of Gods' Word, which has been given to cleanse us as to our daily walk and service, and which has also power to keep us clean (Ps. 119:9; John 17:17; 15:3; 2 Tim. 2:21).

On the basis of the finished work on the cross, God cleanses every believer, according to His Word, from every thought, word or deed that grieves Him, the moment it is confessed (1 John 1:9).

3. As a Lamp (Ps. 119:105).

His precious Word gives to every believing heart a knowledge of God's will, by revealing to us His ways for us. He tells us not only of the steps in the pathway in which Jesus Christ, His Son, walked with Him, but He gives us great principles for guidance, which are made real to our hearts by His Spirit (Isa. 50:10; Ps. 32:8; Eph. 5:17).

Illustrations of principles to guide us in His way are found in Rom. 8:6, R. V.; 14:23; 10:17; Isa. 64:4, R. V.; Prov. 3:6; Isa. 40:32.

4. As Milk (1 Peter 2:1, 2).

Our hearts need not only cleansing and guidance, but food to nourish in order that we may have strength for service. This is sweetly furnished at His table, spread by the Spirit in His wonderful Word. For the babes in Christ He has provided milk, that is, simple, clear revelations of the fundamental facts concerning what God has wrought for us in Christ through His finished work, and what He desires to do in and through us by His Spirit and Word (1 Peter 2:24; Rom. 5:8; Heb. 9:26; John 14:16, 17; 16:13-15; Acts 1:8).

5. As Bread (Deut. 8:3; Matt. 4:4).

Bread does not give life, but sustains, nourishes and builds up the life already received from God. The person and work of Christ, revealed to the heart of the believer by the Holy Spirit, through the Word of God, is indeed the Bread of life.

Those who grow in grace and in the knowledge of Him by feeding upon His Word, have strength for service, have ability to point out the way of life to others (John 6: 35, 38, 63; Heb. 1:3; Ezek. 2:9, 10; 3:1-3; Jer. 15:16).

6. As Meat (Heb. 5:11-14).

Strong meat or solid food is for those, who, by reason of use, have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil.

Until believers learn to know the difference between their own thoughts and the voice of the Holy Spirit, they are not able to understand the deep things of God's Word, the secrets of His heart, as written in between the lines of His love letter. His ways they cannot understand. They can only see when He does something, but do not understand why He does what He does. Only a heart yielded to Him and anointed by the Spirit can discover His ways, as revealed in His Word and made real through His dealings with His children (Ps. 103:7; 1 John 2:27; Ps. 25:4; 27, 11).

7. As Honey (Ps. 119:1903; 1r:10; 81:16).

Honey is for satisfaction. Milk, bread and meat are for sustenance, for nourishment, but the honey, the sweet things of God's Word, give us delight and rejoice our hearts as a satisfying portion.

The heart which has learned to find the sweet things of God revealed in His Word, seeks not to find pleasure in the lovely things of earth, having tasted of the Lord that He is good, and having found Him the One altogether lovely (Ps. 24:8; Songs of Solomon 5:16; Isa. 7:15).

8. As Gold (Ps. 19:9, 10; 119:72).

Who is so rich as the one whose heart is filled with the knowledge of God's Word, knowing God's thoughts, knowing His desires and living in the light of His countenance, which beams upon us from every page (Ps. 119:127, 162; Prov. 8:10, 11, 19).

9. As a Sword (Heb. 4:12; Eph. 6:17).

The Holy Spirit uses God's Word to separate us from those things which are not pleasing to Him, and also to give us victory over Satan (2 Cor. 6; Eph. 6:10-18; 1 John 5:4; Rev. 2:12-16).

His Word, as a sword, will destroy His enemies when He comes to establish His kingdom (Rev. 19:21).

10. As a Fire (Jer. 23:29; Luke 24:32).

Fire warms, burns and illuminates. When the Spirit burns a message into our hearts from the Word of God it not only purifies our hearts, but illuminates also. This message then may be passed on through us in a way that shall burn into the hearts of others. His Word became thus a fire in Jeremiah's heart (Jer. 20:9; 1 Cor. 9:16).

11. As a Hammer Jer. 23:29).

A hammer is used to break and to build. The hammer of His Word breaks stony hearts, but builds up believers. Sometimes our hearts are broken up by a message, but that makes it possible for the Holy Spirit to shape us, then to chisel and to polish us (Rom. 8:28; 1 Peter 2:5 1 Kings 6:7).

12. As Seed (1 Peter 1:23; Matt. 13:1-32; Ps. 126:6).

His blessed Word is the incorruptible seed that has the life germ in it and power to beget a new life, even the life of Christ, in the heart of every one who believes it.

When the glorious fact that Christ died for our sins was buried and rose again, according to the Scriptures, are received by faith, it is like the soil closing about the seed, which under the sunshine of God's love, springs up into a new life, "first the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear" (1 Cor. 15:3, 4; Heb. 4:2; Mark 4:28).

BERNARD SHAW ON RELIGION.

"This much I know, looking at life at seventy—men without religion are moral cowards, and mostly physical cowards, too, when they are sober," says Mr. Bernard Shaw, in the Christmas London Magazine, in an interview recorded by Mr. George Sylvester Viereck. "Civilization cannot survive without religion. It matters not what name we bestow upon our divinity—without religion life becomes a meaningless concatenation of accidents. I can conceive of salvation without a god, but I cannot conceive of it without a religion.

"Evolution is a mystical process.

"I am not merely a gadfly that stirs men to think," Mr. Shaw says later. "My work viewed as a whole is constructive. I have laid a brick or two of the ground-work for a new gospel."

FAMILY PRAYERS

Collected by the Right Reverend William Meade, D. D.

I.

FROM THE SCRIPTURES—MORNING AND EVENING.

UNTO Thee, O Lord, do we lift up our souls. Thou art worthy to receive blessing and honor, and glory, and power; and for Thy pleasure and Thy praise, they are and were created. O Lord, we are ashamed, and blush to lift up our faces before Thee; for our iniquities are increased over our heads and our trespass is grown up unto the heavens. If Thou contend with us, we are not able to answer Thee, one of a thousand. The imaginations of the thoughts of our hearts have been evil, only evil, and that from our youth up.

How seldom art Thou, O God, in all our thoughts. How unadvisedly have we spoken with our lips, when our spirits have been provoked within us. How have we grieved that Holy Spirit by which we are sealed unto the day of our redemption. Thy mightest justly swear in Thy wrath that we should never enter into Thy rest. But, oh! the riches of the patience and forbearance of our God! how long suffering is He towards us, not willing that any should perish. Oh! that His goodness might lead us to repentance, and His long suffering prove our salvation! Weary and heavy laden with the burden of our sins, we come to our Lord for rest. We would look unto Him whom we have pierced with our sins, and mourn in bitterness. We would smite upon our breasts and cry, God be merciful unto us. May the love of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus, make us free from the love of sin and death.

We bless Thee that Thou hast laid our help upon one so mighty to help and save, and who hast redeemed us from the curse of the law by being made a curse for us. We bless Thee that He is still our advocate at Thy right hand, and ever livest to make intercession for us. We bless Thee for all the other benefits with which Thou loadest us. Thy goodness is Thy glory and, therefore, do Thy saints praise Thee. Every day will we bless Thee, and praise Thy name forever and ever. And let the people praise Thee, O God; yea, let all the people praise Thee. Oh! let the nations upon earth be glad, and sing for joy. Let Thy salvation and righteousness be openly showed in the sight of the heathen, and let all the ends of the earth see the salvation of our God.

Add to the Church daily of such as shall be saved. Make Thy ministers mighty in the Scriptures, thoroughly furnished unto every good work. Bless the schools of the prophets in our land. Purify those fountains; and may streams issue therefrom, to make glad the city of our God, and refresh the whole earth. Make those who abound in the goods of this world to be rich in good works, and willing to communicate of their store. Make the kings of the earth to be nursing fathers, and the queens to be nursing mothers of Thy Church; and soon may the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord Jesus Christ; in whose name we offer up our prayers and in the full meaning of whose blessed words we would sum up all our petitions at a throne of grace:

Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name, Etc.

RETREAT TO ROMANISM

I.

IN the initial stages of the struggle between the American Colonies and the British Crown there was one who thinking straight and true, analyzed carefully each factor in the situation and thinking through the situation as it actually existed, saw that the only alternative offered the colonies was liberty or servitude, freedom or slavery.

While others cried, "Peace, Peace!" deceiving themselves with vain hopes of compromise. While others hesitated, sought to dodge the inevitable, refused to face the issue that actually presented itself, Patrick Henry mentally tabulated the facts, thought the situation through and met the inevitable issue squarely without hesitation or evasion.

This Protestant Episcopal Church which we love with all the devotion of which we are capable is today facing a crisis similar to that which confronted the American Colonies in the days of Patrick Henry.

That situation has been brought about by the changes proposed and by some already made in our Book of Common Prayer. The situation requires the same clear-cut thinking and recognition of the real issue involved as did the situation which confronted Patrick Henry.

The rank and file of the laity apparently is under the impression that the present controversy is of small importance, that the only questions involved are touching Ritual, Vestments and whether the Articles shall be printed in the Prayer Book or under separate cover.

If that were true. If that were the real issue confronting the Church, the writer would content himself with the thought that "one of the glories of the Episcopal Church was its ability to hold together in one fold men of diverse views and practices".

But that is not true. The issue is not whether the Episcopal Church > shall discard its present vestments and adopt those of the Roman Church; > shall simplify its ritual or copy the worship and forms of another Church; > shall cling to Articles of Religion couched in sixteenth century Engish.

It is true there are those in our fold who seemingly prefer the ritual, vestments and dogmas of another Church to their own and who are trying to get rid of the Articles. But the Articles, Vestments, Ritual are not the real issue.

The real issue is this:

Apostolic Christianity
versus
Medieval Christianity.

The Renaissance in the field of secular letters and the Reformation in the field of Religion opened the Book of Knowledge, unlocked the doors of Learning, unfolded the pages of the Bible, removed the blinders from the eyes and the fetters from the intellects of mankind. The invention of the printing press made this new learning available to the masses.

No longer were men to be bound by the conclusions and opinions of Medieval theologians and philosophers. Casting aside the theology of Peter Lombard and Thomas Aquinas, which had blindly followed and was in a sense bound by forged decretals and ancient traditions, the Reformers went back of these teachers of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries to the original sources.

Their investigations and research naturally revealed forgeries and myths which had been accepted in the Dark Ages as authentic and reliable. Their study of the writings of the apostolic and sub-apostolic age caused them to draw a definite, clear-cut, distinction between historical facts and mythological traditions, between the Holy Scriptures and the opinions of men.

That is what the Reformation accomplished. It gave men an opportunity to think for themselves. It restored to them the liberty that is in Christ Jesus, the precious liberty of the Gospel for which Paul fought in his day. The real issue, therefore, which confronts us today, is this:

> Shall we follow the Reformers and keep our faces turned to the light,
>
> Or
> shall we turn the pages of history back four hundred years?
> Shall we cling to those truly catholic and apostolic customs which are our heritage and the teachings of the primitive Church as this Church hath received them", > shall we "ape" the so-called catholic practices of another Communion—practices which find their origin in that period of history known as 'The Dark Ages".
>
> Or

Shall we cling to the doctrines of our own Church founded upon the sure and certain warrant of the Holy Scriptures, shall we substitute the dogmas of another based upon the twelfth and thirteenth century theology of Peter Lombard and Thomas Aquinas?

Or

Shall we be ourselves

Or

shall we be merely "imitators" and copyists"?

Apostolic Christianity,

Or

Medieval Christianity?

That is the issue—that the alternative and we must

CHOOSE.

We can no longer halt between two opinions. We must choose, and we must CHOOSE NOW. For "NOW is the accepted time, NOW is the day of our salvation".

The Joint Commission appointed in 1913 to consider "such revision and enrichment of the Prayer Book as will adapt it to the present conditions" was expressly directed not to consider or report any "proposition involving the Faith and Doctrine of the Church".

In spite of that injunction the changes proposed as well as some already adopted will have the effect of radically changing the Doctrine of this Church of ours.

I refer at this time more especially to the changes made in our Communion Office and to the addition of Prayers for the Dead in several places in the revised Book.

Some are of the opinion that the retention of the Articles of Religion will be a sufficient safeguard against any effort to change the accepted "Faith and Doctrine" of the Protestant Episcopal Church. Such reasoning is not sound. The Offices of the Book, if in conflict with the Articles, will be the determining factor, for we teach through the Offices, not through the Articles.

The Articles, if we succeed in retaining them, will teach that the following doctrines are unscriptural:

Transubstantiation,
The Sacrifice of the Mass,
Masses for the Dead,
Works of Supererogation,
Indulgences,
Invocation of Saints,
Mariolatry.

Yet the Revised Prayer Book, if we accept it, will also contain an amended Communion Office that will enable those who wish to teach Transubstantiation to do so more effectively than ever before. It will also contain Prayers for the Dead which were the keystone of the arch into which all the doctrines the Articles protest against were constructed.

Without Prayers for the Dead not a single dogma repudiated by the Reformers can live. Re-admit Prayers for the Dead into our Church and it "will not be long" before every Medieval dogma discarded by the Reformers will again be taught in this Church.

The above is a bold assertion. Is it true? We appeal to the verdict of history. What is the history of the evolution of Prayers for the Dead? Let us turn back to that period of Church History ending with the Council of Nicea, for it was during that period that the custom arose of preaching funeral sermons and offering prayers for the dead.

I presume all of us have at some time attended a funeral conducted by the Minister of one of those churches in which free or extempore prayer is the usual custom.

Assuming the deceased to have been a faithful, devoted member of the Church, the minister will, in his prayer, return thanks to God for the pious life and worthy exemple of the departed brother, but there will be no intercession for the welfare of the departed soul.

That seems to have been the custom when these prayers first originated. They were thanksgivings for the life and virtue of the departed. We have such thanksgivings or "commemorations" now. Through the usual process of evolution these prayers became definite intercessions for the welfare of the departed soul.

Neither the doctrine of Purgatory nor the thought of a probationary period after death had yet entered. These first prayers indicate a belief that the departed soul is at peace and reflect the feeling that the return of Christ and the resurrection of the dead is to occur in the very near future, therefore, we have petitions that the departed one may come to an "early resurrection", or be included in the "first resurrection".

But, as men began to realize that the return of Christ and the resurrection were not to be events of the immediate future, to those who really thought the idea of praying for the welfare of a soul already admitted to be at ease and peace began to appear absrud.

With the decline of morals and the rise of asceticism men contrasted the strictness of some with the laxity of other professing Christians and human reasoning evolved the thought that at least some, if not all, would need a period of purging before they could stand in the presence of God.

While this reasoning ignores the New Testament declaration that the cleansing power of the Blood of Christ is sufficient to blot out all our iniquities, human reason has ever been wont to place its own conclusions above the revelation God has vouchsafed. The Scriptures have ever been extremely reticent concerning the life beyond the veil, but man is by nature an inquisitive animal and ever prone to speculate upon the subject. The result of this speculation was Purgatory. Not immediately, but by the natural processes of evolution there developed the doctrine of Purgatory which became the accepted dogma of the Middle Ages.

But what has "Prayer for the Dead" to do with Purgatory? This:

If I believe,

(a) that Christ, on Calvary's Hill, "made there by His one oblation of Himself once offered a full, perfect and sufficient sacrifice, oblation, and satisfaction for the sins of the whole world";
(b) that Justification is by Faith, and cleansing and pardoning is through the Blood of Christ and not by pious Works;
(c) the promises of God that if we repent, our sins will be forgiven, blotted out and remembered no more forever;
(d) that the man, woman or child who by faith hath accepted the salvation so freely offered by Christ has by the exercise of a living faith passed from death to eternal life and that there is now no condemnation to those who are in Christ Jesus but that He is able to keep that which we have committed unto Him, even our immortal souls as it passes through the valley and shadow of death and is ushered into the beatific presence and joyful fellowship with Him;

Believing that—then is it not absurd for me to stand at the grave and say:

"Unto Almighty God we commend the soul of our departed brother"— or to pray:

"Accept our prayers on behalf of the soul of Thy servant departed, and grant him an entrance into the land of light and joy," etc.

The brother has been dead for hours and the revised Burial Service puts these words into the mouth of the minister. Where is that departed soul? Apostolical Christianity says "absent from the body at home with the Lord". Jesus said the soul of Lazarus was carried by angels into Abraham's bosom, and to the thief on the cross, "this day —with Me—in Paradise".

"I HEAR THEM CALLING."

One of our medical missionaries was Dr. Francis J. Hall, of Peking, China. He had been graduated with high honors at the Johns Hopkins Medical School in Baltimore, and had consecrated his life to medical missionary work in China, where his large abilities promptly won him wide influence. In 1913 he said to one of his associates: "I have just been called to a Chinese who has typhus fever. Many physicians have died of that disease, but I must go." Two weeks later he was stricken. As he lay dying his mind wandered, and he was heard to exclaim: "I hear them calling, I must go; I hear them calling!"

Do you hear them calling? Is the answer, yes? Then joyfully register a vow that, God helping you, the army of the Lord shall not be maimed because of your indifference, but as a good soldier of Jesus Christ you will, if need be, endure hardness, and give of your possessions, even unto the shedding of blood.—S. S. Times.

A WHISPER.

With tearful eyes I look around;
Life seems a dark and stormy sea;
Yet 'mid the gloom I hear a sound,
A heavenly whisper, "Come to me".

WHERE THE SPIRIT OF GOD IS, IS LIBERTY

By the Right Reverend William A. Guerry

The Baccalaureate Sermon to Have Been Delivered at the University of North Carolina.

II.

Undergraduates Too Superficial.

I WAS very impressed recently by an article in the Forum by Dr. Angell, President of Yale University, on the religious attitude of undergraduates. He began by calling attention to the fact that the boy or girl of today going away from home to college for the first time, was disposed to cast aside the faith of their childhood and the teachings of Christ without giving the matter very serious thought. He said that from his knowledge of the average undergraduate he was forced to admit that he was far too superficial, that he was averse to any serious reading and study of any important question before the world today.

As therefore we look back over the first three hundred years of Christian history, we can see that what enabled Christianity to conquer the Greco-Roman world and to supplant the eagles of imperial Rome with the Cross of the Nazarene, was not only the inherent truth of the Gospel message, but also its marvelous power of adaptation and its ability to solve the problems of human society under which the world was groaning. As Mr. Lecky in his History of European Morals points out, the appeal of the early Church was as much to the intelligence and reason of men as it was to their ethical sense and the spiritual needs of the human soul.

Not Always With Progress.

But it must in all candor be stated that there have been periods in the history of the Church when Christianity has not always been on the side of progress, when an ecclesiastical despotism and an imperialistic conception of the Church triumphed over the spirit of man, and the pioneers of modern science were imprisoned or put to death for their views. But even so, such was the surgent power of truth, such the rejuvenating and recreative spirit of Christ that the wheels of progress could not always be retarded, nor the spirit of free inquiry and love of truth forever imprisoned. And so, with the fall of Constantinople in 1453, and the spread of Greek culture and philosophy over Western Europe in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, there came the dawning of the Greek language which enabled Erasmus to give to the world the first complete edition of the New Testament in the original, and men were enabled for the first time in 1,000 years to go back to the source of Divine inspiration and truth. With the revival of learning there came a new birth of the Christian Church. Once again the Gospel of Christ gave proof of its ability to assimilate new truth and to adjust itself to new conditions. As of old, the Spirit of God moved on the face of the waters and brought order out of chaos, so once again the Holy Spirit, the Comforter, enkindled and enlightened the hearts of men with new visions of truth, and with a new insight into the essentials of Christian faith. This rebirth of Christianity rapidly gained headway until one day a brave German monk nailed his ninety theses to the cathedral door of Wittenburg and started that great Reformation movement which notwithstanding its inevitable mistakes and exaggerations laid the foundation of civil and religious liberty in the world, gave us a new appreciation of the value of the individual and secured to each human soul the inalienable right to worship God according to the dictates of one's conscience.

The Two Wesleys.

And again in the eighteenth century, when Bishop Butler tells us that religion was at such a low ebb in England that men were confidently predicting the extinction of Christianity, the Spirit of God moved mysteriously and powerfully in the hearts of the two young undergraduates of Oxford University, John and Charles Wesley and started that great evangelistic movement and revival the fruits of which we see about us today in the Methodist Church and in the missionary program of all the Churches and in the consecrated lives of thousands of men and women about us.

But the revival and progress of Christian ideals and principle has not always been confined to matters of doctrine or to questions of personal religion. Within the last fifty years the conception of Christianity and the Kingdom of God, a regenerate social order, has been a new emphasis and interpretation. The time was that the Kingdom of God was supposed to be entirely remote and separate from this world. The Kingdom of God was in heaven, and had to do with the future realm of existence. Christianity, it was held, was not supposed to be applicable to social and industrial problems. But how all this has been changed within the recollection of many of you here, is a commonplace of current Christianity. When Kingsley and Frederick Denison Maurice in England began preaching the social Gospel and claimed that the law of Christ should govern in social and industrial conditions, it was looked upon at the time as a radical departure from accepted standards and from a traditional Christianity. Those pioneers of the new social order were accused of radicalism and socialism, but we have lived to see the day when the message suited for this age, and it is today being preached from many a pulpit in this land, and with a zeal and power which rivals the preaching of Amos, Isaiah and John the Baptist.

Not Dead Nor Decadent.

And so, once again, Christianity in our own time has given proof that it is not a dead or a decadent religion, but one fully alive and abreast of the best and most enlightened sociology of the day. Here again the ultra-conservative, the blind traditionalist, the self-complacement pewholder, is proving himself the greatest enemy of the Church of Christ and the chief obstacle in the path of further progress. Also, men are prone too often to lay the blame on the Church of God and on the Christian religion when as a matter of fact, the real enemies of the Christian Gospel are now, as of old, the scribes and Pharisees within the fold. The trouble we repeat is not with the Gospel of Christ or with essential Christianity, but with those who claim to represent it. It is indeed astonishing how often history repeats itself, and how unchanged human nature is at bottom, and how the problems of the present hour are essentially the same which confronted Christ and His Apostles in the first century of the Christian era.

And what shall we say of the present outlook for the Church? What are the signs of the times? Are there any evidences of a new spiritual awakening? Has the watchman on the towers of Zion anything to tell us about the dawning of a better day ahead? Is the Church of today as of yore still capable of progress: is she prepared to follow the manifest leadings of the Spirit of God, or is she so bound down by tradition and by ultra-conservatism that she is no longer capable of adjusting herself to the problems of this new era in the world's history? I am not a prophet, nor the son of a prophet, and yet, as it seems to me, there are many clear and unmistakble signs upon the horizon of the Church's life that point to another rebirth of Christianity in our own times. Since the World War the spirit of unity and of international good will has become the watchword of the hour. The response which Secretary Kellogg's proposal of a multi-lateral treaty for the renunciation of war, as an instrument of national policy has received, has been most gratifying. Nor has this growing spirit of unity and good will been confined to the Christian nations of Western Europe. It is also finding its way into the hearts of Christian people in all forms of organized Christianity throughout the world. It was but last August that there assembled at Lausanne, Switzerland, the most representative and important gathering of representatives of Christian Churches that has assembled since the days of the Apostles. The spirit of the living God, the spirit of unity and brotherly love, is undoubtedly very powerful today in the hearts and minds of Christian men and women throughout the world. There has been a most extraordinary awakening and realization of the shame and weakness of a divided Christendom. Christ's great prayer on the eve of His crucifixion "that they all may be one" is far more certain of fulfillment than it was a generation ago. The bigotry and blindness of His followers may postpone the day of reconciliation, but the spirit of unity is abroad in the land and is gathering force like the waters of some gigantic Niagara, and it will in time sweep away all denominational barriers and find a platform which while retaining the essentials of the Christian faith shall be broad and comprehensive enough to include all.

I am not in a position to know how true this picture is, only I would remind you that where the spirit of God is, there is liberty, and there is one further thought I would leave with you. In conclusion, let me impress upon you that there is no such thing as a closed question in the sense that you are not at liberty to undertake your own independent study and investigation of the grounds of belief.

There are some things however which I think you may consider as definitely and finally settled, and that no amount of independent research and investigation will ever overthrow them; but that is quite a different thing from saying that such questions are forever closed. Even the existence of God is not a closed question. For myself I think it pretty well settled upon the best and surest foundations, because it is founded upon a universal human experience which cannot be denied, gainsaid, or overthrown. I suppose that most of us here would be willing to accept the literary judgment of the world that Shakespeare is a great poet, but the question as Mr. Bernard Shaw has pointed out, is by no means closed. There is therefore no door of opportunity or realm of knowledge which is not open to your knowledge which is not open to your independent study and investigation. Only before you pronounce an opinion contrary to the accepted judgment and experience of the race, be sure that you qualified both morally and intellectually to express an opinion. Knock, therefore, at every door, and it shall be opened; seek and search in every realm of knowledge, and ye shall find; only be sure that you know with reverence and seek with diligence and pray with humility and with faith for more light on your journey.

It was said of Justin Martyr, the first great Christian Apologist, that after his conversion to Christianity he continued to wear his philosopher's cloak, and when asked why he did so now that he had become a Christian, he replied that he had discovered that Christianity was the only true philosophy and that in becoming a Christian he had not ceased to be a philosopher. I do not think that I could conclude my sermon better than by quoting to you the motto of the University of Oxford, "Deus illuminata mea", God is my light, and my prayer for you this day is that God may pour out upon you the gift of the Holy Ghost, the Divine Comforter, who will guide you into all truth and enlighten your understanding more and more with the light of the everlasting Gospel. Amen.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed—"Thy word have I hid in my heart" (Psalm 119:11).

This week the following verse was submitted by Mrs. L. H. Seeligson, Cuero, Texas:

"Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path" (Ps. 119:105).

EIGHTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY

By Berkeley Minor

COLLECT.

O God, whose never-failing providence ordereth all things, both in heaven and earth, we humbly beseech Thee to put away from us all hurtful things, and to give us those things which are profitable for us through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

THE Epistle for the Eighth Sunday after Trinity is Rom. 8:12-17, and brings to our attention that stern conflict between the flesh and the spirit, which begins with the new birth of the Christian and lasts till life's end. This conflict is well described in the preceding chapter of this Epistle to the Romans (the seventh), wherein is set forth the great difficulty of conquering the "sinful lusts of the flesh", the renunciation of which my sponsors in baptism did promise and vow for me, which promise I assumed, but often failed to keep. In verses twenty-three and twenty-five of this seventh chapter, St. Paul describes the conflict in himself (and we fellow-Christians feel how truly he described it), between the law of God in the inner man, and another law in his members, warring against the law of his mind, and bringing him into captivity to the law of sin which is in his members; and then he cries out (v. 24): "O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" The Apostle's distress of mind is so great that he becomes incoherent, cannot clearly express all that he feels, as is shown here in this passage, where learned men give three renderings of the Greek original. But it is plain that St. Paul seeks earnestly for deliverance from a great evil, a besetting sin, which he so earnestly deprecates, which we must resist "unto blood, striving against sin" (Heb. 12:4). Verse twenty-five gives the name of the Apostle's deliverer from "this death": "I thank God through Jesus Christ, our Lord." He is our great Deliverer, not only from the condemnation due to our sins, but from the power of our great accuser, who would keep us in captivity to the law of sin in our members.

VERSE sixteen of our Gospel is remarkable, as having suggested to John Wesley that he had not been "born again", leading him to seek and find that "new birth", without which a man cannot see or enter the kingdom of God. The good Moravian bishop (Spangenberg), asked Wesley if he had the testimony of the "Spirit Himself" bearing witness with his spirit that he was a child of God. Wesley, seeing this Christian, and other Moravian missionaries with him, entirely fearless in a great storm on the ocean (on their voyage to Georgia), when the ship seemed about to be lost, and not so fearless himself, thought he could not be truly converted, a child of God. Was Wesley right? Was he not "saved", when that storm came and tested him, and he not converted, till that prayer meeting in London, when his happy Christian life began? I think he was mistaken, and that he had long been a convert, the lacking that consciousness of it, by which he could feel the adoption and cry "Abba, Father".

St. Paul says (Gal. 4:6-7): "Because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of His Son into our hearts, crying, Abba, Father. So that thou art no longer a bond-servant, but a son; and if a son, then an heir of God through Christ." This joyful consciousness of our relationship to God as a son and heir, a joint-heir with Christ, comes to some at conversion, to some later, and to some is denied till the last, as to Mr. Despondency, and his daughter, Much-afraid (in Pilgrim's Progress). The feeling of utter unworthiness because of sins besetting us after confessing Christ, sins that have taken such hold on us that we seem unable to look up, even to our kind Saviour Himself (Ps. 40:12); the feeling that made the poor, repentant prodigal, the surely converted, say, or intend to say, to his injured father: "Make me as one of thy hired servants."

We are born, too, so different in body, mind and soul, with natural parts so different, some so fair and some so plain, some born to wealth, some to poverty, with such different mental gifts, and most important of all, for happiness, with such different capacities for enjoying the many blessings which surround us, either from physical infirmity, or mental peculiarity. The grace of God can do, and does do much for pure and holy living, but does not change these characters with which we are born, any more than the color of the hair, or the contour of the face.

THE Gospel for the Eighth Sunday after Trinity is St. Matt. 7:15-21, from the latter part of the Sermon on the Mount.

The false prophets, of whom Jesus bads His disciples "beware", could hardly then have been identified with the scribes and Pharisees, by those He was addressing; for they, their "spiritual pastors and masters" had not yet gone so far in their wilful and shameful persecution of Him, as to make Him denounce on them the eight terrible woes that fell upon them later, in the last week of His life. In all of these He calls them either hypocrites or blind guides. Here He calls them "wolves in sheep's clothing, ravening wolves", for it seems quite plain that He meant theses cribes and Pharisees. Whom else could He have had in mind? False prophets (teachers) are common indeed; but most of them would seem to be sincere, not hypocrites, blind leaders of the blind, but not necessarily hypocrites. Mahomet, for example, could not have been a hypocrite. Hypocrisy could not possibly achieve what he accomplished. Such false prophets often bear fruits of such excellence as to make our Lord's test difficult to apply. And this difficulty is made greater by the sad fact that many Christian teachers, whose teaching is at least orthodox, if not edifying, do not live up to their teaching, and do not approve themselves true prophets by their fruits. Such teachers must have abounded in Mahomet's day; for historians agree as to the corruptions of that time. The Christianity of the first three centuries, under persecution and so purified, was irresistible, but three more centuries of Christianity, dominant and corrupted by power and wealth, proved much of it to be, as shown by its fruits, little better than thorns and thistles; and so Mohammedanism strong in its better fruit was able to hew much of it down and cast it into the fire.

Our Gospel closes with a most serious warning: "Not every one that sayeth unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doth the will of my Father, which is in heaven." He presses upon His hearers the great importance of doing, as well as of saying. The far greater importance of the former over the latter is forcibly set forth by some teaching of Jesus in the last week of His earthly ministry, shown in the parable of the two sons, ordered by their father to go and work in his vineyard. The one who refused, but later repented and went, is not a good example for us, but is far better than his, who said: "I go, sir, and went not." What is this will of our Father in heaven, which we must do, if we would enter into the kingdom of heaven? It is evidently that "will" that we pray "be done on earth as in heaven", in our Lord's Prayer. Knowing then the impossibility of our fully doing that will on account of human frailty, we should despair of entrance into that glorious kingdom, but for the atoning blood of Christ, and the grace that "sanctifieth us and all the people of God." Jesus had taught in the Sermon the Prayer: "Thy will be done on earth"; what that will was, was not yet clearly revealed; but in the "Progress of Doctine" it was soon made clear to them by His further teaching, and by His atoning death and Resurrection, and by the coming of the Holy Ghost. A clear revelation of that will of God was given later by Jesus (John 6:40) to those who had followed Him (as He told them) because they had eaten of the loaves and were filled; "and this is the will of Him that sent me that every one that seeth the Son, and believeth on Him, may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day." His will (God's will) is that we be saved from our sins, and raised up in glorified bodies of the last Day.

"O God, the Holy Ghost, Sanctifier of the faith," let not our perverse wills frustrate Thy blessed will for our salvation.

Book Reviews

RELIGION THAT WORKS: By S. M. Shoemaker, Jr., Fleming H. Revell Company. Price $1.25.

Here is a book that glows with a vital, personal faith. The author's ministry has been spent chiefly in individual dealing and the fact is evident on every page. He speaks from experience. It makes us long that every clergyman of our Church were filled with the same spirit. We know men in the ministry who know nothing of individual work. We know some who have never definitely led a man to a decision for Christ. The condition is a pathetic one not to speak of the outrageous neglect of our Lord's greatest work that it reveals. These sermons search the conscience, and probe the hidden reasons for an unsurrendered and faithless life, as they could not do except as they came fresh from the experience of a man who is bringing men to God. The men who are allowing details of administration, or any other thing to keep them from the joy of this work, ought to read this book and then on their knees should pray God's forgiveness for their neglect in the past, and should surrender themselves to Him for a fresh anointing of His Spirit for service.

TWENTIETH CENTURY DISCIPLESHIP: By Bishop Anderson. Morehouse Publishing Company. Cloth. $1.00. 50c. Paper.

It is good to have a book that emphasizes the centrality of our Lord's Person in the faith that bears His name. We are glad to see also that the Christ whom this booklet presents is the full-orbed Christ of the New Testament, the Christ to whom all power was given. It is good that the author emphasizes the fact that Christianity is a personal relationship between the disciples and His Lord and Saviour.

There is a tendency, not at all unique today, to sit on both sides of the fence. For example, the author says that we can take both Christ and Darwin. Let us see. Darwin's emphasis as we know was upon the struggle for existence. There is some evidence that Darwin himself could not see the logical outcome of his teaching. Professor More tells us that the philosophy of Nietze is nearer kin to that doctrine than is the teaching of Christ. With Loeb and Leopold at his doorstep we think the author might have come to a more logical conclusion.

He deplores discussion of the Thirty-nine Articles without mentioning the fact that they contain the principles by which personal access to Christ (the theme of his book) was restored to us from the midst of the trappings that had obscured it. He discusses Bible and Church with reference to their value as indexes to the mind of Christ, and gives the Church a shade the better position in his mind. We cannot see how any one who knows the blunders and sins of Historic Christianity can for a moment consider its assembled representatives, take them at what point of history you will, as better representatives of the mind of Christ than the men who were inspired to give us the Scriptures. These points suggest that while the author's main theme is excellent, some of his conclusions may be taken with a grain of salt.

A FAITHFUL DEACONESS.

Mr. Editor:

Do you approve of deaconesses, I wonder? It is hot here now; the Indians, most of them, are away working in the cantaloupe fields and as many of the white people as can get away are gone to cooler climates. I am staying on, hoping to be of service. I do not like to be away from my post more than two months. While I am at home, on my vacation, so near Washington, it seems a pity to miss the General Convention.

The heat here on the desert is very different from that at home. We have no cooling storms and cannot often get ice.

A little Indian girl was brought here from one of the near reservation schools. Her mother was off at a place eighty miles distant; there was no one to take her in, and she was very sick. It was comforting to be able to take her into the mission and care for her properly, so that she recovered enough in eleven days to be taken on to her mother.

A poor young fellow who was trying to board a fast freight, slipped and was killed. We helped to give him decent burial, instead of being treated like an animal that had met the same fate.

I give you these two instances, to show how a deaconess in the desert may be called upon besides her regular duties. We are asked to do all we can to interest friends in the retiring fund for deaconesses. If you think it worthwhile, perhaps you will put a copy of the enclosed in The Southern Churchman.

"STRANGE HAPPENINGS."

Mr. Editor:

There are strange happenings in the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America these days.

What place there is in the Church in this day and time for monastic institutions, nunneries, etc., is by no means clear to the vast majority of its communicants. However, in one of these monastic orders, the Order of the Holy Cross, "Father" Shirley C. Hughson is very prominent, if not recognized as its real leader. This Order has long issued a publication known as the "Holy Cross Magazine".

In parallel column below you will find an editorial appearing in this "Holy Cross Magazine", published by "Father" Hugson's Order, under date of January, 1926, approximately ninety days after the adjournment of the 1925 session of the General Convention, at which session was introduced the resolution to do away with the Articles of Religion, fathered by the "Anglo-Catholic" party, of which "Father" Hughson is also one of the leaders, and also an article by the same "Father" Shirley C. Hughson, appearing in the July 12, 1928, issue of "The Witness":

"Holy Cross Magazine."
January, 1926.

"The action of the General Convention in abolishing the Thirty-nine Articles has a good deal more significance than people generally have realized. The Articles represent a compromise measure on the part of the English Church in the sixteenth century, the object of which was to hold within that Church both Puritans and Papists. It was a complete failure. Both Puritans and Papists got out, the former because they thought the Church too Roman, the latter because they thought her too Protestant. In spite of the failure, the English Church has held to the Articles all these centuries. Today every English priest is required to sign them, and it was not so long ago that students entering the English universities were required on matriculation to sign them. This subscription has never been required by any one in the Episcopal Church. In casting them out entirely, our Church has declared that she does not propose, in any sense, to be dominated by the ecclesiastical squabbles of four hundred years ago. She has a great work to do, and there is only just so much time and strength and energy. We cannot expend these on the dead issues of an England of four centuries silence. All that is good in the Articles is amply set forth in the Creeds. Nothing beyond this is needed. When one examines the Articles, especially in the light of the history of the heresies which have in past ages distressed the Church, there is no doubt that they contain many excellent statements of Catholic truth, but it is equally true that they also contain some highly questionable statements, and certainly not a few unfortunate and misleading implications. The feeling regarding many points was illustrated in the remarks made to me by a Southern Bishop the day the vote was taken. 'It is time,' he said, 'that we stop talking about greater and lesser Sacraments.' "

"Father" Hughson in "The Witness", July 12, 1928.

"I am, as I have always been, unqualifiedly in favor of the retention of the Thirty-nine Articles in the Prayer Book. This is no time to be removing from the Church's formularies official statements of her belief in fundamentals of the Faith which are being denied in many quarters.

The Articles stand for the following points of Christian doctrine which at this time should be reaffirmed, not stricken out:

I. The Articles declare belief in the Virgin Birth of Our Lord to be an essential part of the faith which this Church professes.

II. They declare that Christ did truly rise again from the dead, with all that pertains to the perfection of human nature, and that He, in that Body which arose, did also ascend into Heaven. They allow no question of the Bodily Resurrection and Ascension.

III. They state clearly the teaching of the Church concerning the Sacraments, which needs much to be emphasized in our time.

IV. They declare that by means of baptism, 'as by an instrument', souls are grafted into the Church. Article XXVII is a condemnation of any denial of Baptismal Regeneration. The words, 'as by an instrument', are what certain so-called Liberals call 'magic'. It is a wholesome doctrine. Let it not be tampered with.

V. Article XXVIII declares in admirable theological language the Church's teaching of the Real, Objective Presence of Christ in the Eucharist.

There are certain things in the Articles which reflect the dead issues of centuries ago, and there are certain ambiguities. But the Articles need revision, not excision. Until they can be gravely considered and revised, let them stand, lest the Faith of our Fathers suffer."

This comparison of the editorial of January, 1925, in the official organ of "Father" Hughson's Order, with his utterances in "The Witness" of July 12, 1928, will be most interesting to Protestant Episcopalians. Inasmuch as "Father" Hughson is "Assistant Superior" of the Order of the Holy Cross, it is hardly to be imagined that the editorial of January, 1926, was published without his knowledge. Two and one-half years have elapsed since publication of the editorial of January, 1926, during which time the laity of the Church have become pretty thoroughly aroused to the purposes of the Order of the Holy Cross, the "Anglo-Catholic" Party and their fifty-odd allied organizations in the Church. Protestant Episcopalians can draw their own conclusions. In July of 1928 the handwriting is on the wall.

In view of the repeated assertions of Mr. Morehouse, Editor of the "Living Church", and other "Anglo-Catholic" leaders, that it was not the purpose of the resolution to omit the Articles of Religion from the Prayer Book to do away with them, it is rather amusing to read NOW what this "Anglo-Catholic" organ, the "Holy Cross Magazine", said IN JANUARY, 1926, concerning the purpose of that resolution, viz.:

> "The action of the General Convention in abolishing the Thirty-nine Articles has a good deal more significance than people generally have realized. . . . . In casting them out ENTIRELY, our Church has declared that she does not propose, in any sense, to be dominated by the ecclesiastical squabbles of four hundred years ago."

The writer of that editorial said one thing that was certainly true, that the action of the General Convention in moving to abolish the Articles of Religion "Has a great deal more signficance than people generally have realized". But the people in the pews are rapidly grasping the significance of this "Anglo-Catholic" move now, as will be evidenced by the monster petition that will be presented to the General Convention in October.

Truly there are strange happenings in the Church these days.

"PESSIMISTIC."

Mr. Editor:

Thanks for inserting my letter in The Southern Churchman of July 14.

The Bishop of Massachusetts, I think, does not distinguish between an Evangelical Churchman, and a Low Church party man. If he will look up Church History, he will discover that some of the bitterest foes the Evangelicals had to contend against were Low Churchmen.

I do not like the spirit, which the advocates of the New Prayer Book manifest towards those who are opposed to it. I cannot understand how some who claim to be Evangelical in doctrine, can agree to compromise with the Pro-Roman party for the sake of peace.

If the proposed New Prayer Book should be accepted, and the Convention should authorize it to be used in all our churches, I would like to ask if clergymen who, for conscience sake, cannot consent to use it, will be permitted to use the present Prayer Book.

I do not intend to use prayers for the dead, and I affirm that such prayers are contrary to the New Testament. I do not object to others praying for the dead, or to the saints, but I do resent these Pro-Romanists in our Communion compelling me to use such prayers. If the Bishops of our Church would mingle with the laity, they would find out the strong opposition there is manifested towards the new Prayer Book.

I am pessimistic I confess, as to the future of the Protestant Episcopal Church. Unless Evangelicals at this time rise up in opposition to the New Prayer Book, and let the coming Convention know definitely they will not agree to use it, I fully believe the Romanizers will, by craft, succeed in getting it authorized by the Convention.

If prayers to the saints, and prayers for the dead are to be only permissible and not obligatory, I should not object to such.

My experiences with "Catholics" make me suspicious of them. I would rather deal with an out and out Roman Catholic.

The "Catholics" will not rest satisfied till they have driven loyal Protestant Evangelical Churchmen out of this communion. Why don't they come out honestly and say so?

THE WAY.

"Master, where abidest Thou?
We would leave the past behind,
Learning more thy heavenly mind."
We would scale the mountain's brow,

We faintly hear, we dimly see,
In differing phrase we pray;
But dim or clear, we own in Thee
The Life, the Truth, the Way.
—John Greenleaf Whittier.

"Grace, when the sun is shining, Lord,
Grace when the sky is black;
Grace when I get the unkind word,
Grace on the too smooth track;
Grace when I'm elbowed into a nook,
Grace when I get my turn;
Grace when I meet the scornful look,
Grace when the hot tears burn."

Church Army on Wall Street.

Noon-hour gatherings on Wall Street are being conducted throughout the summer by members of the Church Army, under the auspices of Trinity Church.

In his opening address, Captain Mountford said, in part:

"We offer a positive Message, we 'preach Christ', that is, the Person of Christ. Christianity is Christ. The greatest fact in history is the fact that the Lord Jesus, God of God, Very God of Very God, of one substance with the Father, by whom all things were made, for us men and for our salvation, came down from heaven, and was incarnate, and was made Man, and was crucified for us under Pontius Pilate and rose again from the dead. And that being the supreme fact in history, every man can come into personal relationship with Jesus Christ."

Church Army seeks to link up interested folk, either with Trinity Church or with the hearer's home Church. Blanks to be filled in by the listeners are offered, making it possible to keep track of earnest ones. Laymen of Trinity Parish are assisting day by day.

Trinity's New Rules For Wedding Rites.

Participants in a wedding ceremony in Trinity Church, New York, will be required to first sign a statement under oath that they have been baptized, have never been divorced, are of legal age, and enter the marriage freely "without any outside influence or coercion whatever".

Announcement of the new requirement appears in the Rev. Dr. Calb R. Stetson's statement in the year book of Trinity Church, of which he is rector, published last week.

Dr. Stetson urges clergymen to advise non-Christians to be married by a civil officer. He arraigns those "thoughtless and grossly careless clergymen of various denominations who appear willing to perform a wedding ceremony for any who come to them to be married."

Attacks Marriage Trend.

"The whole subject of marriage," Dr. Stetson says, "has been dragged in the mire of late years. Radical social reformers are proclaiming that monogamous marriage is a convention the world has outgrown and that marriage in this modern enlightened state of society should be a temporary arrangement between a man and a woman to be ended at any time according to the will or the whim of the contracting parties.

"These ideas are naturally agreeable to a great many people who have no particular standard of morals and would prefer when possible to enjoy license with respectability."

"This is no longer a Christian country, and we cannot expect that Christian moral standards will be accepted or followed by the majority."

Church Is Wealthy.

The report shows that the church corporation owns, besides its church properties, real estate valued at $13,931,710, and bonds and mortgages amount to $635,804.

Dr. Stetson who, like the Rev. William T. Manning, Bishop of the Diocese, is a foe of divorce, caused a sensation last year when he attacked modern marriages," as "pagan" in their impertinence and lack of sacred significance, and vulgar in their ostentation.

Honolulu Active.

True to past performance the Diocese of Honolulu completed its full budget quota for the year 1928 by July 1.

THE WELLESLEY CONFERENCE: An Appreciation.

The Conference is over and one leaves the precincts of this great college, its beautiful trees, its shady and enticing walks, its placid lake, its spacious, comfortable and hospitable buildings, with great regret, but at the same time with a deep sense of gratitude.

Just to be together amid such homelike surroundings, four hundred of the same family from no less than forty-two dioceses and missionary districts, was a privilege and a joy of itself alone. Just over the entrance to Tower Court and under the windows assigned to my wife and self is inscribed: "The atmosphere breathes rest and the many chambers seem full of comfort." This was certainly true of the whole Conference.

The Committee on Arrangements had prepared a full and varied program of lectures, studies, meetings, entertainment, meals and services. Each department was splendidly managed, which means that the Committee had chosen their corps of helpers well and wisely.

The meals were good, very good. The lectures were immensely instructive, as well as interesting, for the faculty was composed of eminent men and women, severally experts in their various fields of work. Entertainment was varied and plentiful, adapted to both old and young; there was music and singing, tennis and baseball, swimming and canoeing, trips to historic points and picnics. The services were uplifting and inspiring; they were well attended too; a large part of the conference began each day with the Holy Communion; the sun-set service on a green slope overlooking Lake Waban, was a special and delightful feature; Bishop Wing made it so. The Committee and the Faculty each attended with unwonted zeal and uncommon talent to their many duties, and, in addition, found time to make every one feel very much at home; though so near Boston, there was no ice to break at any time; even the sweet delegate from Oklahoma confessed that she had lost her heart there because of the overwhelming hospitality.

Bishop Booth proved to be such a charming and genial host and such an admirable director; Miss Bumstead, here, there and everywhere, gave of herself to the success of the Conference; Miss Ward worked hard behind the scenes and when she came out seemed to know how to enlist the services of others; she summed up the results of the conference in an inspired and inspiring paper; Bishop Wing, as chaplain, constantly raised our thoughts heavenward. There were some forty members enrolled in the school of music. The musical program, whether of services or in the pageant, "The Quest of the Flame", or in the lectures, was kept constantly at a very high level.

We had gone to Wellesley to rest and to learn; we rested, learned and received at every turn each day new inspiration for the great tasks that lie ahead of us.

Wm. M. M. Thomas.

Madison Conference.

The seventh annual summer school for rural leadership, conducted in Madison by the University of Wisconsin especially for rural ministers and for women workers in rural communities, took place from June 25 to July 6, and enrolled between seventy and eighty men and women, of whom about thirty-five clergy and twenty-three women were of the Episcopal Church. Clergy and women workers had their special group discussions and joint sessions.

This and the five other summer schools for rural clergy are among the most important of the Church's fifty or more summer gatherings, because they are devoted to a serious study of perhaps the most fundamental factor in modern social progress, i. e., rural life and the whole rural situation.

Every section of the country was represented at Madison, some twenty-eight or thirty dioceses in all. The Rev. Messrs. Sessions, Bush and Whittle, went from Mississippi. The Rev. Paul E. Engle, of Bay City, Texas, now President of the Rural Fellowship, and Mrs. Engle; the Rev. J. C. McA. Shrewsbury, of Upper Marlboro, Md., Mrs. William Marsh, of Memphis; Miss Mildred Edmunds, of Dabney House, Java, Va., and Miss Margaret Viall, of the Diocese of Lexington, were present from the South. Eastern Oregon and Los Angeles in the West, Connecticut and three New York dioceses in the East, and most of the Northern dioceses between Pittsburgh and Idaho were represented.

The courses offered by the University included sociology of country life, by Prof. R. J. Colbert, a Churchman and a good friend of rural work; the Church in the country, by Dr. M. A. Dawber, of the Methodist Board of Home Missions; lectures on agricultural economics, rural health, social work and case work in rural communities, mental hygiene, play production, home economics for farm women, public speaking, demonstrations of community recreation and music.

Some of the subjects discussed in the Church groups were the spiritual life of the rural clergy, parish programs, how the city parishes can help ther ural communities, small Church School, a discussion led by Miss Nellie Smith, of the Diocese of Springfield, and Miss Charlotte Brown, of Eastern Oregon; adult education, led by Miss Eleanor Sprague, of Nebraska; Church statistics, showing the need of a careful survey and plan for the Church's rural work as a whole, Dr. H. P. Selinger, of Western Nebraska; religious work in district schools, the Rev. George B. Gilbert, Connecticut. Three women's organizations in their relation to rural life were presented: Church Mission of Help, by Mrs. Wilma Vanderwall, of Western New York; Daughters of the King, by Mrs. E. F. Kenyon, of Chicago, and Girls' Friendly, by Miss Edmunds, of Southern Virginia. A wonderful undertaking in visitation evangelism was described by the Rev. L. S. Charters, of Norwich, N. Y. Captain Jarvis, of the Church Army, told of that great movement, and Captain Wiese, one of the first five Americans commissioned, was present.

Other visitors or special speakers included Bishop Rogers, of Ohio; Bishop Roberts, of South Dakota; President Glenn Frank, of the University of Wisconsin, who gave a cordial welcome at the opening meeting; Professor J. H. Kolb, of the College of Agriculture, in charge of the rural school; the Rev. E. V. O'Hara, a national leader of rural work in the Roman Catholic Church.

The Rev. H. W. Foreman managed the Church group, with Miss Edna B.

Beardsley in charge of the women's house. Mr. Foreman is head of the Rural Division of the Social Service Department, which sponsors all six of the conferences on rural work.

Each group had a daily celebration of the Holy Communion. On Sunday the service was held in St. Andrew's Church, and at the later service, in the same beautiful new church, Bishop Roberts preached on the joy and privilege, notwithstanding the hardship, of the rural clergyman's life.

The Rural Fellowship, an organization formed a few years ago by the rural clergy to promote interest in and understanding of the Church's rural work, held its annual meeting. Bishop Roberts was elected honorary president; the Rev. Paul E. Engle, president; the Rev. David Clark and Miss Edna Beardsley, vice-presidents; the Rev. Val H. Sessions, Bolton, Miss., secretary and treasurer. The findings, summarizing the discussions of the men's and women's groups, are to tbe printed in the Fellowship's paper, The Rural Messenger, obtainable from Mr. Sessions. . .

New members are much desire in the Fellowship, to help in strengthening rural Church work. Membership dues of one dollar a year include a subscription to the paper.

Rural problems are to be found in greater or less degree in every diocese and district. One of the greatest hindrances to solving these problems is the lack of understanding on the part of Church people, who do not realize the tremendous significance of rural life, both in the nation and in the Church, and who do not know of the wonderful things that are going on and the splendid work done by some of our rural clergy. More serious and enthusiastic study of the subject is greatly to be desired, and theser ural schools are invaluable in the aid they give. There is one more this summer, at Washington College, Chestertown, Md., September 3 to 14, and for next summer it is not too early even now to make some plan toward attending Madison or one of the others.

Mississippi Camp and Conference Huge Success.

The Annual Mississippi Camp and Conference was held at the Gulf Port Military Academy, Gulf Port, Miss., from June 8 to 23. Nearly seventy young people assembled for a week's intensive training in methods for work in the Young People's Service League. Miss Evelyn Spickard, of Houston, Texas, led the class in Methods for Young People's Service League, and Miss Nettie Barnwell, of Memphis, led a class in Handwork.

Miss Rebecca Miller was the chief counsellor, and the Rev. Gordon M. Reese was the Director and Chaplain.

Already fifteen boys and girls have registered for next year's camp, which indicates the interest created in the young people's work in the Dioceses of Mississippi.

Another feature of Camp Ratton was the announcement that Miss Rebecca Miller, recently principal of the Junior High Department of All Saints' College, would become, September 1, Diocesan Executive Secretary for Religious Education, and Young People's Work.

The conference leaders this year proved to be most satisfactory in leading their courses, for they were able to have the highest number of N. A. T. A. examinations ever held at Mississippi Conference.

The two outstanding features of the conference this year were the remarkable lectures on Religion and Modern Thought, by Dr. Edward MacCready, Chaplain of the Episcopal Church at Oxford, Miss., and Student Pastor at the University of Mississippi, and the lectures of the Rev. F. D. Deis, of the Field Department. Mr. Deis aroused great interest in the program of the Church, and already Bishop Green has made a request to the Field Department that Father Deis come to the Diocese of Mississippi and spend a month visiting the parishes and missions.

The services at the conferences were under the personal direction of Dr. Joseph Kuehnle, rector of Trinitq Church, Natchez.

Plans are already under way for a still greater conference for the summer of 1929.

Vacation Bible School.

Episcopal Churches of Charleston, S. C., have been conducting at the Porter Military Academy a Vacation Bible School, and recently gave a lawn party for the children attending. The school has on its rolls more than three hundred pupils, the largest number in its history. The party attracted a large number of friends and members of families of pupils and prizes were given for games and contests. The occasion was made especially pleasant by vocal music by the classes, instructed and led by Miss Mary Milligan. Prize winners were Evelyn Meacher, Gilbert Gilchrist, Jack Sims, Louise Schwartz, of the kindergarten; Raymond Wilberford, first grade; Coralie Behrens and Sammie Butler, second; Catherine Clinton, Grace Palmer, Denis McKelven, Gibson McConaughey, third; Betty Cave, George Brandt, fourth and fifth; Elise Bense and Moultrie McKelvey, sixth and seventh. A group picture of the school, with specimens of the wood work of the manual department, was taken and copies of it may be obtained of Miss Emily Meacher, 3 Park Avenue, Charleston. Miss Meacher is principal; the Rev. G. F. Cameron is director, and Mrs. Charles J. Shuler has charge of the manual training department. Miss Olive Veronee is kindergarten teacher.

List Headed by Mrs. Coolidge.

The list of patronesses for the benefit performance for the Episcopal Home for the Aged at the National Theatre, Washington, last week, was headed by Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, the name of Mrs. Dawes, wife of the Vice-President, being next on the list. Both these ladies were absent from the city, on vacations with their husbands, but the benefit was successful, financially and otherwise. The benefit is an annual affair. The play was "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch".

Bishop an Indian Chief.

Among the bishops expected at the forty-ninth triennial conference of the Church at Washington in October is the Rt. Rev. Arthur W. Moulton, Missionary Bishop of Utah. He was formally inaugurated a chief of the Ute tribe of Indians at a Church convocation in the Indian reservation of Utah several years ago. He is a native of Massachusetts and was rector of Grace Church, Lawrence, from 1902 until he went to France with the Harvard unit in 1918. He was elevated to the bishopric in 1920.

Episcopalians in the World War.

The World War records of 105,102 Episcopalians are enshrined on the heights of Mount St. Alban's, at the Cathedral at Washington, where a service flag stands at the tombs of President Wilson and Admiral Dewey. The records are contained in seven cabinets and the flag carries a gold star for each 1,000 men of the Church who fought. General John J. Pershing, commander of the American forces in France, is directing the nation-wide campaign for completion of the Cathedral.

Another Virginian Bishop.

Probably few attendants at the Triennial Convention will encounter more of their kin at Washington in October than Bishop John Poyntz Tyler, Missionary Bishop of North Dakota. He is grandnephew of President John Tyler and is a graduate of the Virginia Theological Seminary. His first charge was at Westover, Charles City County, Va.

Escorted Forty Nuns.

Among interested visitors at the new National Episcopal Cathedral, Washington, last week were forty Sisters of Charity from Roman Catholic schools of the country, attending the summer course at the Catholic University. They weer escorted by the Rev. Anson Phelps Stokes, Canon of the Cathedral.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.

Three neighboring Brooklyn churches have combined to hold their summer services together. The three are St. Luke's, the Messiah, and the Incarnation. On July 8, 15 and 22 there will be services for the three congregations at eight and at eleven at the Church of the Incarnation; on July 29, August 5 and August 12, at the Church of the Messiah; and on August 19, August 26 and September 2 at St. Luke's. It will be interesting to hear what the result is, in attendance; certainly many of our city churches have but small congregations in the summer.

Trinity Church, Arlington Avenue, Brooklyn (the Rev. Jacob Probst, D. D., rector), is repeating a schedule of summer services that was successfully tried last year. The early Eucharist is at 7:30, and Morning Prayer and sermon at nine. The latter service is over at ten. Dr. Probst says that last year's experiment proved beyond question that this schedule is preferred by a large proportion of the parishioners. Attendance at nine was much better than it used to be at eleven. Some few objected last year, but agreed to the wish of the majority; this year practocally all the members fell in line.

Many parishioners of Christ Church, Bay Ridge, being unable to be present at the wedding of their rector, the Rev. John Henry Fitzgerald, in New Haven, Conn., attended a celebration of Holy Communion that morning, Saturday, June 30, in their own parish church, the Rev. Dr. Peckham officiating. Thanksgiving was offered for the rector's recovery from sickness; prayers were offered for a happy married life for him and his bride; and praver also for their protection at sea. The following Monday, July 2, a large party of parishioners chartered a steamboat and accompanied the liner down the bay, when their rector and his bride sailed for Europe on their honeymoon.

The New York Times, in an editorial on July 2, commented upon the Daily Vacation Bible Schools which, to the number of two hundred and ten in the City of New York, were opening their sessions that day. The Times says: "Work and play and worship are informally associated in a program which teachers have been specially trained in preceding months to direct. . . . These schools are designed to receive the child in the weeks when parents are seeking something for the child to do that will be interesting and free of street dangers as well as wholesome. Many arts are availed of in these week-day schools. . . . Play . . becomes an agency of spiritual teaching. Handicraft is also made to serve the same end under a tuition that has the development of character as its first purpose, even if it be but a by-product. This is not a new agency for relieving parents of their responsibilities. It but seeks to help parents to do their whole duty by those for whose welfare they are first of all responsible."

Brooklyn, we learn, has more of these schools than any other Borough. One is glad to reflect that some of them are held in the parish houses of Episcopal Churches, and have been proved to be well worthwhile.

The Rev. Wm. E. Warren, of Eddystone, Pa., is acting as Chaplain of the Church Charity Foundation during the vacation of the Rev. Wm. H. Gibbons.

The Rev. Wells Mortimer Partridge, of Dorchester, Mass., a native of Brooklyn, is officiating at St. James' Church, Brooklyn, this month and August.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop

The Cathedral Guild of Ushers is an organization recently formed in connection with Washington Cathedral activities, with Mr. Edwin N. Lewis as chairman. Assistance in welcoming to services and guiding the thousands of pilgrims, who visit the Cathedral on Sundays will be the duties of the ushers, some of whom have served long and well in this way.

Members of the Guild will be thoroughly informed of the history of the Cathedral undertaking, the progress made up to date, and the forward looking plans.

Plans for the meeting in Washington in October of the Woman's Auxiliary in conjunction with the General Convention are well under way, with the several chairmen of committees actively at work. Headquarters for all business sessions will be at the Mayflower Hotel, with an exhibit of handicraft made in Mission Stations in China, Japan, Mexico, the Philippines, Porto Rico, Alaska, Indian reservations and the Southern Mountains, displayed on the mezzinine floor of the hotel. The Washington Club, the Chevy Chase Club and thirty homes in the city will be thrown open for teas, at which missionaries are to speak. All study classes, beginning October 12, will be held at the Young Woman's Christian Association, K St., at Seventeenth St.

Special services of importance will be the Preparatory Hour, October 9; United Thank Offering Service, October 10; Day of Intercession, October 18; Closing Service, October 23. Office Headquarters of the Triennial meeting have been opened at 927 Fifteenth St., N. W.

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., Coadjutor

Perhaps the outstanding feature of the summer religious life of the city is the large number of Daily Vacation Bible Schools. This is an indication of the increasing appreciation of the need of week-day religious education. This summer between fifty and seventy-five schools are being conducted throughout the City of Baltimore, with an average of one hundred and twenty-five students per school. When one considers that approximately 9,000 children are thus being reached, five mornings in the week, for a period of a month, the significance of the movement is apparent. The idea has been fostered and developed by the Council of Education of the Federation of Churches, which is holding three demonstration schools this year for instructors. The Episcopal Church leads the denominations in the total number of schools, having between eighteen and twenty, including those in Annapolis, Brunswick and Cumberland.

Another feature of the interdenominational religious life during the summer consists of services held in six parks of the city, on Sunday evenings, throughout July and August. These services are arranged by the Federation of Churches, different clergymen being in charge each Sunday. The Baltimore "Sun" estimated the total attendance at 2,000 on July 8, a very hot afternoon. These park services do much to foster community spirit and interdenominational understanding and goodwill.

Bishop Murray is spending his vacation, as usual, at Chester, Nova Scotia, where he is extremely fond of the fishing. Bishop-Coadjutor Helfenstein left the second week in July for Pigeon Cove, Mass. Most of the rectors of the down-town Episcopal Churches are also away on their vacations and the pulpits are being filled by assistants or by supply clergy. The three largest Presbyterian Churches in the down-town section combine their congregations and worship in turn in the respective churches.

The Family Welfare Association, of Baltimore, has just issued the first number of a Bulletin, which is to appear henceforth four times a year. Some interesting figures as to the growth of the work of the organization, are given in this little sheet. Since 1920 the number of families under the care of the Association has increased from 3,449 to 6,032, while the number to whom temporary relief has been given has jumped from 1,034 to 2,276. The great prevalence of unemployment has probably been responsible for the increase, for the problem of unemployment has increased seven hundred and seven per cent over 1920. The Association now has forty-three staff members doing case work and maintains ten district offices as well as the central office. The work of the Association is financed through a Community Fund, for which a great drive is made each year. It has been announced that the "Milk and Ice Fund" usually raised in summer by the Baltimore "Sun" will not be needed this year, since the Community Fund is able to meet the need.

The site of the contemplated Cathedral of the Diocese of Maryland, at Charles Street and University Parkway, in Baltimore, has been extremely valuable, because of the great development of this beautiful residential section. And now apartment houses are beginning to invade the region. This month a proposition was made for the erection of a huge fourteen-story apartment house almost opposite the Cathedral site. Ardent opposition on the part of the Cathedral Trustees, the Protestant Churches in the neighborhood, and the near-by residents, prevented the execution of the project. It is evident, however, that this is but the beginning of a development which is inevitable.

QUINCY.

Rt. Rev. Edward Fawcett, D. D., Bishop.

The Rev. R. Y. Barber has accepted the call to Grace Church, Gatesburg, Ill., and in connection with the work of the parish he will try to look after the Church students at Knox and Lombard Colleges. Miss Nellie Smith, Centralia, Ill., has been appointed Director of Religious Education for the Diocese of Quincy, and she will make her home at the rectory in Gatesburg, Ill.

ARKANSAS.

Rt. Rev. E. T. Demby, D. D., Suffragan.

Christ Church, Little Rock.

Another step in the progressive development of Christ Church Parish, Little Rock, Ark., the Rev. W. P. Witsell, D. D., rector, has just been taken. A short time ago the vestry and the parish house committee adopted a program calling for the erection and equipment of a new parish house at the cost of $62,500. A campaign was put on to raise the funds. At the present time cash and subscriptions in the hands of the committee amount to $62,851, with other prospects which will add materially to this sum. The architect has been selected by the vestry and a special building committee appointed to cooperate with him. Throughout the campaign the aroused spirit of the congregation was manifested in fine response, and furnishes another evidence of the growing life and increasing power of this historic old parish.

It has been announced from Fayetteville that the Rev. Samuel H. Rainey, of St. Mary's, Eldorado, has accepted a call to St. Paul's Church in that city. The work in Fayetteville is very important, because of the state university located there.

The Diocese of Arkansas hass et aside September 26, 27 and 28 for a Conference on Church Work. The special object will be to increase interest in the Church's Program and the Annual Canvass.

During the month of August the Rev. Randolph R. Claiborne, of Camden, will have charge of the services in St. James' Church, Richmond, Va., and his address will be 500 West Franklin Street.

ALABAMA.

Rt. Rev. W. G. McDowell, D. D., Bishop.

The Chapel of the Redeemer.

The Chapel of the Redeemer was opened November 20, 1927, by the Rev. James M. Stoney, rector of Grace Church, Anniston, Ala. It is not a chapel with a steeple and a bell—only an old rickety tenement house of three rooms, which we get rent free as long as we keep it in reasonable repair. We have a pretty little altar and lectern, with Bible, which Mr. Stoney secured from a deserted church in the country where no services were being held. Besides the above we have a small organ that the children take great joy in pumping for the organist, a few benches and two chairs. Our collections are usually pennies which the teachers give in order to teach them to make an offering—that all comes from God. Some to the children from their own purses of the children can read, and enjoy reading portions of the lesson in class. They all belong to the factory or industrial class. We recently had eleven baptized one day—Sunday, June 24, 1928. Six of these were little sisters—the youngest were twins of about three years of age. Some of our teachers are Y. P. S. L. boys and girls. Mrs. James M. Stoney and Mrs. M. C. Boswell are our organists; Mr. N. Hamner Cobbs (a great-grandson of Bishop Cobbs) is our lay reader; Mr. James Tate, a splendid young man who has recently come to Alabama from Baltimore, has charge of our boys' class; Miss Olive Reynolds, Miss Anna Harris, Miss Isabel Kimbrough, Miss Margaret Rothrock, Miss Olive Tabb are our teachers and "parish" visitors. The older girls assist Miss Olive Tabb in placing flowers on the altar and then distributing them after service amongst the children, and some of the children show marked talent in handwork , coloring creation stories, making butterflies, birds, etc. An appropriate verse or motto is used to impress on the children that God the Father and Creator of all gives us all things good and beautiful. The Business Women's Unit of Grace Church Auxiliary has been most helpful to both our mission mentioned above, and also Mr. Stoney's other mission—Chapel of the Resurrection. Through their efforts both missions had a wonderful Christmas celebration—a tree with gifts and carols at Resurrection and for Chapel of the Redeemer. The Grace Church bus came loaded with well-filled stockings—overflowing with toys, candies, fruits, etc.—at dusk Christmas Eve was driven to each child's home and their hearts made joyful. Our Business Women's Unit recently took over one hundred second-hand garments donated by Grace Church people to one of our evening meetings and mended them all, distributing them between the two Chapels.

Summer Conference.

The young people of the Diocese of Western Michigan, as well as those of more mature years, enjoyed a most delightful summer conference at Kalamazoo, June 26 to July 3. This was the second annual conference for the Diocese of Western Michigan and was in every particular a success. Classes and instructions were offered every morning from 9:00 until 12:00 and were enthusiastically attended. The conference had the happy satisfaction of passing the record of a year ago with an enrollment this year of 188.

The conference faculty was made up from several members of the diocese under the leadership of the Rev. Lewis B. Whittemore, of Grace Chrch, Grand Rapids as director and Miss Helen R. Stevens, of St. Mark's Pro-Cathedral, Grand Rapids, as the dean. The Rev. Angus Dun, of Cambridge, Mass., the Rev. G. P. Symons, of Glendale, Ohio, the Rev. Gordon M. Reese, of Vicksburg, Miss., and President Allan Hoben, of Kalamazoo College, also had a very large share in the teaching work of the conference. The Chaplain to the conference was the Rt. Rev. John H. McCormick, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese, who also had charge of the sunset services.

Apart from the daily routine of the conference special work was done in pageantry under the leadership of Mrs. Lucy E. Kurtzman, of Detroit, and a very lovely pageant entitled "Father, Forgive Them", was presented Monday night, July 2.

All the young peopl's work was under the jurisdiction of the Rev. Gordon Reese and was carried on with the usual enthusiasm.

The business management of the conference was under the direction of the Rev. James H. Bishop, rector of St. Luke's Church, Kalamazoo, and the publicity work was under the direction of the Rev. William G. Studwell, rector of St. Thomas Church, Battle Creek.

ORDINATIONS.

On Wednesday, June 27, Lyle S. Barnett was made Deacon in St. Paul's Church, Waco, Texas, by the Rt. Rev. Clinton S. Quin, D. D., Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of Texas.

The sermon was preached by the Rev. Charles W. Sheerin, rector of St. Paul's, and the candidate was presented by the Rev. F. P. Goddard, of Marlin. Other clefgy taking part in the service were the Rev. T. H. Edmund, of Taylor; the Rev. C. C. Keller, of Temple; the Rev. J. P. Love, of Cameron, and the Rev. L. H. Brown.

Mr. Barnett. who was a graduate of the University of the South and of Virginia Theological Seminary, is to be minister-in-charge of the churches in Yampases and Belton, in the Diocese of Texas, with residence at Lampases.

DEATHS.

After a lingering illness, the Very Rev. Thomas H. Johnston, D. D., Litt. D., Dean of St. Philip's Cathedral, Atlanta, Ga., died on July 20.

Dean Johnston was one of the most outstanding of the clergy of the Diocese of Atlanta and had been honored by many prominent offices. He was noted as a speaker of more than ordinary ability and was called upon for many services outside of his own work. Both the Cathedral Parish and the diocese have suffered a great loss in his death.

Born in Ireland fifty-three years ago, Dr. Johnston came to the States as a young man and had spent his ministry in this country. His theological training was received at the General Theological Seminary, New York. His early ministry was spent in Idaho and Wyoming as a missionary. Later he served in the Dioceses of Bethlehem and South Florida, being an Archdeacon in the latter. Later he was at All Saints, Mobile, Ala. In 1913 he came to the Cathedral, where his unusual powers have been given to the full extent in the development of the work. With the exception of the time spent overseas as Chaplain in the World War, he has been continuously at the Cathedral as Dean. It was during his service as Chaplain that he contracted the disease which has finally conquered his strong physical constitution and caused his death.

Dean Johnston was honored with the degree of Doctor of Divinity by the University of the South at Sewanee, and with the Litt. D., by the University of Alabama.

Mrs. Johnston and two sons survive.

The funeral services were held on Sunday, July 22, at four o'clock at St. Philip's Cathedral.

The passing of Mother Eva Mary, of the Community of the Transfiguration, adds another bright star to the galaxy of the Church Expectant. She died as she had lived—faithful, brave, trusting, serene, to the last.

Eva Lee Matthews came of a family that has given more than one illustrious member to the Church. It was her vision and faith that made possible the Religious community to which she gave her life, and which has spread from its small beginnings at Cleveland to Hawaii and China, and has had the honor of being the first American sisterhood to enter the mission field, and the first Anglican sisterhood to receive Chinese women into the Religious life. Loved and honored by all with whom she came in contact, she will be sadly missed by all who knew her. But the sadness of her relatives and friends will be tempered by the glorious memory of her accomplishments and the certain knowledge of her continued life and prayers for them and for the work to which she gave her life.

May she rest in peace—and may the example of her saintly life lead other girls and young women of the Church to follow the trail blazed by her, forsaking all to follow the Master.—The Living Church.

OUR WARNINF SELVES.

Eugenie Du Maurier Meredith.

There's a me that longs to do something
That is real and all my own;
There's a me that is lazy, and content
To always take, and never give;
There's a me that is selfish, and ever longs
To live and have a good time;
There's a me that feels very old,
And wise, and clear-sighted;
There's a me, ignorant, and green
As grass, and feels very young;
There's a me that is ever so brave,
And not afraid of anything;
There's a me that lack back bone,
And is easily influenced;
There's a me that fears idle criticism
And runs true to established form;
There's a me that yearns to be free and different;
There's a me that is honest with self and the world;
There's a me that is honest with self and the world;
There's a me that is pulling at its leash,
And wants to break loose from being a conformist;
There's a me that loves all things good and beautiful,
But because of the lack of them, hides its face in shame;
There's a me that is courageous enough
To insist that truth is truth, and wrong always IS WRONG.

A Good Man's Influence.

An admirer of the great preacher, F. W. Robertson, was searching for reminiscences. He went into a shop kept by a poor, struggling little man and asked:

"Do you remember anything about Robertson, of Brighton?"

"Come here, sir," said the shopkeeper, leading the way to a back room and pointing to a portrait hanging on the wall. "If ever I am tempted to do mean things in this business, I come into this back room and look at the picture of Robertson on the wall and I cannot do a mean thing—I cannot do it."—Selected.

FOR THOSE WHO FLY.

Alice B. Joynes.

(The hymn following was sent in response to our request for original hymns with suggested familiar settings.—Editor Family Department.)

Tune—"Eternal Father Strong to Save."

Great Father, hear our earnest prayer
For those who travel through the air.
Guide them wheresoe'er they go,
And Thy blest presence let them know.
Hear, oh, hear our earnest prayer
For all who travel through the air!

As swiftly through the air thy fly,
Guard them with Thy watchful eye.
However far their flight may be,
Draw them ever near Thee.
Hear, oh! hear our earnest prayer
For all who travel through the air.

When storms are nigh and clouds are dark
Guide Thou the band that steers their bark.
Far above the land and sea,
By day and night their Pilot be.
Hear, oh! hear our earnest prayer
For all who travel through the air.

To their brave efforts lend Thine aid
And whisper low, "Be not afraid".
O'er mountain, valley, sea and plain,
Bring them safely home again.
Hear, oh! hear our earnest prayer
For all who travel through the air.

Thoughts on Happiness.

Louis Deschamps.

Happiness is much more than an academic conception about which to theorize. It is ultimately the goal or standard of the great human achievements of civilization. "Life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness" constitute the elements of our political rights. The Beatitudes promise happiness from certain spiritual conditions. Experience teaches that to be good is to be happy, and it must follow that to be happy is to be good. Discontent and unhappiness breed envy and many temptations to commit sins out of sheer misery, so happiness is a great factor in our moral destiny. To many of us happiness is an indefinite, theoretical state of mind in the same class with poetry, dreams, and self-delusion. Others are deceived by the lure of thrills and excitement, as if happiness were an exploitation of the senses. Some there are who have ceased to think of happiness at all, because life's disappointments and burdens have deadened the appreciation of ideals, including the ideal of happiness. Distrust of ideals is the beginning of spiritual paralysis. Religion, the greatest aid to happiness, has been perverted by loose thinking toward the conception of life as a "vale of tears", and of morals as hardships.

There is no fixed definition of happiness. It is by no means to be confused with hilarity, extreme indulgence of appetites, or mere blissful indifference. It is an ideal, even a virtue. Happiness is the harmony of one's life with universal laws, both natural and spiritual, that each one must learn for himself, and adjust to the circumstances of his condition. To bring one's self into harmony with the invisible Order of Creation involves both active and passive experience—active in will and effort, passive in reverent, mystic faith in God. Without the former we are purely visionary, without the latter we are grossly selfish. It is the will to live according to a deep personal conviction of all that Christianity teaches as inspiration to action.

Being an ideal, happiness is difficult to attain. Ideals are by nature elusive—always beyond the grasp, yet within the vision. More people lose faith in the ideal of happiness from too exacting a standard than from any other cause. Expecting perfection, they find it always beyond. Seeking a final, enduring state of happiness, they find themselves caught in the current of life that permits no idleness. Dazed by the sheer brilliance of their anticipations, they sometimes resemble moths circling a bright light. An ideal demands that we enjoy the journey more than the arrival, because the destination is infinite. Happiness, like gloves, must be sought to fit individual natures. One man's happiness is another's boredom. The harmony is the same for all, but just as many chords must be used for a song, so many different personalities make human life significant. Religion sets the harmony in terms of God's love and of moral beauty. Individual lives swell the refrain from a thousand varying talents. How many of us are grimly strumming away on our daily task, quite unconscious of the universal concert of which we are a part! Musicians follow the leader's baton, but we too often attempt to "live our own lives" independently of God's Will as revealed by Jesus Christ. The very essence of happiness is religion, for it teaches that we are instruments of divine power, uplifting our minds from selfishness to universal conceptions.

Yet the undertow of things is great, and we are often tired. Our brightest ideals are dimmed by mortal blindness. At times we cannot help feeling that wonderful visions and inspiring thoughts have forsaken us. Then happiness must take the form of an appreciation of little things. There are many simple pleasures that we experience without enjoying, unless sickness or misfortune deprive us of them. Again, when our own spirits lag, others are at their best. It is good to learn to echo another's happiness, rather than to envy it. There is an art in reflected joys. Happiness is contagious. And no joy is purer nor more lasting than comes to one who has learned to nourish a great charity toward all mankind, a brotherhood of joys as well as sorrows. For, after all, happiness is from within and survives the vicissitudes of life by communion with the spiritual power of Him who said "Let not your hearts be troubled".

"From Whom Do We Take Our Orders?"

Some people are talking as though the foreign missionary enterprise were on its last legs. Some say that the situation in China shows that Christianity is not wanted by China and not adapted to China. Some say that the day of Christian faith anywhere is over. Of those who say this some are glad because they do not believe in Christianity themselves or do not like its moral restraints, and some are regretful because they do believe that Christianity is true and good, but despair of ever having it accepted by the world. Still others say that Christianity is all right for the western nations and that it is warranted in putting forth its claims here for such acceptance as it may secure, but that it is not warranted in intruding upon other nations which have their own cultures. One might ask how in that case Christianity ever got out of Palestine or how it comes that Mohammedanism has strayed so far from Arabia and Buddhism from India.

For us Christians what does all this talk matter? In the words of the old Keith motto on the walls of Marshall College at Aberdeen, "They say, what do they say? Let them say." From whom do we take our orders? Have we Christians not a Lord and Master of our own? If there are those who never believed in Him and His gospel or whose belief was only on the surface and whose ideas of foreign missions were only philanthropic or political or cultural their timid hesitation or their bold disavowals of all hope or use for foreign missions are intelligible enough. Their forbears a hundred years ago felt the same way. But there were then men and women, not very many but very determined, who believed about Christ just what the early Church believed and declared in the New Testament, and these men and women set out to obey Christ and to carry His Gospel to the parts of the world where it was not known.

Well, there are still vast parts of the world where it is not known. If some of these are in the United States in our colleges or even in our churches, in city or country, in business or politics, in our laws or our customs or our lives, then these are places where Christ and His gospel are to be made known, whether people will accept or no. And precisely so in Japan and China and Africa and Latin America and everywhere else, the gospel is to go and the men and women who believe in it will carry it there. Many an honest man who is not a Christian sees this duty and the need of it. "I am not a Christian," said a professor in the Imperial University of Tokyo to us, last fall, "but what Japan wants is more Christianity."

Does China today teach any other lesson? It may be well that, under malign influences which war against her best life and deepest interest, forces in China have assailed the very presence and continuance of Christianity in the nation. But these forces certainly do not represent the real mind or the true heart of China. And are we Christians to be controlled by them? If so, we need a return of the spirit of that little company at the beginning: "Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you rather than unto God, judge ye. We cannot but speak the things that we have seen and heard." If we have not seen or heard anything we may feel more doubtful. But Christians who have seen their Saviour and who have heard His Word will obey Him in the face of whatever opposition or indifference they may meet and assuredly will meet from those who have no gospel or who do not believe with us in the One Name given under heaven whereby men may be saved.—Dr. R. E. Spear.

EVEN TO THE FIFTH.

"Are not two sparrows for a farthing sold,
Five for two farthings?" spake the Lord of old.
"And yet not one upon the ground shall fall Without your Heavenly Father knowing all!"
His loving, watching Eye on each hath been—
E'en to the fifth, the little bird "thrown in".
He marked it as a fledgling in the nest,
Warm 'neath the shelter of its mother's breast.
He marked the yellow beak, with gapings blind—
And helped the father-bird, its food to find.
He marked its earliest flight, on timorous wings—
He, who o'er-rules Earth's mightest happenings!
His Care surrounds the humblest thing alive—
The last small sparrow, making up the five!

Part II.

After that Mrs. Pauncefort lodged no further complaint against the pushcart. She still looked from draped window at times and she could but notice how kind the pushcart man was to the animals. And so in time she discovered that on days too bad for him to bring out his cart he still came to feed his pensioners. She even acquired the habit of raising her window softly to hear him talk to them, "Come on, my leetle ones, come on and eat your deeners"!

One day as she drove up she perceived that a small group was collected before her very door. In the center stood Vaselleos, showing out well against the white house, while a group of his admirers were collected around a boy who was taking his photograph. The little gathering jumping up and down on excited feet quite barred the entrance to the arched driveway by which her car should be perfectly free to enter. "Upon me word!" ejaculated the low voice of Henderson, the elegant chauffeur. He leaned forward haughtily to forbid the intrusion.

"Wait a minute, Henderson," Mrs. Pauncefort found herself saying. This man is so kind-hearted using his pennies to save a little child in a far away land—let him have his bit of pleasure.

It was true that Vaselleos was sponsoring a boy at the Corinth Orphanage. It had happened that he had picked up, in the Circle, one of the Near East slips telling of the suffering among the poor little ones deprived of their parents by war and cruelty. His eye had caught the word "Corinth" for Vaselleos had been born and brought up outside that city. He became vividly interested when he found that his native Greece had offered asylum to the hundreds of sufferers, Armenians as well as Greeks, driven from their vine-clad hill-sides in Asia Minor. If his own country after many years of war could help, surely he, Vaselleos, ought to help too. So he paid his five dollars a month that meant safety and training, health—perhaps eye-sight even—for a homeless child. Sometimes it had been a close thing; one does not make a fortune by a pushcart. Also Vaselleos had been saving towards the future of his little ward when he should finish at the school.

It was largely because of this link with his old home that Vaselleos was never sad. There were few Greeks in Washington. His broken English had prevented his making many friends, as had his constant attendance on his cart. He was the most sociable creature imaginable and sometimes he wished for human companionship, much as he enjoyed the company given him by his small denizens of the Circle. But how can one be sad when back in the inner consciousness one knows that a warm human life is cherished by a few dollars that mean so little here and so much over there? What knowledge could bring a deeper joy!

Twice a year he had received a report of the boy's progress. They all agreed that he was a good boy, a fine boy, who would do his sponsor and the school credit. Vaselleos had all letters tied in a little package in his room. It was his most prized possession. His haart that glowed for furred and feathered and for the petted children who played in the Circle throbbed yet more fervently for orphans, many of whom had lost their entire family amid scenes of horror that would linger in their memories as long as life should last. He read with devout thankfulness of the strides made at the Orphanages, in combatting the scourge, Trachoma, by which these little neglected ones are so often afflicted. Thank God, the little Georgeos Coreche, his ward, had escaped this terror. His eyes in his pictures were very bright and brave.

Yes, Vaselleos was happy. But all of a sudden everything seemed to fall to pieces about him.

It seemed, in some way, to begin with the boarding up of the big white house across the street. The lady even waved a friendly good-bye to him as she left for a trip to Europe for several months. Vaselleos learned that from the paper. If he had known in time he might have asked her to go in to see Georgeos while over there. How nice that would have been! Vaselleos seated hebhind his hissing gasoline torch, really missed her. But, important personage that she was, her departure did not interest the little children trundling their kiddy-cars or racing on roller-skates about the park walks. Nor did it excite the gray squirrells playing tag under the magnolias, nor the iridescent pigeons cooing in the shadow of the hedge—to all of these it was as unimportant as it was to the beauteous ladies who smiled so fixedly from the splashing fountain.

Next came Vaselleos' accident.

One day he slipped on one of his banana peels which a careless customer had thrown down—slipped and broke his leg. And it happened while April was casting her witchery over the land and the Circle was gay with bridal wreath and yellow daffodils. When a thinner and paler Vaselleos returned, the little park was tender with new green and June roses were scenting the air.

Over a month lost, with big hospital expenses, had devastated the saving that he had been hoarding for the future of his ward. This morning he had not had even sufficient money to stock his cart properly, but he was counting on making enough through the day to do better tomorrow. Nevertheless, he came back smiling behind his black moustache, for was he not going again to his little friends, human and of the animal kingdom? How he had missed them, there in his hospital bed. How he had hoped that some one else was feeding the squirrels and the birds and the pigeons. He had an extra soft spot in his heart for the pigeons for they reminded him of the doves of Corinth.

It was a shock to Vaselleos to find that a great red pushcart was occupying his usual station across from the still boarded white mansion. It was a very elaborate pushcart, handsomely equipped, with nickel trimmings, piled high with enticing things, and the man who stood beside it was dressed in a red suit and red cap so that he made a conspicuous point on landscape. As Vaselleos, limping slightly, came along, pushing the white cart that was not so white as it used to be, he saw one of his squirrels go creeping forward towards the red cart, and then perch itself nearby, its plumed tail curled high over its head. He saw the hawk-faced man utter an angry exclamation and shy a small stone at the poor little visitors. This was more than Vaselleos could stand.

"Why?" he gasped, advancing with outstretched gesturing hands, "why do you try to hurt heem? Tell me why?"

The red terror threw back his head and uttered a guffaw. "So you are that nut they told me about that pampered all the animiles about here," he remarked in plain American. "They've nearly pestered me to death ever since I came, but I'll learn 'em to keep their distance. I got something else to do than to fool with birds and beasts. And, say, dago, there ain't room for you and me. You better get out while the goin's good, see? There sure ain't trade for two here."

Poor Vaselleos said nothing. He turned aside and from his slim stock selected popcorn, carrying which he entered the opening in the hedge. Little feet came running towards him, little warm hands stole into his and little voices asked, "Why did you stay away from us so long?"

And the pampered animiles, as the man called them! There was a swish of wings and a cooing of bird voices, and there were pigeons catching his high-thrown bounty even in mid-air. The squirrels formed a ring about him as though to prevent him from leaving them again. Vaselleos laughed merrily. "Come, my leetle ones. Come to your deener. I haf returned to you once more."

(To be continued.)

SELF-ANALYSIS.

Hep me to know myself in thought apart,
Not in the clamor of discordant praise,
And give me courage in my way ward heart
An honest man to gaze.

Help me to be myself—no arrant knave,
Nor as the weakling of my craven hours
In waste and shame, but as the ardent slave,
Of life's ecelestial powers.

To give myself like Christ upon the cross,
And wear His wounds like jewels for their stain,
For never life may know so sweet a loss
Or more triumphant gain.

Some people's goodness is their constant trouble: they must ever watch it and work at it to keep it going. Other people have passed this preparatory stage of training and have attained unto that habit and perfection of goodness in which all effort is forgotten and lost in the joy of doing good. The sun does not know that it shines, Moses wist not that his face shone, and we may verily attain unto this unconscious perfection and joy.

MY FRIEND.

My dog and I are the best of friends,
We always go together;
Over the hill where the woodland ends,
Scrambling through bush and heather;
Down by the mill where the river bends.
Though any kind of weather.

Down through the woods through the purple haze;
Down where the leaves are falling;
Through all the gold of the autumn days
Filled with the west wind's calling;
Skipping along by the streamlet's maze,
Where the waterfall comes brawling.

Crossing the fields in the twilight's glow,
Where soft the wind comes creeping;
Where e'er I lead he's sure to go,
From morn till the stars come peeping;
So that is the reason I love him so—
He's faithful, awake or sleeping.

Where Love Is There God Is Also.

(Revised from Tolstoi.)

"Why are you so sad and gloomy, my friend," asked a neighbor of Martin Avdyreich, the town shoe-maker.

"Ah," said Martin, "I am very lonely as I sit working here by my wretched little basement window. I watch the passers-by and I know most of the boots that pass for I have worked on them, but that is not much comfort, for I miss my wife who is dead. She left me a little boy and I love him more than all the world, but he too died and left me alone. I have no one left to work for or to live for."

"Yes, you have, Martin," said his good friend, "God wants you to live and work for Him."

After his friend had gone, Martin sat down to think this over. He picked up his Bible and began to read and then he understood better how he could work for God, and he became happier.

One evening he was reading his Bible when he heard a soft, sweet voice, quite close at hand, "Martin, Martin!" it called.

"Who is there?" asked Martin. But look as he would he could see no one. Then as he started to doze off he heard again, "Martin! Martin! look into the street tomorrow. I am coming."

The next morning he kept a closer watch on the passers-by.

First a ragged old soldier came by.

"I'm a foolish old man," said Martin to himself, as he cleaned his glasses. "For a minute I thought that might be Christ Himself coming to see me, but I see now that it is only the old soldier cleaning away the snow. He certainly looks tired though. I'll call him in to rest. He might like a cup of tea, too."

The old soldier did want a cup of tea, and he thanked Martin heartily as he finished the cup and turned it down

"I think you need another cup of tea," said Martin, and he poured another, but all the time he was looking around to the window every minute or so.

"Are you expecting some one?" asked the soldier.

"Yes, and no," replied Martin. "Have you ever heard the story of how Christ came down to earth?"

"Yes, I have heard," said the soldier as he drank his tea.

"I was reading my Bible last night, and I heard a voice say, "Watch for me tomorrow. Do you think He will come?"

The soldier said nothing, but only shook his head and finished his cup of tea.

After the soldier was gone Martin went on with his work, stitching, stitching, stitching, but he never forgot to watch the little window, and many people passed by whom he knew. During the afternoon he noticed a woman outside, a stranger. She carried a baby in her arms and shivered in the freezing cold, for she had no coat. The baby seemed to be crying and the mother was trying to shield it from the cold and wind.

"I must call them inside where it is warm," though Martin. "They might die in this bitter cold."

Going to the door he called, "Come inside out of the wind. And will you not sit by the fire and eat some warm food?" he asked as he led her in and took the child from her arms. As she ate hungrily, Martin played with the baby. "Where is your coat?" he asked.

"I sold it yesterday to get a few coins for food. My husband is a soldier and away at the war, so I have little to live on."

Martin went to a tiny cupboard and came back with his own coat. "Take this," he said, "I very seldom go out and I will not need it."

Tears of happiness came into the woman's eyes as she thanked him, put on the coat, and wrapped the baby warm in it. Martin watched her go down the street, then he started in again to stitch, stitch.

By and by he saw an old woman come by with a basket of apples, which she was selling. As she put the basket down to rest, a small boy grabbed an apple and would have run away but that the old woman held him fast. The boy hurriedly dropped the apple and cried, "Let me go, I haven't your old apple". Martin hurried out and took hold of the boy.

"Forgive the boy, please," said he to the old women. "I am sure he is sorry. Let him go this time, if you please." Then to the boy he said reproachfully, "I saw you take the apple. Don't do such a thing again. But here is an apple for you. I will pay for it."

The boy took the apple and started off, but came back and said, "Let me carry the basket, it is too heavy for you."

As Martin went back into his little basement room he noticed that it was getting dark. So he put his work away, lighted his lamp, drank a cup of tea, and sat down to read his Bible. He wanted to find the place where he had left off the night before, but it opened to another page. As he started to read he remembered his dream of last night, and at the same time he seemed to hear several people moving about in the corner. Martin turned around and saw that some one was really there, but he could not see whom.

Then a voice whispered in his ear. "Martin! Martin! do you not know me?"

"Who are you?" cried Martin.

"'Tis I," cried the voice, "Lo, 'tis I." and out of the corner came the ragged old soldier. He smiled at Martin and disappeared.

"'Tis I," cried the voice, "lo, 'tis I," said the voice, and the woman and the child came from the corner; they both smiled happily at him and disappeared also.

"Lo, 'tis I," repeated the voice, and the apple woman came and the boy with the apple in his hand. Soon they, too, were gone, and all was still.

Martin's eyes fell upon the page in his Bible, where were these words, "And I was hungered and thirsty and ye gave me drink. I was a stranger and ye took me in." And at the bottom of the page he read," Inasmuch as ye did it to the least of these, my brethren, ye did it unto me!"—E. Dorothy Davis, in Canadian Churchman.

The Road to the Castle.

No one in the town had ever really seen the castle. They had been told about it by their grandfathers and grandmothers in whispers over the home hearth fires.

"It lies very near this town, within easy walking distance," they said. "You could reach it by going straight to the east if you could find the road. No one lives in the castle, and its gates are wide open, and whoever succeeds in finding it may be the master of the castle."

They also told tales of its wonders. "The gardens bloom with flowers that never fade," they said, "and there are chests full of gold and silver and red rubies and blue sapphires, enough to make all the poor people in this town comfortable always with food and shelter and clothing."

"Oh, if only we might find the road that leads to the castle," said they.

Sometimes they thought that they saw the castle. In the very early morning when the sun rose and sent long bright shafts of light up through the white clouds, the townspeople would peer out of their upper windows and say, "See, there are the gold towers of the castle, standing about its white marble walls."

And when it was evening and the sun set in bright colors, orange and violet and rose and gold, the townspeople would again watch the sky and whisper to one another, "We see the gardens of the castle, full of fruit trees and violets and red and yellow roses.

Many people tried every year to find the road that led to the castle. There was a soldier who started out boldly one morning, going toward the east and cutting down with his sword all the little animals of the woods who ran across his path. He came running back in a short time, with his sword broken and his eyes full of terror. He said that he had encountered wild beasts and had found no road to the castle.

There was the rich man who started out on the same quest because he wished more riches than he already had. He had gone only a mile when a great tree fell and completely blocked his path. He came back without finding the road to the castle.

And there were other people who searched for the road; people of importance who wanted to be decorated with bades for finding the castle, people who wished to be called "Master" instead of just "Mr." They always came back with the news that they had been stopped by a prickly hedge or a roaring dragon or something else as troublesome.

Hans was the little boy of the woman who did fine washing for the townspeople. He was a good, kind little boy, but because he spent most of his time carrying baskets of linen and because he had ragged clothes, the children of the town did not play with him and he was often very lonely. When he had no baskets of linen to fetch and carry, he used to take long walks in the woods, alone, making friends of the trees and the birds.

One day he had gone quite far in the woods because he had found many pleasant things to do on the way. He had lifted a very heavy stone that was keeping a little tree from growing straight and tall. He had broken a trap that a cruel person had set to snare the pretty little rabbits. He had lifted the woodchopper's baby over a narrow place in the brook that she might find her father. He had gathered pretty twigs and put them in a pile at the foot of a tree that the thrush might find them for her nest building. As he went on, he came to a green little path that twisted and turned and went a long way. In following it, Hans was very careful not to step on the earthworms that wriggled happily across it, or the busy ants building their sand houses or the spiders spinning their pretty lace webs. And as he walked carefully along the little green path, Hans suddenly smelled the most delicious perfume. It was like all the roses and all the violets and all the lilies that he had ever seen crowded into one breath of odor.

"I must find that garden and pick a flower for mother," Hans said, running on. Just around a turn in the path he stopped and his eyes were almost blinked with the brightness and he was dizzy with the sweet perfume. There, in front of Hans, lay the castle, white and gold and big and beautiful. Its gates were wide open and beyond was the wonderful garden full of flowers that would not fade. No one was inside and Hans went in and through the garden, picking his arms full of roses and finding the chests of jewels that were his, now, to give away.

No one could understand how Hans had found the road, but when he came home in the evening with his pockets full of jewels to give to the poor and took his mother back to live with him in the castle, they decided it must be true.—From Stories for Sunday Telling, Carolyn Sherwin Bailey, The Pilgrim Press.

A Beautiful Father.

"Tell your mother you have been very good boys today," said a school teacher to two little new scholars.

"Oh," replied Tommy, "we haven't any mother."

"Who takes care of you?" she asked.

"Father does. We've got a beautiful father; you ought to see him!"

"Who takes care of you when he is at work?"

"He takes all the care before he goes off in the morning, and after he comes back at night. He's a house painter, but there isn't any work this summer, so he's doin' laborin'. He leaves us a warm breakfast when he goes off, and

"TIDEWATER TALES"

A book into which is gathered the folklore, traditions and history of Tidewater Virginia. Written in a delightful informal style by Prof. William C. Garnett.

The President of a College in South Carolina writes in part, "My wife and I have been reading with great interest, 'Tidewater Tales', written by Prof. Garnett. I have never read a work of this kind the style of which I have found more attractive, simple and yet elegant, interesting but never monotonous. I have found the greatest pleasure in reading it, and I am delighted that you called my attention to it."

A prominent representative of a Publishing Co., and a lover of books, writes, "You have built a monument to yourself, and long after the green sod grows over you, this book will be read by our children and children's children. I could read 'A Fox Hunt 'Fo De War' every week in the year and get a thrill each time I read it." One of the most prominent merchants in this section of Virginia writes, "To know the author of 'Tidewater Tales' should guarantee the sale of this work".

A prominent attorney in Washington, and himself a writer, and well-known lecturer, writes in part, " . . . the charming description of the old homes, the history and traditions, and the true-to-life stories in local color, combined to delight me, and enticed my memory to run down the corridors of the past.'

A professor in one of the Virginia Universities writes, "You have put posterity in your debt by presenting so skilfully to them characters that have passed to the beyond. The story of that old Virginia negro in Louisiana touches me deeply."

we have bread and milk for dinner and a good supper when he comes home. Then he tells us stories and plays on the fife, and cuts out beautiful things for us with his jack-knife."

Before long the teacher did see the home of that father. The room was a poor one, graced with cheap pictures, autumn leaves and other little trifles that cost nothing. The father, who was at the time preparing the evening meal for his motherless boys, was, at first glance, only a rough, begrimed laborer; but before the stranger had been in the place ten minutes the room became a palace, and the man a magician.

His children had no idea they were so poor, nor were they so with such a hero as this to fight their battles for them. This man, whose grateful spirit lightened up the life of his children, was preaching to all about him as effectually as many a minister. He was a man of patience and submission to God's will, showing how to make home happy under the most unfavorable circumstances. He was rearing his boys to be high-minded citizens, to put their shoulders to the burdens rather than become burdens to society in the days that are coming. He was, as his children had said, "a beautiful father" in the highest sense of the word.—Selected.

"THE WONDER OF THE GOSPEL"

By DYSON HAGUE.

A prominent Canadian Christian said not long ago that she considered "The Wonder of the Gospel" to be by far the best thing on the subject she has ever read. It gave such a clear and forcible exposition of the Gospel of Christ, and the way of receiving it.

The work is not original at all. It is a republication of a very famous work that was published by Dr. Horatius Bonar who considered it the finest explanation of the Gospel he had known, with notes and additions for the reader today.

It ought to be read by every minister and Christian teacher. It tells in words of living interest the story of the Old, Old Story; what it means, how it is accepted, what it does. It is indeed "a truly remarkable book", and as a well-known writer said, "It gave me more light on the simplicity of the Gospel way than all the theological treatises I ever studied".

READ IT. READ IT OVER AGAIN. SEND IT TO YOUR MINISTER, AND ESPECIALLY TO YOUNG MINISTERS AND THEOLOGICAL STUDENTS.

TO THE LAITY OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

There is in circulation among the laity of the Protestant Episcopal Church a petition, prepared by one of our Bishops, to the General Convention which will assemble in Washington next October, asking that body to refuse its assent to the proposal to eliminate the Thirty-nine Articles of Religion from the Book of Common Prayer, which would mean their abrogation.

"WHEREAS, the last General Convention adopted tentatively a resolution to revise the Book of Common Prayer by omitting the publication in connection therewith of the Articles of Religion; and

"WHEREAS, there is no provision for publishing elsewhere or for recognizing in any other way the Articles of Religion except in connection with the Book of Common Prayer; and

"WHEREAS, the Constitution of this Church has ever since 1801 recognized in this way the Articles of Religion; and

"WHEREAS, the Articles of Religion define the Church and state clearly the historic doctrinal differences between the Anglican Communion and the Roman Catholic Church;

"THEREFORE, we the undersigned adult communicants of the Protestant Episcopal Church do most earnestly memorialize our Right Reverend Fathers-in-God, our Reverend Clerical Deputies and Honorable Lay Deputies, in General Convention assembled in their respective Houses, to vote against the resolution to omit the Articles of Religion from publication in connection with the Book of Common Prayer and to vote against any proposed amendment to the Constitution that would omit reference to the Articles of Religion.

"AND we do further memorialize our Fathers-in-God, the Bishops, to send us a message of assurance that the name, the doctrine, the ceremonies and nomenclature of our Church and her missionary purpose and her fraternal love for all Christian people are and should be as expressed in the Book of Common Prayer.

"So we believe you will bring comfort and peace to the hearts of many, give confidence to those within our Communion and make clear to all men the true Catholic nature and Protestant heritage of our dear Church and revive zeal for the salvation of souls through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen."

We believe that a great majority of the communicants of the Church are opposed to the elimination of these Articles of Religion, established by the Church in 1801, and are likewise opposed to the introduction into the Church of the Mass, Reservation and Adoration of the Sacrament Prayers to the Virgin Mary, Invocation of Saints, Worship of Images and Relics, Auricular Confession, Penance, use of the Rosary, Holy Water and other doctrines and ceremonies peculiar to the Church of Rome.

We therefore heartily endorse this petition and express the hope that all Protestant Episcopalians will signify their approval of it by their signatures and by aiding in the widest possible circulation of it.

Copies of this petition may be procured without cost from Latsch & Arnold, 97 N. Second Street, Memphis, Tenn.

MRS. HENRY T. SHARP.

Funeral services were held Thursday, July 12, 1928, for MRS. GERTRUDE STANSBURY SHARP, wife of the Rev. Henry Talbot Sharp, rector emeritus of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Prince of Peace, who died suddenly Tuesday at her home, 2815 Walbrook Avenue, Baltimore, Md. The services at the Church of the Prince of Peace were conducted by the Rev. Dr. Christopher P. Sparling, rector.

In addition to Mr. Sharp, she is survived by a daughter, Miss Evelyn Willoughby Sharp, Baltimore, and a sister, Mrs. T. Clifton Howard, Alexandria, Va.

A PRAYER.

Four things that I may happy be,
I pray that God will give to me;

Some one to love with all my heart,
Something to do by toil or art,
Something to hope for farther on,
A mem'ry sweet to muse upon.

All these in Christ my Lord, I find,
On Him, I rest with quiet mind.

—Bishop J. H. Darlington, From "Verses by the Way", First Series.

The above prayer was sung by the Rev. J. J. D. Hall during his Crusade in Ashe County, N. C., in June, 1927.

THE DIVINE OFFICE OF THE KITCHEN.

Lord of the pots and pipkins, since I have no time to be
A saint by doing lovely things and vigiling with Thee,
By watching in the twilight dawn and storming Heaven's gates,
Make me a saint by getting meals and washing up the plates.

Lord of the pots and pipkins, please I offer Thee for souls
The tiresomeness of tea-things and the stick porridge bowls;
Remind me of the things I need, not just to save the stairs,
But so that I may perfectly lay tables into prayers.

Accept my dirty hands because I made them so for Thee.
Pretend my dish-mop is a bow which heavenly harmony Makes on a fiddle frying-pan (it is so hard to clean,
And, oh, so horrid) hear, dear Lord, the music that I mean.

Although I must have Martha's-hands, I have a Mary-mind,
And when I black the boots I try Thy sandals, Lord, to find;
I think of how they trod our earth, what time I scrub the floor Accept this mediation when I haven't time for more.

Vespers and Compline come to pass by washing supper things,
And mostly I am very tired and all the heart that sings
About the morning work, is gone before me into bed,
Lend me, dear Lord, Thy tireless heart to work in me instead.

But Matins are said over-night to praise and bless Thy Name, Beforehand for tomorrow's work which will be just the same;
So that it seems I go to sleep still in my working-dress—
Lord, make Thy Cinderella soon a heavenly princess.

Warm all the kitchen with Thy love, and light it with Thy peace,
Forgive the worrying and make the grumbling cease,
Thou who didst lay meals for twelve, forgive the world with saith,
"Can any good thing come to God out of poor Nazareth"?

—The English Churchwoman.

The D. W.'s.

The girls couldn't with any truth call Agatha Smole stingy; she kept pace with other girls in the number and value of her little gifts; she gave to the many little benevolences that reach out extended palms to the girl with her own income, and she never made the cost of anything the burden of her conversation, which Alice Groves had said denoted the over-thrifty soul. But when the crowd gathered around the refreshment stand after a college game, or stopped off in a candy shop on the way home, or decided on a bus ride, Agatha, with a smile would say that she could not join them, and hurry on home alone.

And every summer Agatha went on a nice little trip: once to the Great Lakes, and once to Yellowstone Park, and of late her friends had found her looking with interest at ocean steamship booklets. "Going abroad, old girl?" one asked her, and to her friend's surprise, as calmly as if she had been asked if she were planning to buy a pair of shoes, she replied: "I hope to go to England next summer."

Her friends gasped. Other girls, when told of it, gasped. In fact, gasping grew rather the fashion when Agatha's name was mentioned, followed by: "But how does she do it?"

"We are all going to a matinee, Agatha," said a girl a few weeks later, "and we want you to come along."

Agatha laughed. "I have read the book on which the play is founded, and criticisms of the play; so, if you don't mind, I'll take that afternoon off and spend it in the library. I am reading up on England," with a laugh. "Dad says I'll know enough about inexpensive inns and nice walking trips before I start to write a book about it."

"Did you know that Agatha Smole is making cookies which she sells to the neighbors?" said Mary Heim to a group of girls on the corner one day. "I was over at Mrs. Lane's, Saturday, when Agatha's brother delivered two dozen Mrs. Lane had ordered. They are good cookies, too. Now what is she doing that for? She doesn't have to."

"She is going to England next summer," said Alice Groves. "I wish I were going too. Do you know, girls, Agatha has just as good a time all the year in school, and a better time in the summer because her vacations really amount to something. She was gone only two weeks last summer, and I was gone six, but look what she saw in those two weeks. She has better sense than all of us put together. I asked her one day how she did it, and she said she was the president, the vice-president, the treasurer, secretary, and all the members of the D. W. Society, and when I asked her what that meant, she just laughed.

"Well," put in Mary Heim, "I know what it doesn't stand for; it doesn't stand for Don't Work. Honest, she is the workingest girl I ever saw, and always so happy about it, too."

One after another, the girls told of their vacations of last year. Without exception every girl had prepared for her annual outing with an elaborate wardrobe. One had spent six weeks in the country; one had gone to the seashore, where her pretty clothes were worn in the parlors of a high-priced hotel; another had decided to stay at home that she might use her vacation money to buy a wrist watch. "A beauty too," she moaned, "cost a lot, and I lost it within two weeks."

But Agatha, without any visible evidence of expenditures in a dry-goods store, went really somewhere every year, and came back a little more eager-eyed, a little more alert, a little more ambitious, and very much more informed.

"I don't know what D. W. means," from Katharine, the memory of the lost wrist watch giving determination to her voice, "but, whatever it is, I am going to be one."

So that evening they called, six of them, on Agatha, and found her dyeing dark blue, a gray skirt she had worn all fall, "to wear," she explained, "on my walking trip through England next summer."

The girls watched the process, exclaiming with admiration at Agatha's patience in following directions, and her skill. "Oh, the dye-pot and I are old friends," she laughed; "it helps me to be a D. W."

"And that," said Katharine, "is just what we came to see you about. What is a D. W.? We all want to be it, whatever it is."

"It is Do Without," explained Agatha. "I do without so many little things other girls have, putting the money into my vacation fund, and then in the summer, still doing without new clothes for the vacation, I dye and turn and make over, and go on a real trip."

"But you can't do without enough just in one school year to take you to England."

"No, but my last three trips have not exhausted my vacation funds, and the trip to England is the result of putting these left-overs together. Girls, why don't you join me? Not to England, for it is too late for you to save for that, but in Doing Without with some definite purpose in view? Now how about going on a cruise through the Panama Canal another year? Wouldn't it be fun for all of us to be together, and really it is a lot of fun to do without when you once get the habit. Planning and saving for a trip is half the fun."

And then and there was organized the D. W. Society of Pleasant Valley. "So much candy and soda are not good for us," the girls say, "and, do you know, it is a lot more fun to hike off together than to ride on the bus. Won't the Panama Canal look good to us next summer?"—Girls World.

THE PARABLES OF SAFED THE SAGE.

The Parable of Things Better.

There came unto me a young man with a weak chin and a face like that of a Perfect Lady. And he said, I am In Trouble.

And I said, I should think it very likely. How does thou get that way?

And he said, I can not explain it. For other men are Bad and seem to have No Trouble, and I who am not Bad have it all the time.

And I said, It seemeth to me my friend Job said something very like that—namely, that while the tents of Robbers prospered, and they who provoked God were Secure, he got it coming and going. But thou art not like unto Job.

And he said, I am Too Obliging. My friends know that I like to please them, and they Impose upon me. Then when Trouble cometh they leave me to bear the Punishment of their Misdeeds.

And I said, If it be so, gird up thy loins, and take thy Punishment standing up.

And he said, Canst thou not help me? For I have come unto thee for help.

And I said, A Ship under full steam obeyeth the helm, while a Ship with no Power of Propulsion drifteth upon the rocks.

And he said, I do not discern what that hath to do with me.

And I said, I am not surprised, but it hath much to do with thee. There be in the world Three Kinds of folk. Most people say there be but two, but there be three. There be folk that are good folk that are bad, and folk that have No Consistent Purpose to be either.

And he said, I suppose I am of the Third Class.

And I said, The third class is the most hopeless of all. For there is hope of a Bad Man that he will become a Good Man, and that all the power of will and force of character which made him bad will be to his advantage when he doth turn and become good.

And he said, Is Evil then an Asset in the reckoning of the Good?

And I said, My friends the Ancient Philosophers in Rome, after the death of the Great Men of Greece, were wont to think rather Optimistically of human motives, for they said, "Quidquid petitur petticur sub specia boni", which meaneth, being interpreted, whatsoever is sought by any man is sought under the form of the good. And if that be true, then even the Quest of Evil hath something to be said in its behalf. But my Indictment is against those who have no Quest, either of Evil or Good, or who choosing the good pursue it slowly and who are like the Chaff which the Wind driveth away, or like the Ship that drifteth and becometh a Derelict.

And he said, Am I a Derelict, who never sought Evil?

And I said, Not yet, but thou art not remote from the possibility of becoming so. It is not enough that a man shall not seek Evil; it is not even enough that he shall mildly seek Good; he should seek the Best, for the Good, its very self, is the enemy of the Best.—Christian Index.

Perhaps.

Perhaps when it's over we'll find
God hasn't been blind
To the few little virtues we had,
But sifting the good from the bad
He'll say: "On the whole
That's a pretty good soul!"

When hushed is the turmoil and din
And His children come in,
Toil stained and weary, to tell
Where they stumbled and fell,
Perhaps He may smile and remark:
"Oh, it isn't so dark!

"Not for fame or the splendors of earth
Did I give you birth,
Some needed your love and your smile
And they found you worth while
And the good that you managed to do
Was the reason for you."

—Edgar A. Guest.

Daddy's Daughter.

"I wish, daddy, that I'd been a little boy instead of a little girl," pouted Mildred, looking up from the plate which she was wiping.

"You do?" laughed daddy. "Now, mother and I think it's pretty nice to have a happy, helpful little girl about the house."

"I'm happy most of the time," Mildred decided. "But you see, daddy, I don't like to do what girls do; I like to do what boys like to do."

Daddy didn't laugh that time. He only smiled as he remembered how eagerly his little daughter had watched him down at the store one morning when he was mending a clock. There was a secret back of that kind smile which Mildred never found out until one rainy Saturday more than two weeks later.

"I can't go out all day long," she sighed. "It's too rainy even to play sailor boy in the pond."

"Quite true," agreed father. "But, daughter, suppose you make your bed and help mother with the dishes. Then I shall need you at the store."

How big Mildred's eyes grew then! She had been needed at home ever so many times but never had she been needed at the store until that rainy Saturday morning, and the store is such an interesting place.

In spite of the rain, Mildred sang as she spread her bed. She even tried harder than usual to make it look just like a frosted cake, for secrets are such fun. She knew daddy was having one down at the store, and of course as soon as she found it out it wouldn't be a secret any longer. She liked to keep wondering what the secret could be.

"Perhaps some lady is coming in to buy her little girl a ring for her birthday, and daddy wants me to keep the little girl out of the way till it's picked out, or perhaps he's going to let me watch out so that the little things won't get lost. I hope it's the watch."

But when Mildred's home tasks were done she was glad to run down to the store to learn the secret.

"Hello, daughter!" daddy greeted as she stepped up to the counter.

There was no lady and no little girl there, except of course herself.

"Hello, daddy!" Mildred answered. "What's the secret?"

"Secret? Who said anything about a secret?"

"Nobody," laughed Mildred, "but I know there is one."

Then that blessed daddy came around the counter, took his little girl by the hand and led her out into the back shop. There the very first minute Mildred saw a little table with tools and an alarm clock on it.

"Why, daddy, how can you work at such a little table?" Mildred asked

Daddy smiled. "I couldn't," he said, "but how about you?"

Mildred drew up a low chair and in much less than a minute was seated before that table, clock and tools.

"I just fit," she smiled. "Daddy, what do you want me to do?"

"That's your clock, daughter. You may do whatever you want with it."

"It doesn't go," Mildred noted. "I'll fix it."

And set to work with a will. Outside the rain was falling, but she didn't mind at all. Mildred was doing boy's work, and she was the happiest girl in town, though really I'm afraid that poor clock never did "go" again.—Selected.

Vol. 93. RICHMOND, VA., AUGUST 4, 1928. No. 31.

"In the Cross of Christ I Glory"

THE WONDROUS CROSS

I take, O Cross, thy shadow
For my abiding place,
I ask no other sunshine
Than the sunshine of His face;
Content to let the world go by,
To know no gain nor loss,
My sinful self, my only shame,
My glory, all the Cross.

For the preaching of the Cross is to them that perish foolishness, but unto us which are saved it is the POWER OF GOD.

"Wherefore, seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith' (Heb. 12:1.)

—Latin American Evangelist.

Campaigns of the Army of Northern Virginia

Including Stonewall Jackson's Operations in the Shenandoah Valley 1861-63.

By VIVIAN MINOR FLEMING,
Ex-Confederate Soldier.

A thrilling story from the begininng to the close of a wonderful strategy on these fields almost without a parallel in the military history of the world. Verified by official reports of both armies, and an introduction by Historian H. J. Eckenrode.

The author was a participant in many of these battles. He explains the scientific construction of General Lee's breastworks at Mine Run, just before the Wilderness campaign, which is said by military critics to be the finest field construction for defense that was ever used.

Full account of every battle, and approaches to the same, by the State Highway.

Price $2.00.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

Christ is God, stooping to the senses, and speaking to the heart of man.—Id.

Free man freely work;
Whoever fears God fears to sit at ease.
—Mrs. Browning.

So poor, so ignorant, so outcast that I do not stand in awe of him.—Phillips Brooks.

I doubt not that Jesus was ever transfigured when He went up into the mountain for those quiet talks with God His Father. This time He is "transfigured before them", and they had the glory of seeing His glory.

The cloud that covers the transfigured glory is itself a glory. If thou wouldst give rein to thy love, leave in the Paradise of God a margin for faith and hope.—Dr. George Matheson, the blind preacher of Scotland.

"Any number of people are willing to believe themselves agents of Providence, provided they are winning! Men leading successful armies will be very careful to allow the Almighty a share in their actions. The trouble is to get the acknowledgment of Providence when we are losing."

Love has a hem of its garments that touches the very dust;
It can reach the stains of the streets and lanes, and because it can it must.
It dares not rest on the mountain, it is bound to come to the vale.
For it cannot find its fulness of mind,
till it falls on the lives that fail.

At morn she turned her heart to heavenly thought,
And the restless throng with hurrying feet passed on.
And none were found to turn a listening ear.
At night she stretched her heartstrings 'cross a lute,
And when the weary crowd came back,
The tired feet were tangled in the mesh of song,
And stayed to learn of life, and love, and hope.

—Grace Shaw Duff.

The Permanent Value of The Ten Commandments

By H. J. FLOWERS, M. A.

"This study of the Ten Commandments is particularly valuable because of the courageous use that is made in it of the conclusions of modern scholarship. This is done with discrimination and balance, but there is no hesitation whatever in taking position, for example that the Lord's Day as kept by Christians has no connection whatever with the Sabbath as laid down in the Fourth Commandment, and the connection between the Sabbath and the deliverance from Egypt is preferred to that between the Sabbath and the creation which is emphasized in our Prayer Book version of the Commandment. . . .

"This book can be heartily commended as a help to the preacher and as a manual for intelligent lay people who are interested (as all intelligent lay people ought to be) in the problems of conduct."—American Church Monthly.

AN INFALLIBLE BIBLE AND CHALLENGE OF SCIENCE

By Dr. A. I. Brown, M. D., C. M., F. R. C. S. E.

Accepting the Challenge of "Science", the Bible is Shown to be Without Error and So to Demand Reverence.

THE present is a time when the Bible is being damned with faint praise. Many professing evangelical Christians believe they have done full justice to God's Infallible Book, when they admit that these Writings contain the highest and best expression of God's mind and thought.

We are told, that, because of the inevitable frailties inherent in the various human writers, recently emerged from a brute ancestry, there must be and are many historical and scientific errors.

Also it is claimed that in spiritual things, there is a progressive evolution of religious thought, and, in compulsory obedience to this evolutionary process, our conceptions of truth must undergo constant change, and every man adopt his own sincere interpretations of Biblical Records, which, of course, are not Absolute Truth. This places the Book on a par with human documents and robs it of any claim to supernatural origin.

We are constantly being told that the Bible is not a scientific text-book, that its science is crude and primitive, its history inaccurate, and that mistakes of many kinds abound.

We are challenged by a skeptical scholarship to bring it to the bar of cold and critical science. There, we are assured, the claims of ignorant and credulous advocates will be proven false.

We gladly accept this challenge, and deny that any scientific tribunal ever has shown or can show the presence in it of a single error. Let the Book be tested by facts, common-sense, and reason. In every realm, true science and scholarship verify the truth of its statements and claims.

No one is justified in saying that "the Fundamentalist is bound to look at everything through the glasses of a plenary revelation made through such a fallible instrument as man."

If we believe in the existence of an Omnipotent God—as every thinking person must do, whether he uses the word, "God", or some meaningless substitute like "First Cause", "Absolute", or "Primal Source"—logic compels us to acknowledge that this Divine Being must have had the power to transmit an inerrant message through any kind of a fallible instrument.

If He could not control and nullify the inherent imperfections of a defective medium such as man, God would not be omnipotent.

It would appear reasonable to suppose, that, if there is one thing more than another in the physical realm, concerning which He would be most anxious to convey correct information, it would be His marvelous creative work in producing the universe and its multitude of life-forms.

Such a narrative as Genesis, purporting to come direct from Deity, and in so many respects bearing the indelible imprint, not of primitive humanity, but of eternal Deity, can have no Author but God.

Here, the events of Creation are narrated in broad outline, the language sufficiently comprehensive for the expression of Truth: yet simple and understood by people of every race, clime, and degree of intelligence.

On the Divine canvas, the Master Artist has limned with bold and sure strokes a picture perfect in symmetry, perspective, color and light, a picture which defies the critic, overpowers the intellect, inspires awe, compels faith and demands worship.

If this Record be not the Infallible Word of God, it must be the most impious forgery the world has ever known. Either it comes straight from the hand of the Creator, or is a gigantic falsehood perpetrated by unskilled and lying writers, assuming the name and authority of their Maker. In this event, the author would be guilty of a deed, the baseness of which has never been equalled.

If this accusation be true, the Book surpasses in Satanic cunning and malevolence, anything ever foisted on a credulous world. Instead of an Infallible Guide to be followed and revered, it becomes an object of contumely, and ought to be condemned to a nameless and eternal oblivion.

There is no middle ground. It must be gloriously inerrant or inconceivably false, the supreme gift of a loving God or the cruelest deception of the Father of Lies.

But it has proved itself, a thousand times, calmly indifferent to faint praise or violent denunciation, and worthy of our unfaltering faith and adoration.

This faith, which is said to impose an unreasoning and unchanging bias, does not compel us to look at every question through the colored glasses of orthodox prejudice, nor prevent us from arriving at sane conclusions. On the contrary, we are willing to submit the Bible to any possible test without fear of the result.

One reason for this implicit confidence, is its invariable agreement with every proven scientific fact. While not primarily concerned with abstruse scientific problems, yet, in offering a cosmological explanation for the existence of the universe, it delves deep to the very root of unfathomable mystery.

Its language is simple, intelligible, definite, elastic. It was understood by those ignorant of ethereal waves, radiant energy, and modern discoveries which have almost annihilated space, and revolutionized transportation and communication.

Times without number, a changing, chaotic science has floundered and fallen, weighted down with the frailties and absurdities of ignorance, almost submerged by the shifting quicksands of doubt and uncertainty, but this sublime Record stands immovable and triumphant, an invulnerable Fortress built on the Rock of Truth.

As an unapproachable literary achievement, it stands alone, a Masterpiece of brevity, simplicity, grandeur, and Truth—qualities manifested at their apogee of perfection. This is all the more remarkable because it deals with the problem of origins, the most mysterious and baffling question with which the human mind can occupy itself.

This fact would lead us to expect in this ancient record many crude and fantastic speculations, similar to those current in that epoch of the world's history in which it was written, and invariably found in every contemporaneous writing of this nature.

Yet here, to our amazement, there is nothing savoring of childish ignorance or credulity—nothing contradicting the laborious and meticulous findings of the most learned modern science.

It is alleged errors and discrepancies have been subjected to countless critical investigations, but the Bible emerges, vindicated and victorious.

Why then should not this supreme Document be accorded the highest honor, and be accepted as Final Arbiter on any question it touches? And this, not because it claims to be the utterance of God, but because, against all charges of inaccuracy, ignorance and superstition, it has indubitably proved itself historically and literally true.

The amanuensis who wrote in the childhood of the race, in a few score words, gave to the world truths concerning the earth and its life forms, admittedly equal in general principle to the sum of modern knowledge laboriously acquired by the persistent efforts of many centuries.

Man, exalted with egotism and vanity, claims much credit for the many brilliant achievements of scientific research. The Bible, enunciating the momentous truths of creation without bombast or ostentation, affirms simply, "In the beginning God created", "God made", "God formed", "God created every living thing after its kind".

In giving a definite order for the appearance of all life forms, it throws down a bold and dauntless challenge to Science.

It asks proof of fiction, fancy, falsehood or fabrication. If these charges fail, it demands, not a grudging acquittal, but to be crowned with the imperial diadem of Deity.

One fact, universally acknowledged by all authorities, whether skeptical or believing, stands out in the Mosaic Record. This fact is the sequence of Creation events. Here Science agrees in every detail with Genesis. This is such a remarkable display of superlative Omniscience, far in advance of the age, that it ought reasonably to stamp the Bible as unquestionably the very Word of God.

A book written with such sustained dignity and mellifluous precision, abounding in lightning-like phrases—arrows shot from the quiver of infallible wisdom—contemptuously indifferent to the flippant insolence of a decadent skepticism, exhibiting the supernatural prescience of prophecy, miraculously anticipating by thirty centuries the most stupendous discoveries of modern times, is not a patchwork of grotesque stupidity, incorporating a thousand mangled delusions—a monstrous travesty of truth—but the flawless and exalted embodiment of omniscience, a gift from the Master Architect and Creator of the Universe.

Therefore, if we recognize it as the final and supreme Court of appeal, in all issues between an imperfect, emasculated science, and the perplexed truth-seeker, who shall presume to question its imperishable sovereignty?

NOW

In the literature of all ages and countries we find tendencies to glorify the past and decry and deride the present. Beginning with the story of the flood, we are told of the giants and mighty men of renown who had lived of old. So it has been ever since, wherever the thought of man has been recorded. So it is now. The historians tell us of the large men and events in the stories of races, governments and countries and give us glimpses slight or faint, or none, of the smaller things and inferior persons, the daily lives and experiences and conditions of masses of people, which really had the most important meaning for happiness or unhappiness, growth or stagnation or retrogression. Consequently, to take a familiar instance, we compare our politicians of the present with George Washington and find the country woefully decadent. We forget that in Washington's day there were swarms of cheap demagogues, blackguards, blatherskites, virulent radicals, dirty newspaper writers, some of whom abused him constantly and viciously, all of whom have gone into oblivion. We recall and revere gratefully those who have done and spoken and built to make this country powerful, prosperous and honored. The multitudes of frauds, quacks and humbugs who have risen and fallen and commanded large followings, the absurd follies of some of our ancestors and forefathers, the filthiness of the political and many of the business methods of, say, a century ago, are hidden by passing years and changes from our knowledge and memory.

So it is with other countries. So it is with each of us as individuals. For man or woman there is no sweeter blessing than a leaky memory from which wrongs and stings and troubles vanish rapidly or become so dimmed and blurred that they cease to hurt. The natural instinct of the healthy mind is to escape from old memories unpleasant and bitter and to cling to and cherish the pleasant and happy. When we begin to pet and feed and nurse our grievances and resentments, old or new, we sin against God and nature and ourselves, exclude sunlight from our hearts and becloud them with chill and dreary darkness. Nevertheless, when we try, as we should do, to keep alive the happiness and beauty we have known and put aside the unhappiness and ugliness, we should remember to be just to the present. Comparatively few people do that. Even those of us who by stubbornly looking on one side persuade ourselves we have been consistently ill treated by both people and fate, insist that humanity and conditions become worse. Some of us not yet forty years old begin to whine of how much better people and things were when we were young. Some of us who remember when there was not a telephone, an automobile, an electric light, a radio, a movie or an airplane and a bath tub was a rarity, continue to talk of how much more comfort, convenience and pleasure people knew in those bygone days. Sturdy elderly gentlemen sneer savagely at the foppishness and effeminancy of younger men, forgetting, to say nothing of their own early days, that their ancestors, cavaliers of three hundred years ago, wore their hair curled carefully into lovelocks and displayed delicate lace bands at the edges of their sleeves. Elderly ladies rail against the freedom, manners and dress of girls, ignoring the fact that their own revered great-great-grandmothers so dressed and behaved as to incur the vigorous denunciation of Mr. Joseph Addison, of the Spectator, at the middle of the seventeenth century, for shameful indecencies. So we go, condemning our own times and surroundings and the world at large, exalting the past, lamenting the loss of supposed glories and delights, deploring and belittling the present, emitting gloomy prophecies for the future—just as people have been doing thousands of years, while the human race has improved, risen and advanced steadily and human life has become brighter, broader, happier, century by century.

Perhaps the most imperative and the most neglected duty of those of us living and thinking now is that of realizing the facts of the time in which we are living. The foremost of these facts is that in the last hundred years humanity has gained more, advanced more toward fulfillment of the declared purposes and promises of God, toward universal brotherhood and peace and good will and obedience to Divine law, than in all the preceding centuries. We have had wars and calamities. Each of them has taught us lessons we would not have learned otherwise, has incited intellect, energy, and the highest and most self-sacrificing courage to seek cure and prevention. We have learned that opulence and power may be the worst of all dangers and never before in history have wealth and strength been given so lavishly and splendidly for avoidance and alleviation of misery and suffering as in the last twenty years. Never before have men felt responsibility for the welfare of others so keenly and constantly and never have they met that responsibility so generously as now.

One of the mysteries of our creation and life is our division and distribution into types, the different kinds of men and women we find described and recognized in history and fiction and meet day by day—the vain and haughty and the humble and meek; the brave and the timid, thriftless and thrifty, idle and industrious, silly and sensible, instinctively bad and dissolute and instinctively good and pure, with their endless variations and modifications. All these types and many more, equally distinctive, are with us and among us. Most of us can find among our acquaintance counterparts of persons pictured in the very oldest books. The change that has come, that is prevailing now more swiftly than ever before, is decrease of the bad and useless and increase of the good and useful types. Notwithstanding the horrors and crimes that confront us in the newspapers, humanity is being purged of its dross and moral disease. The proportion of the clean and loving and kindly becomes greater, the proportion of the base and vicious and cruel becomes less. We are rising to higher standards and absorbing better understanding of our mutual obligations.

If we try to measure the progress of the next century by that of the century now ending our imaginations must halt, baffled. No philosopher or seer of 1828 foresaw or foretold the marvels the years since then have brought. Books and newspapers of that year bore torrents of words telling of prevalent follies, crimes and dangers, the sad lapses and declines since twenty, fifty, a hundred years before and dismal predictions of the disappearance of religion and downfall of civilization. We are living in Now and our business is to do as we may, hour by hour, day by day, year by year, for this time and for the future. Each of us may be building and doing our little bits, not only that the morrow may find us further than today, but toward having the year 2028 see a world happier, higher, cleaner, nearer to the Almighty, more glorious lighted with the teaching and soul of the Saviour, than we dare dream.

THE IMPOSSIBLE PARADOX---FUNDAMENTALISM VERSUS MODERNISM

By J. C, O'Hair

WHY all this trouble between the modernist and the fundamentalist? What's it all about?

"And there was much murmuring among the people concerning Him (Jesus): for some said He is a good man: others said, nay; but He deceiveth the people" (John 7:12). "So there was a division among the people because of Him" (verse 43).

So we see the division is not a new one; neither is the murmuring something new. Some very religious people, who claimed to be the very elect of God, denied the deity of the Son of God when He was here in the flesh nineteen hundred years ago. To them the Saviour said, "Ye believe not, because ye are not of my sheep" (John 10:26). They claimed to be the friends of God, but they were the sworn enemies of His Son. Unlike many of the enemies of Jesus Christ in the Church today, they did not claim to be the friends and followers of the One they hated. They were open in their opposition and the disciples of Jesus knew where they stood.

So the conflict between modernism and fundamentalism is not a new fight. There may be some new phases to the controversy, but never has there been in the Christian Church any agreement between heterodoxy and orthodoxy. Regardless of the names by which they are called, the opponents and defenders of the faith once for all delivered unto the saints must carry the fight to the end.

Ask any modernist what the fundamentalist believes and he can tell you. But ask a fundamentalist what the modernist believes and he will ask you, "which modernist"? It would take much time to set forth the doctrinal differences between the fundamentalist and the modernist. In an effort to defend his position the modernist declares that the differences are due largely to different interpretations of the Scripture; but the fundamentalist says, "Nay, but due to belief and unbelief concerning those Scriptures".

However, the very heart of the controversy is "Salvation by substitionary atonement", or "Salvation by character".

And pray what is there new about such a queston? Cain and Abel had this out about six thousand years ago, and although it cost Abel his life, God settled the dispute by ruling in favor of blood atonement. Of course, there is the difference as to the inspiration and integrity and infallibility of the Scriptures, the virgin birth and deity of the Lord Jesus Christ, and His bodily resurrection: but bring the modernist to believe the Bible regarding the efficacy of the death and resurrection of the Son of God to produce regeneration in the soul of man, and all other serious differences will soon be settled.

THE fundamentalist—like the Apostle Paul—is set for the defence of the gospel of the Son of God (Philip. 1:17); and makes bold to say that the modernist has no gospel to defend. The pseudo-gospel which he preaches is "another" gospel, which is not another. The only gospel whereby a lost sinner can be saved from the wrath of God is set forth in 1 Corinthians 15:1 to 5.

The fundamentalist is quite positive that no honest man would continue one day in the Christian ministry who denies the deity of Jesus Christ and salvation by faith in His shed blood; and that no intelligent man—unless thoroughly deceived by Satan—could conscientiously call himself a Christian, on the authority of the Bible, and at the same time deny the heart of that Bible, which is the deity and death and resurrection of the Son of God. That the Bible plainly and emphatically declares that Christ came down from heaven—having been in the form of God—that He took upon Himself the form of a servant for the specific purpose of offering Himself a ransom for the world lost in sin; that the third day the very same Jesus came out of the tomb with a glorified body and some weeks after ascended into heaven to sit down at the right hand of God; that all who believe this record and make a personal surrender of the will to Him as Saviour and Lord will be saved and that all who fail to do this will be lost forever in outer darkness, no sensible person, even though an infidel, will deny.

Some time ago an Episcopal clergyman in New York City, a representative of the modernists, declared himself opposed to the deity and virgin birth of the Christ of Christianity. Many Unitarian preachers of the country gave a hearty "Amen" to his blasphemous utterance; and immediately afterward the leading Jewish rabbi of that state fully endorsed the clergyman's estimate of Jesus of Nazareth. Many strange things are happening these days in the name of modern scholarship, but nothing more unusual than this: The Jew is opposed to Christianity and the clergyman claims to be its defender; the Jew is the enemy of the real Christ and the clergyman is supposed to be His friend; the Jew is anti-Christ while the clergyman claims to be for Him; and yet the anti-Christian and the Christian believe the same thing. The Jew is at least consistent; the clergyman is "the impossible paradox". The impossible paradox is the Christian infidel. Have you seen any of them? Our churches and seminaries and pulpits are full of them.

"Is Christianity a Creed or a Life?"

An apology is due the intelligent Christian for asking such a question; and yet the very attitude of certain religious people toward Christ in all generations since He died on the cross of Calvary has kept that question alive. There have always been many religious people who did not hesitate to say that what the individual believed was of little consequence; it was how he behaved and what he did that counted with God: but never has this idea gripped the hearts of the people—or rather their minds—like today; and so the number is increasing with alarming rapidity.

In front of a church a short time ago I read on the bulletin these words, "We do not ask that you subscribe to a creed; but we do ask that you live a life". The modernist says that the life is more important than the creed. The fundamentalists declares that no man ever yet manifested divine life until he had first received such life, and that that life is received by "belief of the truth" (2 Thes. 2:13), which is a creed.

THE modernist teaches "do and live"; the fundamentalist teaches "live and do". "He that believeth on the Son hath life" (John 3:36). In words, at least, the modernist and the fundamentalist would be agreed on this fact, that only the Christ life is acceptable to God. What means the Scripture, "They that are in the flesh cannot please God" (Rom. 8:8). Christians are said to be partakers of the divine nature of Christ (2 Peter 1:4); for a Christian is a new creature; that is, there has taken place in the soul a new creation (2 Cor. 5:17). Therefore only those are in position to please God who can say, "the life which I now live in the flesh I live by faith of the Son of God who loved me and who gave Himself for me" (Gal. 2:20). Every individual who can say this can say with equal certainty, "Christ liveth in me"; but not one has ever been able to say this in truth until there had been the experience of the first part of the verse, "I have been crucified with Christ" (Gal. 2:20).

Agreed then that only the Christ life can please God, the question is who is right as to how to get that Christ life, the modernist or the fundamentalist? Can that life be had by following in the footsteps of the Master, daily striving to conform our character and conduct to the moral philosophy of that One whom God declared to be holy, harmless, undefiled and separate from sinners; without first accepting His sacrificial death and His triumphant resurrection? The modernist says, "yes": the fundamentalist says "emphatically no". Where do you stand?

The Christ life is a perfect life. With the approval of God, the Son could truly say, "I do always the things that please God" (John 8:29). The people of His day were startled and confounded because of an unexplainable mystery, "a perfect man in the midst of humanity". An imperfect woman had upset the natural law by giving birth to a perfect man: "He was in the world, and the world was made by Him, and the world knew Him not" (John 1:10). As to whether a person is perfect or imperfect can only be determined when such a person is measured and judged by some adequate perfect standard; therefore, "When the fullness of time was come God sent forth His Son, made under the law" (Gal. 4:4). Made under the law, because in that holy law the perfection and glory of God is revealed; and any member of the human race who could meet the requirements of that perfect law in every detail and point would be declared perfect and holy by God. Subjected to every test of that law, which we speak of as the ten commandments, the Saviour Jesus Christ never failed nor faltered, and therefore never was He charged with one shortcoming.

The natural man is at enmity with God, "is not subject to the law of God; neither can be" (Rom. 8:7); therefore Jesus Christ was a supernatural man, because He was subject to that law. Every other member of the human race must join in the confession of the Apostle Paul, "The good that I would, I do not; the evil which I would not, that I do. It is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me" (Rom. 7:19 to 23). Christ was born of a woman without inheriting sinful nature. His birth was not an ordinary, but an extraordinary birth: He was conceived by the Holy Spirit. "By the law is the knowledge of sin" (Rom. 3:20). The knowledge of sin has been the experience of every man tested by the law, with the one exception mentioned. "All have sinned and come short of the glory of God."

A SINLESS life is the expression of a sinless nature. It is apparent to any thinking person that a nature must be received in conception and birth, and that born of sinful parents no individual ever received such a nature as Christ had. Therefore there must of necessity be another birth. This is what God calls regeneration. Such a birth must be just as definite as the birth at which man receives his human nature. He receives the divine nature as something separate and distinct from the human nature, and by a new birth: that is, by receiving Christ. "To as many as received Him, to them gave He the right to become the children of God, even to them that believe on His name . . . born not of blood or of the will of the flesh, but of God" (John 1:12 and 13).

While Christ was under the law He presented God's holy law as the true standard of righteousness. Neither the modernist nor the fundamentalist would object to this standard, for no man has ever yet intelligently criticised the perfection of the ten commandments. Truly the law of the Lord is perfect. Therefore while "progress" is the word of this age, no great thinker has risen up during the past thirty-four hundred years to present to society a code of ethics to take the place of the ten commandments. Why? For the simple reason that no one can improve upon perfection. Herein is another mystery. A perfect law in the midst of human society. From whence came this law? If not the product of an imperfect mind, then the product of the same Person who was the incarnation of the perfection demanded therein.

The Revelation of God, known as the Bible, centers around the perfect Law and the perfect Man, both of which can only be explained on a supernatural basis, the explanation all of the Holy Scriptures which truly are God-breathed.

This Christ life is a perfect life. Who can live it? "Christ liveth in me.". If the fundamentalist is living the Christ life; then the modernist does not object to his life: he objects only to his creed. Why object to the creed? Because the modernist declares he can live the life without the creed. The fundamentalist says "never". Who is right?

The same Christ who said, "This do and thou shalt live" (Luke 10:28); likewise said, "If ye believe not that I am, ye shall die in your sins" (John 8:24). In the verse in Luke we have the life; in the other verse, we have the creed. What is the life? The life that Christ lived. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself" (Luke 10:27). Such a love demands undivided affection, intellect, strength and devotion for both God and man; a perfect love, which worketh no ill to his neighbor, but which is longsuffering and kind, which seeketh not her own, which is not easily provoked, which is not puffed up and which thinketh no evil. The love is not produced by thinking, as some modernists declare, but the thinking is the result of the love, "which is the fruit of the Spirit". This high standard presented to the lawyer by the Saviour is called by God the ministration of death and condemnation (2 Cor. 3:7 and 9); for the simple reason that it proves that every man is dead in trespasses and sins; and therefore God says, "the law saith that every mouth may be stopped and all the world become guilty before God" (Rom. 3:19). This lawyer had the same idea that the modernist holds today; that is, that he could present his own inherent righteousness and his religious deeds to God as satisfactory credentials for acceptance; but it will be noticed that as soon as he learned the true moral and spiritual significance of the Saviour's reply, he did that which modernists do today, he began to justify himself by twisting the truth or claiming not to understand.

While by such a standard, or "ministration of condemnation", every sinner is condemned; those who accept the creed before they begin to live the life are not condemned. "He that believeth on the Son is not condemned" (John 3:18). Truly Christianity is both a creed and a life; for the Saviour who brought us life and who will bring us incorruptibility at His second coming first abolished death by dying (2 Tim. 1:9). No one can participate in His life until first they are baptized into His death (Rom. 6:3). "If ye believe not that I am, ye shall die in your sins." If this is true—as every fundamentalist knows it to be—it makes all the difference of eternity what the individual believes, and he must be able to say "I know Whom I have believed" (2 Tim. 1:12).

This do and thou shalt live. The opposite is truth. "this do not and thou shalt die". No one can do, therefore all must die in their sins. Yes, if the sinless One had not taken the sinner's place on that cross outside Jerusalem.

Now every one who meets God where God met his need in the Lamb of God which beareth away the sin of the world, will immediately receive eternal life, which is the gift of God through our Lord Jesus Christ (Rom. 6:23), and then believing (John 20:31) he can daily manifest the Christ life.

RAYS OF LIGHT FROM GOD'S LAMP

VI. What Is the Subject of God's Word?

The subject of God's Word is Redemption, as purposed and planned by the Father, accomplished by the Son and revealed by the Holy Spirit.

1. The Father is the source and author of all things, both in creation and redemption. He has purposed and planned all the wonderful work of redemption as unfolded to us in His Word (2 Cor. 5:18; Col. 1:15, 16; Eph. 1:3, 10, 11; 3:11; Jas. 1:17; Rom. 11:36; Heb. 2:10).

2. The Son of God is the Creator and also the Redeemer. He is the One in whom God purposed and planned His counsels of creation and redemption, and through whom they are wrought out or fulfilled in the power of the Holy Spirit (John 1:3; Col. 1:15, 16; Prov. 8:22-30; Eph. 3:11; Heb. 1:1-3, 8-12; Eph. 1:7; Gen. 1:2; Isa. 9:7 (last clause); Zech. 4:6; Heb. 9:14; Acts 10:38; Ps. 104:30).

3. The Holy Spirit is the One through whom God's counsels in creation and redemption are revealed, made actual or experimental. The purpose of God the Father was spoken through the Son when He said: "Let there be light," and by His Spirit He caused light to be. When the Son commanded the earth to bring forth grass the Holy Spirit caused it to grow (Gen. 1:11; Ps. 104:30).

In redemption what God has done, is doing and will do for us through Jesus Christ is revealed unto us by His Spirit in the Word of God, and is also made actual, or experimental to every believing heart (Acts 1:2, 8; John 14:12-17, 26; 15:26; 16:13-15; Rom. 5:5; 8:2, 13; 1 Cor. 2:4-13).

4. The Object of redemption is man—as he was, is and will be.

As he was (Gen. 1:26-28; 2:19, 20; 1 Cor. 15:45).

As he is by nature (Rom. 3:22, 23; Eph. 2:1-3; Jer. 17:9).

As he will be my nature and works (John 3:36; Rev. 20:10-15).

As he is by grace (2 Cor. 5:17, 21; 1 Cor. 1:30; Eph. 1:6, 7; 2:6, 8-10; Col. 3:1-3).

As he will be by grace (Col. 3:4; 1 John 3:1-3; Rev. 1:6; 1 Pet. 1:4; Rom. 8:29).

5. The enemy of the Redeemer and redeemed, Satan, the deceiver of the whole world, is also a subject of revelation in the Word of God (Rev. 12:9).

His origin (Isa. 14:12-15; Ezek. 28:11-17).

His character (John 8:44; 1 Peter 5:8; 2 Cor. 11:14).

His ruin (Isa. 14:13, 14; Ezek. 28:17).

His work (Rev. 12:11; Eph. 6:10-18; Job 1:9-11; 2:4, 5; Gen. 3:1-6).

His doom (Rev. 12:7-10; Matt. 25:41; Rev. 20:10).

How to overcome him (Eph. 6:10-18; Rev. 12:11; Jas. 4:7; 1 Peter 5:8).

FAMILY PRAYERS

Collected by the Right Reverend William Meade, D. D.

FROM THE SCRIPTURES—MORNING OR EVENING.

O THOU great and glorious God, who art from everlasting to everlasting, the same yesterday, today and forever, we would endeavor to lift up our hearts with our eyes and hands unto Thee in the Heavens. Who is a God like unto Thee? Glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders. O Lord, behold we are vile; what shall we answer Thee? We will lay our hands on our mouths, and our mouths in the dust, if so there may be hope, crying, unclean! unclean! It is of Thy mercy that we are not consumed, because Thy compassion fail not. If Thou shouldst be strict to mark iniquity against us, who could stand? But there is forgiveness with Thee and plenteous redemption.

O God, we would acknowledge and bewail our sins. We have walked in the ways of our own hearts, and in the sight of our own eyes, fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind. We have not obeyed the voice of the Lord our God, to walk in His laws which He hath set before us. Even the good that we would, that we do not; and the evil that we would not we do. O wretched creatures that we are, who shall deliver us? Truly our hope is in Thee, O God. All our desire is before Thee, and our groaning is not hid from Thee. Though our sins have been as scarlet, let them be as white as snow; though red like crimson, let them be as wool; and make us willing and obedient. O God, have compassion upon us, subdue our iniquities, and cast all our sins into the depth of the sea. Oh! that we may be found in Christ, not having our own righteousness, but the righteousness which is by faith. Justified by faith, may we have peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ. May the Holy Ghost, the Comforter, witness with our spirits that we are the children of God. May it fill us with all joy and peace in believing, and make us abound in hope. May we adore the height, and depth, and length of that great love of Christ, which passeth knowledge. Oh! that His way may be known upon earth, and His saving health among all nations. O God, give Thy Son the heathen for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession. Revive Thy work in the midst of the years. Disappoint all those who take counsel together against the Lord, and against His anointed. Let no weapon formed against Thy Church prosper. May wisdom and knowledge be the stability of our times, and the fear of the Lord our treasure. May all Christians be joined together in the same mind, and in the same judgment.

Hasten the time when wars shall cease unto the end of the world, and nation shall no more lift up sword against nation, nor kingdom against kingdom, but swords shall be beaten into plowshares, and spears into pruning hooks, and men shall learn war no more. Grant these prayers, O Heavenly Father, for the sake of Thy Beloved Son, Jesus Christ, in whose own words we would pray for ourselves, and all mankind: Our Father, who art in heaven, etc.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chest will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed—"Thy word have I hid in my heart" (Psalm 119:11).

This week the following verse was submitted by Miss Mary W. McCass, of Camden, S. C:

"The Lord is my light and my salvation, whom then shall I fear; the Lord is the strength of my life, of whom then shall I be afraid" (Psalms 27:1).

THE DIARY OF A BIBLE.

Was It Yours?

January 15.—Been resting quietly for a week. The first few nights after the first of this year my owner read me regularly, but he has forgotten me, I guess.

February 2.—Clean up. I was dusted with other things and put back in my place.

February 8.—Owner used me for a short time after dinner, looking up a few references. Went to Sunday School.

March 7.—Clean up. Dusted and in my old place again. Have been down in the lower hall since my trip to Sunday School.

April 2.—Busy day. Owner led League meeting and had to look up references. He had an awful time finding one, though it was right there in its place all the time.

May 5.—In grandma's lap all afternoon. She is here on a visit. She let a tear-drop fall on Colossians 2:5-7.

May 5.—In grandma's lap again this afternoon. She spent most of her time on 1 Corinthians 13 and the last four verses of the fifteenth chapter.

May 7, 8, 9.—In grandma's lap every afternoon now. It's a comfortable spot. Sometimes she reads me and sometimes she talks to me.

May 10.—Grandma gone. Back in the old place. She kissed me good-bye.

June 3.—Had a couple of four-leafed clovers stuck in me today.

July 1.—Packed in a trunk with clothes and other things. Off on a vacation, I guess.

July 7.—Still in the trunk.

July 10.—Still in trunk, though nearly everything else has been taken out.

July 15.—Home again and in my old place. Quite a journey, though I do not see why I went.

August 1.—Rather stuffy and hot. Have two magazines, novel, and an old hat on top of me. Wish they would take them off.

September 5.—Clean-up. Dusted and set right again.

September 10.—Used by Mary a few moments today. She was writing a letter to a friend whose brother had died, and wanted an appropriate verse.

September 30.—Clean-up again.

BISHOP CHELMSFORD.

The Rt. Rev. Watts Ditchfield, Bishop of Chelmsford, England, died on the fourteenth of July, 1923. Before passing over he bore the following gallant testimony:

"There is a gospel in which no Fall is proclaimed, no real Atonement professed, and the Power of the Resurrection is unknown. I cannot be a minister of such a gospel. It can perform no miracle, it can save no soul. I have no use for it. It leaves the world hopeless. But I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ; for it is still the Power of God unto salvation."

THE MAIN THING.

We are all blind until we see
That in the human plan
Nothing is worth the making if
It does not make the man.

Why build these cities glorious
If man unbuilded goes?
In vain we build the work unless
The builder also grows.

—Edwin Markham.

NINTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY

By Berkeley Minor

COLLECT.

Grant to us, Lord, we beseech Thee, the spirit to think and do such things as are right, that we who cannot do anything that is good without Thee, may by Thee by enabled to live according to Thy will, through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

IN this collect we pray to be enabled to live according to His will, a prayer which accords well with the last verse of the Gospel for the previous Sunday, where Jesus tells His disciples, "Not every one that saith unto me Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven". The conflict of our perverse will with the will of our blessed Lord who wills only for our happiness and can make no mistakes about it, is the source of all our unhappiness in this world and such conflict, if lasting into another state of existence, would surely mar our happiness there. A complete submission of our wills to His will, would enable us to accept, not only with submission and resignation what ills He allows to visit us, but even with cheerfulness and joy, as feeling sure that such ills are best for us, and permitted to trouble us only to fit us to enjoy that place He has prepared for us; (note, see verses 71 and 75 of the 119th Ps. v. 71, "It is good for me that I have been in trouble, that I may learn Thy statues", and v. 75, "I know, O Lord, that Thy judgments are right, and that Thou of very faithfulness hast caused me to be troubled"), as He told the eleven that last night of His earthly ministry: "I go to prepare a place for you . . . . and I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also" (John 14:3).

As perfect happiness in that place which He has gone to prepare for us, depends on such complete and cheerful submission and obedience to Him, our life there must be a sinless life, where we shall no longer need to say, "We have erred and strayed from Thy ways like lost sheep; we have offended against Thy holy laws; we have left undone those things which we ought to have done; and we have done those things which we ought not to have done and there is no health in us". Nor that more full confession of sins, required of those "who are minded to receive the Holy Communion": "we acknowledge and bewail our manifold sins and wickedness, which we from time to time most grievously have committed, by thought, word, and deed, against Thy Divine Majesty, provoking most justly Thy wrath and indignation against us. We do earnestly repent, and are heartily sorry for these our misdoings; the remembrance of them is grievous unto us; the burden of them is intolerable . . ."

We may then "serve the Lord with gladness and come before His presence with a song; . . . for the Lord is gracious; His mercy is everlasting, and His truth endureth from generation to generation" (Ps. 100).

But can we who are so far from sinless, if called into His presence now, be all at once free from sin, free from every disobedient act or thought? The dying thief was so taken; let us trust Him for ways and means of accomplishing our happiness in that intermediate state, and in those mansions, prepared for those who look for Him in the first resurrection.

THE Epistle for the Ninth Sunday after Trinity is 1 Cor. 10:1-13, and speaks of the "sacraments of the Jews as types of ours", with solemn warnings to the Hebrews, lest with them God be not well pleased, and punish them as their fathers were, in the wilderness wanderings.

St. Paul gives to the Corinthian Christians a five-fold warning in not following the examples of "our fathers" in the wilderness wanderings, viz.: (1) lusting after evil things; (2) idolatry; (3) fornication; (4) tempting Christ; (5) murmuring. As a nation we surely have been guilty of all these, and as individuals, of some of them, more or less, especially in view of the fact that we have failed to profit by the promise of God given in the last verse of this Gospel (v. 13); "God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape that ye may be able to bear it". Of these sins the last, murmuring, would seem to be the most unreasonable and senseless, yet a sin which besets many, even the best and most devoted followers of the Lord.

The first record of "murmuring" of Israel is at Marah in the wilderness of Shur, when Moses had "brought Israel from the Red Sea", and they went three days in the wilderness and found no water. "And when they came to Marah, they could not drink of the waters . . ., for they were bitter." And the people "murmured against Moses, saying: What shall we drink?" The "tree" which the Lord showed Moses, and bade cast into the waters to make them "sweet", is very sweetly suggestive of the bitter cross, whereby the bitterness of death is taken away; for I am (God says) the "Lord that healeth Thee" Jehovah Ropheka).

The next murmuring recorded is in the wilderness of sin, after the oasis of Elim, with its twelve springs and seventy palm trees, and is for food, a very general complaining it must have been; for 'tis said "the whole congregation murmured against Moses and Aaron".

There is no chapter of the Old Testament more profitable to teach us how to live well than this sixteenth of Exodus; for it teaches us to live in constant, daily dependence on God. All holy living is based on this, and holy dying will surely follow such holy living. Every morning except the seventh an ample supply of manna was provided. An omer of this was to be gathered for each person each work day, except the sixth (Friday), when two omers must be gathered to last through the Sabbath; and this would not spoil nor melt, "when the sun waxed hot", and "quails came up and covered the camp" at even, not daily (we suppose), but at proper intervals, to give enough flesh for proper sustenance.

THE Gospel for the Ninth Sunday after Trinity is St. Luke 16:1-9, the parable of the unjust steward.

This is one of the parables given by Jesus in Perea, near the end of His ministry on earth, when on His way to Jerusalem for the last time, to attend His last Passover. His explanation of it is fuller than of most of His parables, given so perhaps because its teaching is less plain than most.

The proper use of mammon, or money, is inculcated. "I say unto you, Make to yourselves friends by means of the mammon of unrighteousness; that when it fails, they may receive you into everlasting habitations." For the Christian then, the faithful follower of His Lord, the only use of this mammon is to aid him in gaining those "everlasting habitations". The unjust steward seems to have wasted not only his "master's goods", but also his own ill-gotten gains; for had he not done so, he had no need to fear being compelled "to beg", when "put out of the steward". This, then, is intended to guide us to the proper use of money, whether the Christian has little or much of that unrighteous article, the love of which "is the root of all evil", as Paul tells Timothy (1 Tim. 6:10), warning him at the same time to withdraw himself from those, who suppose that "godliness is a way of gain" (v. 5, 4. v.); and declares that godliness with contentment is great gain. For we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out. And having food and raiment, let us be therewith content. For they that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition" (1 Tim. 5:6, et seq.).

St. Paul here is only urging on Timothy the teaching of Jesus as to seeking riches. He promises only food and raiment, and that only day by day, and gives most solemn warning against laying up treasure on earth where moth and rust corrupt, and thieves break through and steal. But if in spite of such warnings Christians get rich or are born so, and stay so, this parable teaches how all of it should be used, viz., to reach the "everlasting habitations"; I say all of it, all, of course, except what is needed for reasonable comfort as to food and raiment and health. These exceptions would include little or much according to the conscience of the Christian. Many give largely, but retain enough to lead luxurious lives, involving really no self-denial. Can such living be pleasing to Jesus who led a life so different? Thomas Hood says, "When poverty gives to want, that is charity", and we may say with confidence that unless the giving of the rich is so large as to involve real self-denial, there is no charity. Such gifts may give satisfaction and pleasure to the giver and to the recipients; but can give no such pleasure to Jesus as He felt, when He saw the widow's gift, her all, her living, cast into the temple treasury (Mk. 12:41, et. seq.). Our Lord draws from this parable another lesson which He has taught in the Sermon on the Mount (Matt. 6:24), the impossibility of serving God and Mammon. The steward serves his master, but not faithfully; his heart inclines to Mammon, and the result is miserable failure; for we can hardly believe that he got anything but contempt from the debtors whom he helped to cheat his master out of the oil and wheat they owed him.

RETREAT TO ROMANISM

II.

THINKING straight and true, the English Reformers cast aside the speculations of theologians of the Middle Ages and went back to the sources, to Christ, to the Apostles, to the Bible, and seeing that Prayers for the Dead and Purgatory were inseparably linked together, they renounced the doctrine of Purgatory and eliminated all prayers for the dead from the Burial Service and from all other authorized services of the Church.

But some one will say: "I pray for the dead," but do not believe in Purgatory, because no thinking man could." To that I reply, that no "thinking man", who displays any intelligence whatsoever can possibly pray for the dead unless he believes the dead are in Purgatory.

Prayer implies and presupposes a need. Prayer for a departed soul implies that

1. That soul is in need,
2. That my prayers will help the soul in need.

Apostolic Christianity said that a saved soul is at rest, at peace. The English Reformers accepting the principles of Apostolic Christianity parted company with all prayers for the dead.

Medieval Christianity says that soul is in need of my prayers. And why does it need my prayers? Because it is not at ease, not at rest, not at peace with God. The Blood of Jesus is not sufficient to cleanse it, it must be purged by fire. And being in the fires of Purgatory it needs my prayers.

Again I repeat no "thinking man" can pray for the dead unless he believes in a Purgatory. Prayers for the Dead and Purgatory are inseparably connected. They each prove the other. That is recognized today by those who teach men to pray for the dead. Wilhelm and Scannell in their book on theology use this argument:

> "Before proceeding to the proof of the doctrine . . ., we observe that the two points hang very much together; prayer for the dead implying that souls could benefit thereby, and so implying the existence of a middle state."

Now notice, before using any other argument to support the doctrine of Purgatory, these authorities on the subject submit first "prayers for the dead" as the most forceful argument of all.

In like manner other writers connect the doctrine of Purgatory with Prayers for the Dead.

In like manner:

> Masses for the dead and the doctrine of the Sacrifice of the Altar are linked with
> Prayers for the dead—
> "If the prayers of the faithful avail to help souls in Purgatory how much more the Sacrifice of the Altar."

Invocation of Saints and Mariolatry are also correlated doctrines, duly evolved from Prayers for the Dead—

> (a) "If I can help the departed with my prayers, why cannot they help me, seeing they are so much nearer to God."
> (b) "If the Saints can intercede for us, now much more the Virgin Mother."

Prayers for the dead also brought in their train the thought of a Treasury of Merit, Works of Supererogation and Indulgences. For unless we pray for the dead we have no thought of a Purgatory and without those two doctrines there is no necessity for Indulgences and Works of Supererogation. And but for the laxity of life and morals which those doctrines encouraged the Reformation would have been unnecessary.

The English Reformers saw that and they accordingly repudiated Prayers for the Dead and all other dogmas linked therewith. They even eliminated the "Commemoration" for the faithful departed.

Why did they go that far? Was it because they read their history aright? Was it because they feared that history would repeat itself? Let's see:

> In 1552—All prayers for the dead, including the Commemoration was removed from Prayer Book.
> In 1662—One hundred and ten years later the Commemoration was restored.
> In 1925—Three hundred and seventy-three years later prayers for the dead in their intercessory form are incorporated in our revised Prayer Book.
> HOW LONG then before the other correlated dogmas, Masses for the Dead, Invocation of Saints, Mariolatry, Indulgences, Purgatory, become the accepted doctrines of the Protestant Episcopal Church?

Along with the inclusion of Prayers for the Dead certain changes have been made in other Services. They seem rather insignificant and of small importance. I have not time to consider them all, but a careful perusal of our revised Communion Office has revealed the following:

> (a) The Ten Commandments are shortened and now required to be said only once a month.

Question—Is that because the Commandments are not in the Mass and is this a method of painless extraction?

> (b) Certain additions are made at various points.

Question—Were these additions inserted at the point they are because they appear at that exact point in the Mass?

> (c) A revised rubric provides that the "first" Lord's Prayer in the service may be omitted in the discretion of the minister.

Question—Was that because the Lord's Prayer does not occur at that point in the Mass?

> (d) A rearrangement of the position of the "second" Lord's Prayer, so that it now concludes the act of Consecration.

Question—Was that done for the purpose of restoring the so-called "Canon of the Mass", which the Reformers destroyed for the specific purpose of repudiating the doctrine of Transubstantiation?

> (e) A rearrangement of the position of the Prayer of Humble Access.
> (f) A sentence removed from the Gloria in Excelsis which it so happens is the very sentence that the Mass omits in its version of this ancient hymn.

Originally the Communion was a "Communion". Its original character was that of a "Sacrament".

With the growth of Prayers for the Dead and the doctrine of Purgatory came Masses for the Dead. Consequently the Communion Office lost its Sacramental character and assumed a Sacrificial character. In 1216 the dogma of Transubstantiation, which seeks to explain how the Priest can and does work a miracle became an accepted article of faith in the Medieval Church.

The Reformers sought to restore the sacramental character of the Communion Service, sought to make it a real Communion, a true Sacrament. With that in mind they removed from the Liturgy all elements that had made it a Sacrifice and so rearranged the service as to destroy the so-called "Canon of the Mass". They also inserted items that were not then and are not now included in the Mass.

Now noting the changes above enumerated we ask ourselves these questions:

> (a) Were those changes made for a purpose?
> (b) Was that purpose to restore the "Canon of the Mass"?
> (c) Were the changes made to make our service conform as closely as possible to the Mass?

If that was the purpose, do they expect again to make Transubstantiation, a dogma, not of the Apostolic Church, but of the Lateran Council of 1216, the accepted doctrine of this Church.

All I ask of any man or woman, who is really interested in and loves the Church and wants to keep it as it is, is to STOP and THINK.

I have presented as clearly as I can the situation as it actually exists today and ask each man and woman who reads this to analyze the various factors carefully and to think this situation through.

"O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you, that ye should not obey the truth," said the Apostle Paul in his letter to the churches of Galatia as he urged them to "Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage."

What was that yoke of bondage?—the dead hand of Traditionalism, the substitution of the opinions of men for the Word of God.

CHOOSE

If we would, we cannot evade the responsibility of choosing. The choice is forced upon us by the changes already made in our Prayer Book. We cannot longer halt between two opinions. We must choose. We must choose now. We must choose between:

Apostolic Christianity
and Medieval Christianity.

We must choose, and choose now between:

The historic Faith of this grand old Church of ours. The Faith that finds its roots in the Scriptures and traces its meritage to Apostolic times. The Faith of our fathers and fore-fathers. The Faith for which Cranmer, Latimer and Ridley were willing to lay down their lives. The Faith that stands for intellectual activity, freedom and progress. Shall we choose that

Or

The Faith that finds its roots in Traditions and opinions of men. The Faith of thirteenth century theologians. The Faith that refuses to think, that discourages investigation, that encourages intellectual stagnation?

That is the issue. Is it not high time that we aroused ourselves? Is it not high time that we turned to God in prayer and supplication?

Let us do that very thing. Let us pray that God will yet arouse our Church in time to save it from this step that spells not progress, but retrogression, from this step that would substitute the paralyzing and benumbing influence of Medieval philosophy and theology for the larger liberty that is in Christ Jesus. Let us say to the General Convention shortly to assemble:

We are not willing to discard the Faith of our fathers.

We are not willing to substitute for the Faith, the rites and ceremonies, as this Church hath received them, the dogmas and worship borrowed from another.

We are not willing to take this backward step.

The Prayer Book adopted by this Church in 1892 has been in use less than forty years. Why change it? Or, if we change it, why go back to the Middle Ages for our inspiration? If that is the best that can be done after fifteen years of effort let's say to them:

GIVE US BACK OUR PRAYER BOOK OF 1892, for
WE WILL NOT ACCEPT THIS REVISION.

Let us say to them we will not accept this effort to transform our Communion Service into a Mass. We will not accept these prayers for the dead.

WE WILL NOT ACCEPT THIS REVISION.

The Great Commission

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE DEPARTMENT OF MISSIONS.

I have read with a great deal of care the report of the Commission of the Department of Missions consisting of Bishop Sanford and Dr. Wood, which came out to look into the situation in China last winter, also the action of the Department of Missions on that report. I had hoped to go to America to the General Convention when it would have been possible for me to have expressed my views on the subject personally, but I have concluded that with the state of things in China, my presence here is much more necessary than at the General Convention. I therefore think it right that I should express my views as fully and carefully as may be, in writing. The Commission, as it explained in the report, was in China forty-two days, of which twenty-five were spent in Shanghai, the rest being divided between traveling and the Diocese of Hankow and Anking. The boat by which they went to Hankow stopped at Wuhu and Kiukiang on the way up river long enough for the Commission to go ashore and have ample time to inspect the property at Kiukiang and part of the property at Wuhu. On the way back they stopped for two days in Wuhu where we had a meeting of all the foreign members of the staff who were still in China, excepting Dr. Taylor and Miss Myers who were in Peking, together with a majority of the Chinese clergy and a few Chinese lay workers.

The report on the whole shows great care and a thorough intention of fairness as one would naturally expect, but not a full knowledge of the matter which could only be obtained by long residence in the country. In most matters the report is in accordance with the views of the Bishops and other workers in China and the action of the Department of Missions is in accordance with the report.

The action on the section of the report dealing with evangelistic work, is on the whole very good, but we trust that the suggestions contained in section eight with regard to the gradual reduction of appropriations will not be pushed at this time as the country is in such a disturbed condition that it will be very difficult to get any increase in contributions from the Church in China. I am naturally in favor of some such plan as soon as conditions are moderately stable and, of course, I am doing all I can do to push the matter of self-support, even under our present unfavorable circumstances.

The section dealing with medical work is entirely generous, but it seems to me, rather strangely omits any mention of the assuming of financial responsibility by the Chinese people in those places where we have medical work.

The only matter where there is serious controversy is in the matter of educational work. The resolutions with regard to registration seems to me to be too drastic. I doubt very much if it would be possible for our schools to register under present circumstances, but it seems to me that there should be at least the possibility of negotiation left open and not an absolute denial of any chance of registration, which is what the resolution seems to intend. It is, to be sure, somewhat modified by the possibility of reconsideration "when a stable government shall be established and a national system of education be in effective operation."

I believe, however, that it would be possible for us to carry on at least some of our schools without registration. There has been very little pressure brought to bear for registration of primary schools in the province of Anhui. In the province of Kiangsu considerable pressure has been exerted.

The most detrimental section, however, is that which forbids the use of the Sun Yat Sen ceremony and the teaching of the San Min Chu I. I am not an advocate of the Sun Yat Sen ceremony—far otherwise—yet this is a ceremony which nearly all of the Chinese with whom I have talked say bears a purely civil significance. As to the San Min Chu I, I consider it highly objectionable as a text book. It contains, with considerable truth, a vast mixture of error which is entirely detrimental. There is a considerable amount of anti-foreign propaganda which I certainly do not wish to have taught, but is it the policy of the Department of Missions to lay down the text books which are to be used in China or to say that certain text books shall not be used? Have the members of the Department of Missions who passed this vote made a careful study of the San Min Chu I so they would know what it is they are forbidding? It is bad enough to have Mayor Thompson forbid the use of certain books in Chicago schools, but is the Department of Missions going to follow his example and forbid the use of certain text books in China?

And that really brings one to the crux of the whole matter. Are our Chinese schools and our Chinese churches to be conducted from 281 Fourth Avenue or from the field? If they are to be conducted from 281 Fourth Avenue, why appoint Bishops? Of course the finances have got to be superintended from the place that raises the money, but does the Department of Missions intend to follow the example of the Roman Church, which by interfering in the early missions in China practically destroyed a most hopeful work and set the Church back many years? Does the Department of Missions really think that it is more concerned about preserving the Christian character of our schools than we who have spent many years in a continuous endeavor to make our schools more and more Christian? It seems to be assumed that we do not care whether the character of the schools is Christian or not. I know that no member of the Department of Missions would say that, but it seems to be the underlying assumption.

Then especially as to the Diocese of Anking. The Commission spent nearly three days in the Diocese. I wonder what the Bishop of San Joaquin would think if I spent twenty-five days in San Francisco, a week in Los Angeles and three days in the Diocese of San Joaquin, not however, stopping at Fresno, and then brought in a report as to how the missions in that diocese should be conducted. I am quite aware that there were difficulties in stopping at Anking, but that does not add to the ease of judging without a visit. Now I have the highest respect and a very great personal liking for the Bishop of San Joaquin, but as to knowledge of the people, their language, history and philosophy, he has not nearly the background to judge things in Anking that I have to judge things in San Joaquin.

I had hoped when the Commission came out that it would, after a careful study of the situation, come to the conclusion that the Bishops and missionaries and the Chinese clergy and the other workers knew what they were doing and could safely be left to conduct the mission in such a way as they thought best. On the contrary, they bring in a report which, in certain important respects, goes directly contrary to the opinions of three out of four of the Bishops and in respect to one point, namely, whether it is possible at the present time to conduct missions in the three dioceses in the same way or not, goes contrary to the opinion of all four Bishops.

I find that the result is both surprising and distressing and I hope that after more mature consideration they will come around to the position that the Bishops in the field are endeavoring to see that the missions be conducted in such a way as to set forward the Gospel of Christ—that the schools be so conducted as to bring the Lord's influence into the lives of the people—that the churches be moved on as fast as possible in the direction of self-support and self-government. If the Department of Missions could take some such position as this, one would feel cheered and encouraged. As it is, the report of the Commission and the action of the Department of Missions have brought me only sadness and grief. I trust, therefore, that a somewhat more liberal attitude may be taken and we be given permission to direct the work in such ways as may seem wise to us here on the field.

Respectfully yours,

(Signed) D. T. Huntington,
Bishop of Anking.

A CRY SIX THOUSAND MILES AWAY.

Dr. Sao-Ke Alfred Sze, representing the Nationalist Chinese Government at Nanking as minister to the United States, has issued a statement depicting theh arrowing conditions existing in China, where millions of farmers' families are suffering from famine caused by droughts, locusts, floods and military strife. He announces that the Nanking Government is preparing for extensive relief measures. Obviously, the new Chinese government will require time to perfct its plans while endeavoring also to stabilize its government, and Dr. Sze emphasizes Chinese appreciation of American assistance which is being given meanwhile. "The Chinese Government," he says, "is glad to welcome the help of sympathetic American friends, who are now engaged in raising funds to assist in relieving our great calamity."

As has been said by the Rev. S. Parkes Cadman, D. D., President of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, and Chairman of the National Committee, China Famine Relief: "This cause cannot wait for perfect organiaztion or the protracted ways of collecting funds in deciding the issue between life and death."

Our readers are, therefore, urged speedily to help this great humanitarian cause and thus, by helping to care for its suffering millions, to aid New China in its evolution toward stability and responsible international fellowship as a member of the family of nations.

Checks should be made payable to James A. Thomas, Treasurer, and sent to China Famine Relief, 419 Fourth Avenue, New York City, or to The Southern Churchman, for forwarding to that organization.

THE BISHOP PAYNE DIVINITY SCHOOL.

Mr. Editor:

There has been some talk about removing the Bishop Payne Divinity School to Raleigh, N. C. I sincerely trust that it will not be done. If it is to be removed from Petersburg the logical place for its removal is upon the grounds occupied by St. Paul School, Lawrenceville, Va. No two men were more responsible for the birth of this school than the late Bishop Whittle and the late Rev. Dr. C. J. Gibson, rector of Grace Church, Petersburg. Bishop Whittle was born in the County of Mecklenburg, which is adjacent to Brunswick County, where St. Paul School is located. Dr. Russell, the founder of St. Paul School, was also born in Mecklenburg. Dr. Russell was the first pupil of that school. He not only originated and built up St. Paul, the largest Negro church school in the country, but, mainly, through him, we have at this present time six colored Episcopal congregations in each of these two counties of Virginia, aggregating more than one thousand communicants. The location of the Divinity School at Lawrenceville would be economically helpful, by reason of the boarding and housing facilities. It could be made a center of Negro evangelization. With the magnificent chapel, with quite eight hundred students, a large and inspiring choir, the divinity students could receive unusual practice and demonstration in practical church work. The already dozen colored congregations in the two counties could be well cared for by the divinity students from this school; while it could be arranged for the professors of the seminary to administer the Holy Communion to the several congregations. By such an arrangement the whole work could be most economically administered and, in coming years, there would stand on that spot a great school of the prophets, on the soil of Virginia, a monument to Whittle, Gibson, Peterkin, Payne and even Atkinson (for he was a Virginian, at work in North Carolina).

I do not lose sight of the financial burden of the institution, and the insignificant help which comes from the colored churches themselves, but that is not their fault. Some day the right Negro will be found for a Suffragan Bishop, who knows how, and who will visit every mission, tarry long enough, and constantly repeat his visits, until the spirit of self-respect, and self-support, becomes an enthusiastic passion among them, and then they will entirely support their own churches, which they ought to do, and can do, and in addition find pleasure in giving their bit for the maintenance of Virginia's Negro School of the prophets, sending forth its rays from a parcel of ground purchased by the first student going out from its doors.

FROM A LAYMAN.

Mr. Editor:

I want to thank you for the stand you have taken in behalf of the fully inspired Bible and for the retention of the Thirty-nine Articles. Laymen have known for some time that there was something wrong in the Church, but we did not know just where it was till you began your fight along these lines. You have made it perfectly clear that much of the trouble is in the Seminaries. We do our work all week and when we go to church on Sunday we want to hear a message from the Word of God that will refresh our souls. How often do we hear in this city sermons that have nothing to do with Christ or the Bible, but essays on subjects better fitted for some class room than the pulpit! I can see now where the young ministers get a lot of this stuff they hand out to us on Sunday. I agree with you in saying that the Virginia Seminary and others, too, surely do need a house cleaning to get men as teachers who believe the fully inspired Bible and teach the need and necessity of the Holy Spirit to cleanse the heart from sin. No wonder many clergymen want to get rid of the Thirty-nine Articles when they condemn the very things they are doing, viz.: prayers for the dead, worship of the Virgin Mary and the adoration of the Sacrament on the Altar. Many clergymen say they have hardly read the Articles. It is a reflection on any Seminary to have the Alumni come out and know so little about the teaching in the Articles of Religion and the fundamental doctrines upon which this Church is founded. The clergy are our leaders. If the Church is in a serious condition, surely they must assume much of the blame. I think the laymen should wake up and when the clergy preach false doctrines they should protest. I am pleased to say our rector gives us nothing not founded on Bible and Prayer Book.

AN APPEAL FROM A PROSELYTE.

Mr. Editor:

Please accept cordial thanks for publishing in The Southern Churchman my article on "Some Higher Critics and The Hebrew Language". Already I have requests from your readers for copies of the article in tract form.

In behalf of the Jews of America and the world and my own account I thank you for this favor and, further, for your promise to publish for us another article in which I shall undertake to explain how and why I, born, bred and educated an orthodox Jew, am a very earnest Christian and devoting all my time, energy and means to urging my brethren of our ancient race and religion to give Christianity fair consideration. My own experience encourages me to believe that many thousands of thoughtful and intelligent Jews, if induced to think on the subject dispassionately and earnestly, will be convinced, as I was, and will share the blessing that has come to me.

I confess without shame that my zeal is that of a proselyte, so frequently the object of sneer and reproach. Those who deride it forget that this zeal inspired St. Paul and all the earlier apostles and spread the story and teachings of the Crucified Redeemer. I love my people with burning love, am proud of their history, cherish their traditions, yearn incessantly and with unfaltering hope for fulfillment of the promise that all Israel shall be saved.

Surely it is not fanaticism nor idle dreaming to trust in that promise of the Faithful and Merciful God, repeated so many times in the Old and New Testaments, to accept the preservation of the Jewish race through centuries of ignominy and persecution as a miracle confirming the promise. I cannot persuade myself that I am the victim of overwrought enthusiasm or self-deception in seeing in present world conditions, especially in this country, plain signs that the time of fulfillment is near.

So thinking and feeling, I appeal from the depths of my soul to my fellow Christians, especially my fellow Episcopalians, for all the help they can give me toward conveying the truth to my fellow Jews and from the depths of my soul am grateful for what help is given. One lesson ground into the character of every Jew by generations of hardship and defeat is patient, persistent effort against obstacles and difficulties. Trusting humbly in God, whose almighty will I firmly believe I am helping to do, and guided by this inherited trait, I work as I can, aided by a few earnest friends and gifts from sypathizers who consider that the Jew is worth saving, and that God intends he shall be saved by Christian prayer and aid. I write and publish these articles and tracts and maintain the Hebrew-Christian Publication Society, at 405 Bible House, New York City, issuing "Jews and Christians", a magazine, whenever the means of the Society allow. All our literature is so distributed as to reach Jews likely to read and consider it and Christians whose interest may be aroused and co-operation enlisted.

Just now we are in very sore need. Will you not, Mr. Williams, continue to help by publishing this letter, or some word of your own, for us, and accepting and acknowledging for us, through The Southern Churchman, any contributions to our cause your readers may be moved to send?

Contributions may be sent, also, to the Rev. Kenneth MacKenzie, our treasurer, at the Bible House address. This will be reported in The Southern Churchman. A letter or postal card to me will be answered promptly with a fuller statement of our organization, list of officers, annual report, and more of our methods of work than can be given here. Our magazine and other literature will be sent to the contributors.

Please do what you can to help us break among the Christians the habits of indifference to the soul and welfare of the Jew, of regarding him as hopelessly lost, forgetting what enormous help he would be to Christianity if brought to accept it.

BIBLE BELIEVERS?

Mr. Editor:

Find enclosed an extract from a letter received last week. It speaks volumes confirming the doctrinal teaching or views of the Seminary faculty.

L. E. Combs.

Excerpt From a Letter.

June 14, 1928.

"We went to . . . . church Sunday to the memorial services. A professor from the Seminary, Kennedy by name, gave us the sermon. He said that he was one of Mr. Williams' greatest heretics, and asked some of them if they believed that the whale swallowed Jonah, and the other questions they generally ask."

If Mr. Kennedy is correctly represented in the above letter it seems to us that the sooner the Virginia Seminary dispenses with the services of Mr. Paca Kennedy the better off the Seminary will be. How can a man be expected to honestly teach the truths of our Bible when he does not believe them and is ready to openly ridicule those who do accept our Bible as true?

Church Intelligence

Canterbury Resigns.

Official announcement was made July 25 that the Archbishop of Canterbury, primate of all England, has resigned. It is the first time in the history of the arch see of Canterbury that the archbishop has resigned, his predecessors having died in office.

The announcement stated: "The king with great regret received information that the Archbishop of Canterbury was desirous of resigning. His majesty, on the recommendation of the premier, appointed a commission consisting of the Archbishop of York, the bishops of London, Durham and Winchester to receive the resignation. The commission reported their acceptance of the resignation to take effect November 12 and this was approved by his majesty."

It is a foregone conclusion that the Archbishop of York will be the primate's successor, but it has not been decided as yet who will succeed the Archbishop of York and other consequential changes.

The resignation of the archbishop, who before his elevation in 1903 was the Most Reverend Randall Thomas Davidson, Bishop of Winchester, had been expected for some time. The archbishop, who is eighty years old, had a long and distinguished career in the Church, saddened in recent months by the rejection of the revised alternative Prayer Book by the House of Commons. He recently visited the king at Buckingham Palace and discussed with his majesty the position created by Parliament's rejection of the Prayer Book and it was noticed then that his face keenly showed the destruction of his hopes.

In the controversy which surrounded consideration of the revised Prayer Book, the Archbishop of Canterbury necessarily held a central position. Not long ago he declared to the Church assembly.

"It is a fundamental principle that the Church—that is, the bishops, together with the clergy and the laity—must in the last resort, when its mind has been fully ascertained, retain its inalienable right, in loyalty to our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, to formulate its faith in Him and to arrange the expression of that holy faith in its form of worship."

Although the Archbishop qualified his statement by saying he did not believe the principle of the Church's right to formulate its faith and forms of worship incompatible with its national position, his statement has been publicly interpreted to represent a step in the direction of disestablishment.

Laymen, Attention!

In connection with the program of the General Convention, there will be one important innovation. On the evening of October 19 there is to be held in the Church of the Epiphany a mass meeting for the laymen of the Church.

The General Convention has had a commission on lay activity for the past nine years, but the movement has outdistanced the commission and the commission has done little more than report progress. One of the factors in this movement has been the National Federation of Church Clubs of the United States.

The federation at its last annual meeting adopted the proposal that at every provincial synod and at every General Convention, where practical, there should be a fellowship meeting of men, at which the work that has been accomplished should be demonstrated, with the purpose of inducing other men and groups of men to emulate the examples of the several clubs now actively at work.

Colonel George W. Burleigh, President of the Church Club of New York, newly elected president of the federation, requested the presiding bishop and others concerned with the program of the General Convention to set aside the evening mentioned for a meeting of the men. There will be more than three hundred lay delegates in attendance on the convention, the Diocese of Washington and neighborhood will send fully five hundred, and there will be enough other men, members of the Church clubs in neighboring dioceses and persons in attendance on the convention, to raise the total to more than a thousand interested laymen.

Addresses will be made by the Rt. Rev. William P. Remington, Missionary Bishop of Eastern Oregon, and George W. Wickersham, one-time Attorney General of the United States.

Cathedral Gift.

Construction of an upper bay in the choir of Washington Cathedral is provided by a gift of $61,000, which is announced by former U. S. Senator George Wharton Pepper, who with General John J. Pershing, is directing a nation-wide campaign to hasten the completion and endowment of the great edifice on Mount Saint Alban.

The donor is a Southern woman who has asked that her name be withheld, it was stated. The gift is the second large contribution within recent months forwarding construction now in progress. It represents the structural cost of an impressive portion of the choir, which is the section of the cathedral between the sanctuary and the transepts. The bay will contain one of the large tracery windows, which in the choir will be devoted to pictorial representation of angelic manifestations for which there is Scriptural authority.

There are ten bays of clerestory wall in the choir and these are now the scene of the present cathedral building activity. The foundations, three crypt chapels and the apse of the edifice are structurally complete, and it is hoped to have the choir completed and roofed during the coming fall. The next construction step will involve the building of the two great transepts.

At the Convention.

Orient and Occident will be well represented in the House of Bishops at the General Convention, which will be held in Washington, commencing on October 10.

The Rt. Rev. Charles S. Reifsnider, Suffragan Bishop of North Tokyo, will come to Washington for the important Church gathering, as will the Rt. Rev. Alfred A. Gilman, Suffragan Bishop of the Hankow missionary district.

Life Work in Japan.

Bishop Reifsnider has given his entire adult life to the service of the Church in Japan. Dr. Reifsnider volunteered for service immediately following his ordination to the priesthood in 1901. He passed through the tragic scenes of the great earthquake in Tokyo on September 1, 1923, and rendered heroic service among the refugees until called back to the United States to report to the National Council on the situation in which the catsastrophe left the Church in Japan. In the November following he was elected Suffragan Bishop of North Tokyo and was consecrated February 12, 1924.

In addition to his missionary work, Bishop Reifsnider is President of St. Paul's University, an educational institution just outside Tokyo with an enrollment of more than 1,000 Japanese students.

Dr. Gilman is a native of North Platte, Nebr., and began his missionary career in 1901. A year later he entered the service of the Church in China, and engaged in general missionary work until 1912, when he was elected President of Boone University, which is a part of the Central China University at Wuchang.

From a far section of the globe another eminent Churchman will come to Washington in the fall. The Rt. Rev. Daniel Trumbull Huntington, Bishop of the Missionary District of Nanking, China, will take his place with his brother bishops in the House of Bishops, which will be in the Willard Hotel.

Bishop Huntington has given his entire adult life to the service of the Church in China, covering a period of thirty-three years. During that time he has advanced from the rank of a missionary to the post of bishop of a district which has been in theh ub of revolutionary outbreaks in the past few years. He is considered a man of wide influence in China, whose language he speaks fluently and about which he has written extensively.

Important Layman.

One of the most prominent and influential leaders of the Church who will attend will be Louis B. Franklin, D. C. L., vice-president of the National Council of the Church, as well as its treasurer. While Mr. Franklin will not be a delegate to the Convention, he will be an important factor in its counsels.

Led in Finance.

Until he became officially identified with the Church in 1919, Mr. Franklin was a leader in financial circles in New York, where he had organized the investment department of the Guaranty Trust Company, and for many years was connected with the Investment Bankers' Association, of which he was president for two terms. Upon the entry of the United States into the World War, Mr. Franklin was called to Washington by Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo and appointed director of the War Loan Organization in which capacity he served until July, 1919. It was under his direction that all of the great Liberty and Victory loans were floated. Upon the conclusion of the war Mr. Franklin abandoned his financial career and accepted the position of treasurer of the Church's National Council. A year later he became vice-president of the National Council. He has since devoted all of his time and energies to the work of the Church.

The 1928 Winona Lake Bible Conference.

The many people who wait expectantly each year for the preliminary announcement of the great Winona Lake Bible Conference, will be much pleased with the exceptionally strong list of preachers and Bible teachers who are to fill up the thirty-fourth annual program at Winona Lake this year. The dates for the conference are August 17-26, inclusive.

Winona has enjoyed for the last few years a run of seasons that has brought annually an enlarged attendance not only upon the high-class Chautauqua program, but especially at the Bible Conference, last year, witnessing the high tide both in numbers and spiritual power. Seven hundred ministers were present at the Bible Conference.

The speakers are as follows: Dr. J. T. Wardel Stafford, London; Bishop Fred B. Fisher, India; Dr. J. C. Massee, Tremont Temple, Boston; Dr. William A. Sunday; Dr. William T. Ellis, Philadelphia; Dr. Herbert W. Bieber, Bala Cynwyd. Pa.; Dr. E. C. McCowan, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Dr. John B. Koehne, Boston, Mass.; Dr. John E. Vander Meulen, Presbyterian Theological Seminary, Louisville; Dr. Jacob Peltz, Chicago; Dr. Max Reich, New York City; Dr. Charles Henry Prather, Louisville, Ky.; Dr. Harry W. Bowlby, Lord's Day Alliance, New York City; Dr. E. L. Gunsekers, Ceylon; Dr. Ralph W. McAfee, Detroit Federation of Churches; Dr. Alvin E. Bell, Toledo; Dr. W. E. Biederwolf; "Uncle John" of the Family Altar League; The Students League of Many Nations; Mr. William Danner, Secretary, Mission to Lepers; Rev. J. Kelly Unger, Korea; Dr. W. A. Fletcher, Korea; Miss Constance Brandon, of the Dominion Movement for Central Asia; Dr. Ben Cox, Memphis, Tenn.; The Mission Boys: Dr. E. S. Greenbaum, President Hebrew Christian Alliance.

One of the greatest features of the conference will be the missionary aspect of it. A special program along these lines is being built.

VIRGINIA

Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, Bishop.

The fourth annual Retreat Mission at the Shrine of the Transfiguration, Orkney Springs, Va., will be held from Sunday, August 5, to Sunday, August 12, inclusive. The missioner will be the Rev. Dr. R. Cary Montague, of Richmond.

The daily services will consist of an Early Celebration at 7:20 A. M., a Quiet Hour at 11 o'clock, and an evangelistic preaching service at 7:20 P. M.

August 6 being the Feast of the Transfiguration, the Holy Communion will be celebrated also at 11 o'clock, in commemoration of Bishop Gibson and others whose memorials are at the Shrine.

Many motorists from Valley of Virginia points and beyond are expected to attend.

FLORIDA.

Rt. Rev. F. A. Juhan, D. D., Bishop.

Bishop Juhan is again in charge of the Young People's Division of the Sewanee Summer Training School. This school will open on the sixteenth of August and will continue in session for the following two weeks. While the attendance was splendid last year, it is expected that the crowd this summer will be even larger, due to the fact that the National Convention of the Young People's Federation will be held at Sewanee on August 31 and September 1 and 2. This will be the first convention of the Federation, and it will very naturally draw its own clientele, many of whom will doubtless attend the Summer School, which immediately precedes its sessions.

The director feels that he has lined up an exceptionally capable and consecrated faculty and he feels that this year's school will be essentially a school for leaders. Therefore, he is anxious to have the boys and girls from the Leagues and Church Schools of the Province who are potential leaders. The recreational features of the school will be plentiful as in the past, but work will be the principal order of the two weeks of its sssions.

Of the utmost importance in the 1928 school will be the course for college students. This will be under the direction of the Rev. Capers Satterlee, the student pastor of Clemson College, South Carolina. Assisting the Rev. Mr. Satterlee will be the Rev. Leslie Glenn, the Secretary for College Work of the Adult Division of the Department of Religious Education of the National Council, and Miss Hope Baskette, the student worker at the Florida State College for Women, in Tallahassee. These three instructors are recognized as exceptional leaders among our college students and Bishop Juhan considers his division of the Summer School most fortunate in securing their leadership for this most important course in the curriculum.

Camp Weed is the name of Florida's summer conference center for the boys and girls of the Young People's Service League. This camp is in its fourth year and for the past two years it has been held at Beacon Beach, near Panama City and the Gulf of Mexico. Beacon Beach was the camp site again this year and the dates are July 2 to 15.

Bishop Juhan and the Rev. Melville E. Johnson, student pastor at the University of Florida, in Gainesville, were the directors, and together they secured a splendid group of faculty, counsellors and leaders. Miss Hope Baskette, the student worker at the Florida State College for Women, in Tallahassee says: "Camp Weed is a camp with a purpose —that of developing our young people 'in wisdom, stature and favor with God and man'.

"Carrying out this high ideal, you find at Camp Weed a balanced program of instruction in accredited courses with competent leaders, outdoor recreation, inspirational talks and leaders and a social atmosphere that ensures the working of the whole camp as one lorge family. Our young people must be developed spiritually, mentally, physically and socially so that they may become whole-hearted, consecrated leaders in the Kingdom of God."

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

The combined services of Christ Church and St. John's Church, Georgetown, a custom of many summers, will begin July 29 and continue until and include the first Sunday in September. These services will consist of a celebration of the Holy Communion at 7:30 A. M., and morning prayer and sermon at eleven, every Sunday, beginning July 29 with the early service at St. John's and the eleven o'clock service at Christ Church. The following Sunday the hours will be reversed at both churches, and so on, alternating through the summer. The Rev. Edwin B. Niver, D. D., will be the clergyman in charge of both parishes. His address will be 1607 Thirty-first Street, N. W., and his telephone, Potomac 3013.

Volume one, Number five of the "Sign of Toc H", is out and is interesting and illuminating to those who understand or want to understand all about Toc H. It is issued by Toc H National Headquarters, 1324 Eighteenth Street, N. W., Washington, D. C.

Of the hundreds of visitors who find their way daily to Washington Cathedral, many avail themselves now of the opportunity to get a glimpse of the Bishop's Garden, whose gates have been opened to visitors. A rarely beautiful glimpse it is, too. Boxwood, from interesting old places in Virginia and Maryland have been brought together here in a remarkable way. Here may also be seen an old-fashioned ceremonial border, trees of splendor, the great Yew, which was the gift of the Garden Club of Cleveland; the Shadow House, recently dedicated by the Bishop of Washington; a memorial garden sun dial, an ancient wayside cross and other things, too, even charming old flag stones. The Garden Committee of All Hallows' Guild is generally responsible for this beautiful spot, and its chairman, Mrs. G. C. F. Bratenahl, is untiring in her enthusiasm and work for the cause.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.

Miss Sarah D. Gardiner, a member of St. Peter's Parish, Bay Shore, has made a gift to the State of New York of a tract of one hundred and ninety-seven acres, part of Sagtikos Manor, which she recently inherited from her brother, the late David Gardiner. The gift will almost complete the desired parkway to connect the State's new northern Long Island drive with the southern drive, making a circuit of beautiful parked boulevard stretching from the city out into the rural part of the island. Miss Gardiner, in making this generous gift to the State, declares that she is carrying out her late brother's intention. It will be remembered that Mr. Gardiner, who was Churchwarden of St. Peter's, died in a tragic manner last autumn while making an address at the dedication of the new parish hall. His estate, Sagtikos Manor, was perhaps the only tract on Long Island that still retained intact the large original acreage of a colonial grant, and had continued without interruption in the possession of one family. In the Manor House, which is now Miss Gardiner's residence, President Washington spent a night while making a tour of Long Island in 1790. Churchpeople of the diocese will hear with gratification of Miss Gardiner's generous cooperation in the commendable policy of the State's park department.

The Rev. John Howard Melish recently preached in Westminster Abbey, London, and his sermon was printed in full in the Brooklyn Daily Eagle's well-known Monday sermon supplement. Mr. Melish also preached, while in England, in St. Martin's, Birmingham, and in St. Mary's, Redcliff, Bristol. He is now on the continent, visiting Rome and other Italian cities, and will probably travel through the Balkan States and Asia Minor to Palestine and Egypt.

The combined summer services of the parishes of St. Luke's, the Messiah and the Incarnation, Brooklyn, are said to be very well attended. Arrangements have been made whereby parishioners of any of the three churches may make their offerings in their usual envelopes, and these are sorted and sent to the respective parish treasurers. On July 29, August 5 and August 12, the services will be at the Church of the Messiah, and the Rev. Tipton L. Wood, Chaplain of the battleship "Texas", will officiate; August 19, August 26 and September 2 at St. Luke's Church, the Ven. Paul S. Atkins, of York, Pa., officiating.

The daily papers have given considerable space to the description of Sunday morning services at St. George's, Brooklyn, where a group of young men, graduates of Bishop Stires' School of lay-readers, are conducting service during the rector's vacation. At the late service on Sunday morning one of these young men reads the service, another reads the lessons and a third "preaches a sermon", according to the newspapers. The rector, we read, has been for two years preparing a group of young men for this work. They do it very well, and good congregations attend.

The Rev. Edward M. McGuffey, rector of St. James' Church, Newton, who has been seriously ill, is somewhat recovered, and has been sitting up. Indications are favorable for his recovery, which his many friends rejoice to hear.

ALASKA.

Rt. Rev. R. T. Rowe, D. D., Bishop.

Dr. John W. Chapman, writing on June 10 about happenings in Anvik, Alaska. says:

Mr. Chase came in yesterday with a fine raft of three hundred logs from Grayling Island, to be used for the new home for orphaned Indian children. There are two hundred more there; if the weather continues good, he will go up again tonight. It is hard work with hot weather and mosquitoes, but the Yukon is quiet and just now help is to be had.

The beaver hunters are back. Most of them have been fairly successful, and Montgomery Ward and Sears-Roebuck will get some of the benefit, at least. There were more men in church this morning than there has been for some time, and the signs of occupation in the village are cheering.

We are very much pleased over the success of our radio set. I aim at consistent communication with the United States, and think that I shall be able to accomplish it. I have received my station license under the present rules. A few days ago I put up a new radio mast with the help of the neighbors, and remodeled my outdoor aerial system, with the result that my signals were received in Ketchikan in excellent volume. Previously they were not strong enough to be read there. Last fall they were read in Berkeley, Cal., but I was never able to repeat this success.

We are all well just now. The real summer is here, and our garden things are growing. The land is just soaked with sunshine, alternating with days of rain, just the weather for gardens. The ladies are enthusiastic, and Miss Hill and Miss Chandler are very efficient in getting the boys and girls at work. We are making use of Isaac Fishers' garden, as well as those below the Bentley house, and we have our own family garden in the gulch between us and the church.

I hope to get the chancel added to the church this year.

COLLECT FOR NINTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY.

Grant to us, Lord, we beseech Thee, the spirit to think and do always such things as are right, that we, who cannot do anything that is good without Thee, may by Thee be enabled to live according to Thy will; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

COLLECT FOR THE TRANSFIGURATION OF CHRIST.

O God, who on the Mount didst reveal to chosen witnesses Thine Only Begotten Son wonderfully transfigured, in raiment white and glistening: Mercifully grant that we, being delivered from the disquietude of this world, may be permitted to behold the King in His beauty, Who with Thee, O Father, and Thee, O Holy Ghost, liveth and reigneth, one God world without end. Amen.

A HYMN FOR THE NEW AGE.

O Master of the modern day,
Our hearts are kindled as we know
Thou walkest still along life's way
As in the ages long ago!
And by the magic of Thy will
New worlds Thou art creating still.

We thank Thee that the truth moves on
With wireless wave and healing ray;
That yester's noon was but the dawn
Of brighter glories in our day.
And now by faith, in holy dream
We glimpse tomorrow's grander gleam.

We thank Thee that Thou rulest still
This goodly orb on which we dwell—
That Thou dost still reveal Thy will
To those who would the dark dispel—
That upward o'er the peaks of time
Thy plan unfolds in form sublime.

Help us to keep Thee as our Guest
While speeding o'er the highways grand,
Or cleave the air at Thy behest
To give some soul a helping hand!
Thy tireless Spirit leads the way
To heal the woes that throng our day!

Enlarge our minds to grasp Thy thought,
Enlarge our hearts to work Thy plan,
Assured Thy purpose faileth not
To put Thy spirit into man!
God of the present age and hour,
Thrill us anew with holy power!

—William Steward Gordon.

The Transfiguration.

Very few of the great artists of the world have dealt with the Mystery of Our Lord's Transfiguration. Who should hope to portray the Glory of God in the Face he must paint? The earliest attempt is found in the Church of St. Apollinaris near Ravenna. It is a mosaic of the sixth century. Moses and Elijah are introduced in the clouds; a jewelled cross in the centre of a circle of stars alone shadows forth the Transfigured Christ; the three Apostles are symbolized by three sheep in the foreground and the Blessing of the Father by a Hand from Heaven. A little later in date than this, there is a mosaic in the Church of St. Catherine on Mount Sinai showing all the figures. Then we come to the well-known Transfiguration of Fra Angelco. It belongs to St. Mark's in Venice. "The majestic Figure of Jesus—majestic, in spite of the tender sadness of His expression—stands with Arms outstretched as on the Cross." The Figure is outlined with glory and the nimbus round His Head bears a dark Maltese cross. Only the heads of Moses and Elijah, each hallowed with sanctity, are shown, whilst the three Saints kneel astonished and affrighted in the foreground, St. John adoring at Our Saviour's feet.

In Rome is to be found the unfinished Transfiguration of Raphael; his last work, painted in 1510. They say "all Rome wept" as they looked from the beautiful dead face of the Master to his great unfinished work. It hung over his bier when he died, worn out at thirty-seven! His eyes had been trying to see the King in His Beauty all his life: his hand to depict His Glory to the world. Such men painted on their knees!—Exchange.

HOW BLESSED THAT WOULD BE.

F. B. Stone.

Could we begin again in childhood's hour,
Live every day filled with Thy life and power,
Grow up in Thee, thrilled with Thy life divine,
A fruitful branch united to the Vine,
And thus a channel for Thy love to flow.
To every life we touch while here below,
How blessed that would be!

Filled with Thyself our hearts would holier grow,
And from their depths clear, living water flow.
And bearing on its tide God's boundless wealth,
Of love and life and joy and peace and health;
Eternal life lived with our Christ on earth,
Because we had an early second-birth;
How blessed that would be!

O Christ, may every child from henceforth give His heart to Thee, that Thou in him mayst live,
And do Thy will through each one's yielded heart,
And he become of Thee a living part;
A little child to lead men unto Thee,
From sin's domain to truth that sets them free;
How blessed that would be!

Part III.

Nevertheless, the days following were difficult. Soon it was evident that the crimson equipage was monopolizing the trade. Vaselleos moved his cart up to a little triangle on Connecticut Avenue where chances for trade were much slimmer, there being no such intersection of streets as at the busy Circle. The young man's face, that had drawn such custom with its engaging smile, little by little lost its gaiety. Pressing upon his heart was the fact that the five dollars for this month's fee to the Orphanage was not forthcoming. What about next month? And the other months? And what about the start he had meant to give Georgeos when he should finish at the school?

The immediate need was met by pawning his gold watch that his father, a prosperous Corinth merchant in prewar days, had given him. Five of the ten it brought was sent at once and the other five laid away for the next payment, although Vaselleos was getting thin and pale from lack of proper food.

Hard up or not, he could never resist his daily visit to the Circle. Even though the offerings he carried were more meager, there he was every morning, limping over to the fountain, calling to his small creatures. What though his cart stood two blocks away untended, Vaselleos could not forego this gratification.

Then came a terrible day. It was a cold overcast November afternoon. Dried leaves lay in depressing piles about or were whisked here and there by the cold Norther that was blowing. On a seat in his beloved Circle sat Vaselleos Tergis, eyes fixed on the ground, thin, white, a different object from that laughing Vaselleos of but a few months ago. That morning his cart had been seized for debt. More and more bitter had been the struggle to establish a trade in the new location when any one could go from the shabby, poorly stocked cart down to the luxurious crimson vehicle so opulently conspicuous a short walk away. He had, under the stress of insufficient food, lost his buoyancy, and the strength lost in the hospital had been sadly needed. Bit by bit he had fallen behind—behind, that is to say, as far as his trade went, for the payments to the Orphanage had been met one by one. Then today, in spite of his earnest requests for a little more time the cart itself had gone. What now?

If Vaselleos had not been so preoccupied he might have heard the grinding brakes of a street car that stopped on the turn of the Circle opposite the most smiling fountain-lady. Even if he unconsciously heard he certainly did not lift those heavy eyes to note the pretty girl—a Greek girl at that—who descended. Else he would have seen her advance into the Circle, gaze all about her, question the Crimson terror. He would have seen her, having evidently obtained no satisfaction, consult a small picture which she held in her hand, then stare at the big white mansion which stared back at her. Vaselleos, in his preoccupation, had not even noticed that the boarding was down from before its windows and doors.

Nor did he see her cross the street and ring that imposing bell, nor did he know that a liveried attendant admitted her to its mistress.

So he could not be conscious of the interview that took place between the great lady, Mrs. Mortimer de Sayles Pauncefort and the young Greek stranger; of the hurried entry into the big car before the door; nor of the trip to the Municipal Building where a list was made of the pushcart permits, the address marked of the man who was named Vaselleos Tergis, and the rapid drive of the two to that address.

His landlady had had great respect for Vaseleeos and it had distressed her that he had had to give up his room. No, she could not tell them where he had gone.

And then the drive all over the town, seeking a white pushcart that could not be found. The young girl who began to get teary-eyed under repeated disappointments and the great lady who stood firm as a rock. "Of course we will find him, my dear. Certainly we will."

And certainly they did, for as the twilight shadows began to fall and Vaselleos set wearily forth, aimlessly forth, from the Circle, a sumptuous limousine came back, halted, and the elegant Henderson, who had recognized him, turned his broadclothed person about to inform his mistress of the fact. Whereupon the young person leapt dangerously from the car, almost threw herself upon the neck of the astounded Vaselleos and was only restrained by Mrs. Pauncefort who said in kindly tones, "Come, Elena, we will take him before the fire and tell him all about it".

Elena was laughing and crying and so flushed and excited as she told her little story that Vaselleos felt in his pockets to see if there were any peanuts or lollypops to offer her, such being his panaceas against human woe. Finding none he listened with all his might and was hardly conscious that she had elapsed into her native Greek or that Mrs. Pauncefort had stolen softly away and left them to themselves.

And so, in the soft mother tongue she told him her story. For years Elene Coreche had been searching for her brother, the last member of her family alive—if he was alive. There had been a terrible raid of her village near faraway Smyrna. Rounded up with other Greek prisoners, having seen her father and mother die, she had caught a glimpse of the boy, Georges, as some one was leading him from the field. He had given a desperate backward look, cried aloud "Elene! Elene!" and held out his little arms to her. It was the last she had seen of him. But the man with him had made a sign to her. For this reason Elene had believed him to be a sympathizer and had never lost faith in the rescue of Georges. Chance had brought her to America, where she had found work and saved money against the day when she could help the little brother. The Greek Legation had through their New York Consul become interested and had sought him for her. It was only yesterday that her hopes had proved to be well-founded for she, in New York, had received a message from them telling her that her brother had been found at last, found well and cared for, in the Corinth Orphanage of the Near East Relief, where, it transpired, he was sponsored by a Washington, D. C., man, Mr. Vaselleos Tergis.

The next train out of the city had carried Elene to bestow her blessings upon the benefactor. And at the Legation she had even found a letter from Georges, which enclosed a picture of the kind gentleman, Mr. Tergis, which he had sent to Georges. "This picture—this picture, taken before this beautiful great white building that has been the means of my finding you!"

. . . . . .

From its correct setting in Dupont Circle the great house still stares forth imposingly. Its stare, nowadays, is not directed towards a white pushcart opposite, for there is none. In fact, the mansion seems to have grown farsighted, as its approving stare is plainly directed all the way across the park to a white building, small in comparison with its own size but very atractive in effect. It was the whim of the lady (Mrs. Mortimer de Sayles Pauncefort owns it and had it so charmingly fitted up for two young people she was sponsoring)—to have the building all white save for the boxes with their dwarf evergreens, and the swinging sign. Notice the sign. Painted upon it there is a squirrel and a dove, with the words, "The Corinth Cafe".

Within, there is always a rushing business going on. You will meet an old friend in the proprietor, Vaselleos Tergis, no less, more rosy and beaming than ever in his most beaming days. Mrs. Tergis' pretty face, too, will be familiar to you. The food you have there will be delicious.

However, no matter how occupied the day in this popular place—all Mrs. Pauncefort's diplomatic friends have taken it up and you know what that means in Washington!—no matter how strenuous the season, there is one act that Vaselleos allows nothing to interfere with. Every morning, armed with grain, crumbs, all the requisites, he sallies forth to the Circle. His appearance creates a sensation. There is a spreading of wings, and a scampering of little paws; the squirrels abandon their shyness and leap to meet him; a white cloud of pigeons flutters through the air and settles at his feet. "Come on, my friends, my leetle friends," cries Vaselleos gaily.

The beauteous ladies on the fountain smile fixedly and Mrs. Pauncefort from her window waves a cheery good-day. There is no red pushcart man to disapprove, for long ago he left the Circle; he said the birds and critters nearly pestered him to death!

A Student's Prayer.

Louis Deschamps.

Reverently may I pray unto Thee, O God. Help me to lay aside the petty, sophisticated ideas of mortal vanity, and to be silent in Thy holy presence. May the sacred memory of my childhood faith restrain the arrogance of newly-acquired knowledge. If I have wandered into the tortuous labyrinth of reason's approach to Thy Truth, forgive me, lest, condemned by my own conscience, I fear to see Thee again. Let me kneel in silence before Thee, while Thy Holy Spirit makes intercession for me. Lord, I am in doubt and bewilderment. Thy creation so tempts our mortal mind with wonders and mysteries that we would strive to understand even Thyself. I am told many things that seem to contradict Truth, which can not be contradicted. Every conclusion has its exceptions, every philosophy its paradox. I would know the Truth, O God, that I may be free—yet I find Truth elevated by human mind to a place so impenetrable, so complex, so high in the clouds of mortal speculation, that learned men worship blindly the Imponderable, the Summum Bonum—anything except the Faith of our forefathers. Let me bring my problems unto Thee, O God, that my soul may have peace.

The philosophies of others fail to inspire me. Thou knowest the desolation of the unbeliever's heart. Thy mercy must pity those whose souls agonize in the burning desert of Nothingness, where every thought of Thy Word is dashed from parched lips by the heartless dictates of brute reason, reason that goes no further than tooth and claw. O God, I have found life barren, flat, stale, and meaningless without Faith. I am taught to think of life in terms of centuries of evolving history—yet without end or plan, as if all were a grim treadmill, or an endless chain. Against every law of Thy holy commandment is arrayed a host of human frailties, scientific facts that would make us essentially animals. Yet I know, O God, there is an answer to my prayer for Truth.

Alone, quite alone in the silence of my own soul, I kneel humbly before Thee, Thou Almighty God, Our Father. There is no clamor of the world in this quiet hour, no lash of public opinion to drive me into line with popular fads of philosophy, no deriding skeptics, no jeers of self-deluded atheists—I am alone with Thee and my own soul. O God! Thou art All-wise, Omnipotent, Eternal. I am fallible, weak, mortal. Some day I shall be no more in human life—as forgotten as the myriad dead that are the dust of the earth. Surely there must be a purpose of my life. I am alone with Thee, I dare to speak my heart. Lord, I must be Thy creature or perish; I must lose my petty self in Thy Infinity or live in vain! I believe, strengthen Thou my unbelief. Let Thy power inspire me with the Ideals of Thy manifestation in Jesus Christ, Thy Son. May beauty, truth, and holiness be very real to me, and the glorious Truth of Thy Word be set aside sacredly in the innermost shrine of my soul. Amen.

Comradeship.

There is a comradeship of the spirit with no words spoken, and it is a deeper and more satisfying comradeship than one that depends upon physical manifestations. It often happens that as husband and wife sit together within the same room the spoken word destroys the deep levels of comradeship to which silence penetrates. As we proceed with our reading, writing, or thinking, and as our wife proceeds with her reading, sewing, or planning, no words pass between us. Yet we are conscious of each other's presence and the work that we are doing is the better done because of that silent comradeship of spirit. It may even be that we are not in the same room and yet that mysterious comradeship of eternal spirits whose relationship is one of love, is the most definite experience in our consciousness.

Similarly, when the spirit of a loved one has been released from the limitations of the flesh, we know that the comradeship of the spirit is in no way interrupted. Neither life nor death can separate us from love, either from the love achievement; and if we consciously take up our inheritance in this Great Church, it is much more than a tradition that is ours. We do not only catch the accents of the religious heroes of the past and learn a great creative language by which our own thoughts and ideals are moulded. Nor are we only linked with them in a community of aim and aspiration and hope and faith, expressed in worship and sacramental rites. We actually share their life. The stream of creative energy which flowed from the spirit of God through them, and still sustains them, becomes for us, too, through them, the energy by which in turn are recreated and live the life of faith."

So we are sure of the life everlasting. When we consider all the evidence—the universal belief in immortality, the God-given yearning within every soul that comes to maturity, the intuitions of our own hearts, the eternal worth of spiritual values, our experience of comradeship with loved ones passed from earth, and the wider experience of the communion of all Christian disciples, the powers that we possess which are too great for a short life to be lived only upon the earth, the desire of the soul at its best for perfect holiness, the promise of Him who would not tell a lie, we sing with Alfred Lord Tennyson:

"Thou wilt not leave us in the dust;
Thou madest man, he knows not why;
He thinks he was not made to die,
And Thou hast made him; Thou art just."

For the Young Folks

IN THE MORNING.

"I met God in the morning
When my day was at its best,
And His Presence came like sunrise,
Like a glory within my breast.

"All day long the Presence lingered,
All day long He stayed with me,
And we sailed in perfect calmness
O'er a very troubled sea.

"Other ships were blown and battered,
Other ships were sore distressed,
But the winds that seemed to drive them,
Brought to us a peace and rest!

"Then I thought of other mornings,
With a keen remorse of mind,
When I too had loosed the moorings,
With the Presence left behind.

"So I think I know the secret,
Learned from many a troubled way:
You must seek Him in the morning
If you want Him through the day."

A Little Maid Points the Way.

At dawn, had you been watching, you might have seen a caravan start out from the gate of Damascus. There were soldiers bronzed and scarred from long service at the wars. One of the camels supported a litter, of which the crimson curtains billowed and swayed in the light morning breeze; on another sat the veiled and hooded figure of the captive slave-girl, Miriam.

All day, and many days, they journeyed toward the South, across a desert-region of low, rocky hills, where they met no man, and at night pitched their tents alone under the stars. Then, crossing a range of jagged mountains, they came on fertile fields and valleys where the people paused in their homely tasks to watch them as they passed. And Miriam's heart beat high with hope, for they were nearing their journey's end. Everywhere they heard news of the Prophet—how he had sweetened the waters of the spring at Jericho that the thirsty might drink without fear, and of the great words which the Lord spoke by him promising blessing and freedom to Israel and to all who kept His commandments.

It was one day towards evening that they drew in sight of Dothan, and saw the last rays of the setting sun gild the housetops of the village with a farewell glory. Miriam threw back her veil, and gazed and gazed with hungry eyes. This was home. At last, after years of captivity in a strange land, she had come back. Her mistress' promise echoed over and over in her mind—"And it shall be that when your Prophet heals my lord, so that he is cleansed of his leprosy, it shall loose your bonds, and you shall be a slave no longer, but free in your own land."

It was already growing dark when they drew up before the mean little house where the Prophet had his lodging, and the camels sank wearily to their knees for they had come a long journey. The silk curtains of the litter were pushed aside, and the sick man leaned forward anxiously. What would the Prophet say? It meant life or death to him, and Naaman had no wish to die. A soldier rapped at the door; then, when no answer was forthcoming, struck the panels heavily with the hilt of his sword. "In the name of Benhadad, King of Syria, I command you," he cried; "open in the king's name!"

Under his second impetuous summons there was a sound of bolts being drawn, and the door slid back, disclosing a withered old man who eyed them suspiciously. "What do ye here?" he snarled. "My master prays upon the housetop, and will see no one."

"He will see us, old grey-beard!" the soldier retorted. "Tell him that Naaman, the captain of the hosts of Syria, waits without, and would hold speech with him. Haste now!" Then, as the old man shuffled off, the soldier turned to his companions—"That will fetch him," he grinned. "These Israelites know who is their master."

In a moment the servant had returned; he stood in the open house-door with a lamp held high above his head, lighting the crabbed smile that played across his sharpened features. "Naaman, captain of Syria," he announced, "my master bids thee go and dip thyself seven times in the river Jordan, and thou shalt be cleansed of thy leprosy." The door slammed shut.

The sick man fell back upon his cushions with a groan of despair. "Did I make the long journey for this," he cried; "to be turned away from the door like any wayside beggar? I thought he would come out and, calling on the name of the Lord his God, touch me that I should be healed. Come then, turn about! If I must die, let it be at home in Damascus, and not in this accursed land of Israel."

But Miriam slipped from her saddle and ran and knelt by the side of the litter. "My Lord, O My lord!" she pleaded. "All is not lost. The Prophet did not say that there is no hope for you. Rather, he promised that if you would dip seven times in the river Jordan you would be cured. It is only three days' journey to the river, and we have come so far—so far. What are three days more?"

But Naaman was too angry to heed. "Nonsense, girl!" he said roughly. "We have rivers in Damascus—the Abana and Pharpar—are they not better than all the waters of Israel? May I not wash in them and be cleansed?" And he motioned to the soldiers to start.

Then Miriam, grown venturesome, laid a restraining hand on the camel's bridle so that he could not rise. "Master," she reasoned, "if the Prophet had told you to do some great thing, would you not have done it? How much rather then, when he bids you only to wash and be clean?"

Something, either the girl's anxious tone, or the power of her logic, touched Naaman and brought new hope to his heart. "I can but try," he muttered, "who knows but there may be health in Israel? And surely this Prophet is able to perform miracles." He bade the soldiers pitch camp for the night. At day-break they would start towards the river Jordan.

They were anxious days for Miriam. Hour after hour, as the camels plodded over the weary miles, she prayed in her heart that this pilgrimage might not be in vain. It had come to mean more to her than the price of her own freedom. There was the master's health, and Miriam truly wanted that; but above and beyond all else, was the desire that he and all the world should know that there was a God in Israel—one Who loved, and pitied and cared for all His children. When, at last, toward noon of the third day, they came to the low river bank where the Jordan flowed sluggishly between the reeds, Miriam was cold and tense with anxiety. She waited to see two of the bodyguard lift the fever-wracked form of their master from his couch, and wade with him into the water; then, dropping to her knees, she prayed swiftly and silently, with a fervour she had never felt before. And in her prayer there was not one thought for herself.

Suddenly a great shout went up from the soldiers—a cry of sudden incredible joy, as their master came up out of the river and stood before them, well and sound; for his flesh had come again like the flesh of a little child, and he was clean. "My Lord!" cried Miriam, and would have fallen at his feet; but Naaman raised her, and calling one of the soldiers, bade him file the silver badge of servitude from her wrist.

"A good guide hast thou been to me, Miriam," he said. "These hands, though bound, have shown me the way to health, and to that faith which is greater than life itself. For now I know that there is no God in all the earth but in Israel, and henceforth will I offer neither burnt offerings nor sacrifice to other gods, but unto the Lord."

Clickety-Click.

"Clickety-click! Clickety-click!" went two big marbles in Bobbsy's pocket as he trotted home from school. To Bobbsy they seemed to be shouting, "Quickety-quick" very crossly, and he could hardly wait to get home. It really all came about this way:

Bobbsy had been very late in getting up that morning, and in the scurry of getting dressed and off to school on time, I am afraid he had been a little cross. Yes, I am sure that he had been cross, for he even forgot to give Mother a smile with her good-bye kiss, and that wasn't at all like the real Bobbsy Boy. Then, to make things even worse, just as he went out the front door, little brother Dickie Boy had trudged up to him and held out his little fat paddies and in them lay Bobbsy's two best big marbles.

"Oh, Dickie! I wish you'd leave my things alone," cried Bobbsy, snatching the marbles out of Dickie's paddy and shoving them into his pocket.

Dickie Boy's face lost its smile and two big tears shone in his eyes as he stood at the window watching Bobbsy start off to school. From the very minute Bobbsy saw those tears that heavy feeling down inside of him had bothered Bobbsy. Every time during the morning that those two marbles had "clickety-clicked" Bobbsy couldn't help seeing Dickie at the window all over again, and the minute he thought of him he couldn't help getting heavier hearted.

Even at recess it was no fun playing games. The old marbles just would keep saying, "Clickety-click!" and reminding him. When the long morning was ended and school dismissed, Jerry, one of Bobbsy's schoolmates, called to him and said, "Come on, Bobbsy, let's swing in the school swings a minute."

Now Bobbsy loved to swing, but today it all seemed different.

"No, I can't," he said, as he tucked his book under his arm, "I have to go right home."

"Why, Bobbsy, come on," begged Jerry.

Bobbsy hesitated a minute, but as he turned in at the gate he was going so very fast that Mother came to the door and called:

"What is the trouble, Bobbsy?"

"Oh, nothing, Mother," said Bobbsy, smiling up at her as he gave her his greeting kiss, "where is Dickie?"

Somehow, he felt better already, and when Mother pointed to Dickie playing in the sand pile, Bobbsy hurried upstairs to his play box under the window and such a scrabbling you never heard, until from out of a corner he pulled a gay-colored little bag. Out from his pocket came the two big marbles and into the bag they went. Then, after Bobbsy had tied the strings very tightly, downstairs he skipped across the lawn to Dickie.

"Hello, Dickie Boy!" called Bobbsy, holding up the pretty bag. "Here's something for you."

"'Lo," lisped Dickie Boy, his eyes shining with happiness at the sight of the pretty bag.

"There are those two marbles, Dickie Boy, safe in a bag for you," said Bobbsy, hanging the strings about Dickie Boy's pudgy little wrist. "They are for you, Dickie, and Bobbsy is sorry that he was cross and took them away."

"Luncheon!" called Mother. As the two little brothers trotted arm in arm to the house the marbles in the bag sang:

"Clickety-click! Clickety-click!"—Selected.

Tidy Mrs. Spider.

Like all careful housekeepers, Mrs. Spider has her cleaning days, but, unlike other careful housekeepers she wears her fine clothes when she works.

Maybe you have seen her all rigged out in her yellow and blackvelvet gown, sweeping and dusting her web, but just remember, she is not as extravagant as she seems. Clothes never bother her. She doesn't have to go to a dressmaker when she needs a new gown. She has only to step out of her old one, and lo! just under it is a fresh one all ready made and a perfect fit.

No, Mrs. Spider is not extravagant. She is very economical, in fact; for, instead of throwing aside her old dresses, she rolls them into a ball and eats them.

There are no old-clothes men in the spider world.

"Well, to tell about Mrs. Spider's house cleaning. She has neither brushes nor brooms nor dusters; so she begins her work by raising one of her eight claws and giving her house a shake which reaches every corner. She is careful, however, not to injure it, but she makes the dust fly. When this is done to her satisfaction, she looks her web over, first from the top, then from the bottom, and then from both sides. If the walls sag, or are the least bit broken, she rolls them into a ball and eats them just as she does her old clothes. Then she replaces them with new ones.

When everything is in thorough order, she sits down for a rest and to make her own toilet.

As her whole body and legs have a rough, hairy covering, she needs quite a little time to fix herself properly.

In her mandibles, or jaws, are the teeth with which she combs her hair, and her claws serve as brushes for the other parts of her body.—Selected.

Little do we know how we wrong the praises of God, in allowing them so narrow a room as we usually do, while we are copious enough in our confessions and petitions.—Richard Baxter.

"THE WONDER OF THE GOSPEL"

By DYSON HAGUE.

A prominent Canadian Christian said not long ago that she considered "The Wonder of the Gospel" to be by far the best thing on the subject she has ever read. It gave such a clear and forcible exposition of the Gospel of Christ, and the way of receiving it.

The work is not original at all. It is a republication of a very famous work that was published by Dr. Horatius Bonar who considered it the finest explanation of the Gospel he had known, with notes and additions for the reader today.

It ought to be read by every minister and Christian teacher. It tells in words of living interest the story of the Old, Old Story; what it means, how it is accepted, what it does. It is indeed "a truly remarkable book", and as a well-known writer said, "It gave me more light on the simplicity of the Gospel way than all the theological treatises I ever studied".

A "Copperhead's" History of the War of 1861, written primarily for youthful readers, but helpful to readers and students of all ages. The earlier editions appeared about 1866-8; this revised edition of 1927 (Mary D. Carter and Lloyd T. Everett, editors) omits certain heated passages natural to the times in which Rushmore G. Horton wrote; moreover, it adds new material here and there, called forth by the developments, American and World-wide, of the past sixty years—a book valuable to those interested in data on all the leading Americans of those times, and on the deep, underlying issues, economic, institutional, and racial, involved in the great crisis of the Sixties.

"TIDEWATER TALES"

A book into which is gathered the folklore, traditions and history of Tidewater Virginia. Written in a delightful informal style by Prof. William C. Garnett.

The President of a College in South Carolina writes in part, "My wife and I have been reading with great interest, 'Tidewater Tales', written by Prof. Garnett. I have never read a work of this kind the style of which I have found more attractive, simple and yet elegant, interesting but never monotonous. I have found the greatest pleasure in reading it, and I am delighted that you called my attention to it."

A prominent representative of a Publishing Co., and a lover of books, writes, "You have built a monument to yourself, and long after the green sod grows over you, this book will be read by our children and children's children. I could read 'A Fox Hunt 'Fo De War' every week in the year and get a thrill each time I read it." One of the most prominent merchants in this section of Virginia writes, "To know the author of 'Tidewater Tales' should guarantee the sale of this work".

A prominent attorney in Washington, and himself a writer, and well-known lecturer, writes in part, " . . . the charming description of the old homes, the history and traditions, and the true-to-life stories in local color, combined to delight me, and enticed my memory to run down the corridors of the past.'

A professor in one of the Virginia Universities writes, "You have put posterity in your debt by presenting so skilfully to them characters that have passed to the beyond. The story of that old Virginia negro in Louisiana touches me deeply."

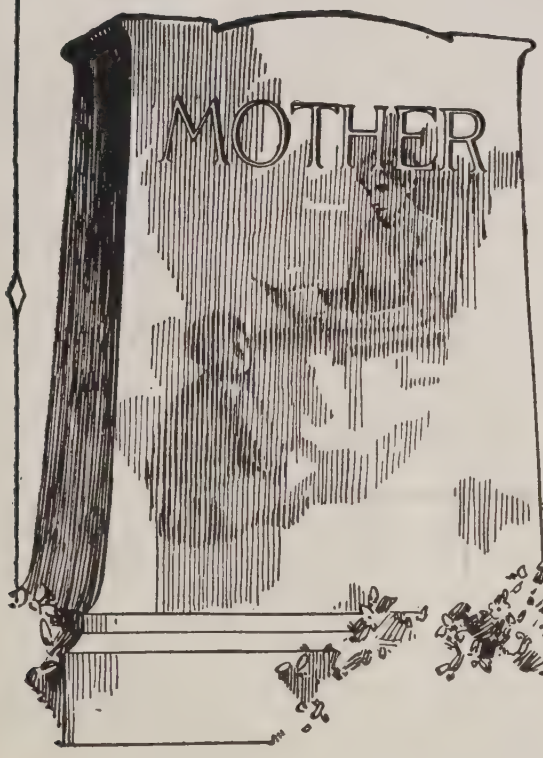
Winnsboro Granite Monuments Maintain Memories

*"Thou turnest man to destruction * * * They are like grass which groweth up. In the morning it flourisheth and groweth up; in the evening it is cut down and withereth."*

How these words have been impressed upon us. There are some losses we will never forget; some memories we will always cherish.



Visits to the cemeteries where graves are marked reveal that many of the markers and monuments are also of few days, some discolored, others cracking and crumbling, as the ravages of time take their toll.

What a consolation to know that Mother's monument has been cut from a more lasting stone—genuine Winnsboro Granite. How the very rock itself brings back the tender memories of her. One can almost see a vision of childhood days in the stone itself.

OF ALL THE GRAY GRANITES,

Winnsboro Granite

"The Silk of the Trade"

stands preeminently the most lasting, the most beautiful and inscriptions on it most legible.

Be sure that "Winnsboro Granite" is specified in your contract for monuments. Like other high quality materials, there are many inferior substitutes, which resemble this granite on first appearance, but do not possess its lasting qualities and permanent beauty, because they contain more deleterious elements, such as water, lime and iron. These elements tend to disintergration and discoloration.

Have your monument dealer furnish you with a personal guarantee from the quarries that the monument you purchase is cut in genuine Winnsboro Granite.

The certificate of the quarries is signed by B. H. Heyward, Treas., and General Manager, whose signature insures genuine Winnsboro Granite. A facsimile of this signature is reproduced below.

WALLIS: Entered into life eternal in Wilmington, Delaware, on July 7, 1928, ARCHIBALD WRIGHT WALLIS, 2nd., aged sixteen years, eldest son of Elsie K. and and the late Richard S. Wallis.

MRS. ELLA FONTAINE SNEED.

On July 5, 1928, the beautiful soul of ELLA FONTAINE SNEED, wife of W. G. Sneed, of Stafford, Va., abandoned its "earthly tabernacle" and passed into the spirit world. Like Enoch of old, she walked with God and was not for God took her. The loss of her earthly presence is deeply and sorely felt by her idolizing husband and children and by her many friends, for truly to know her was to love her. From her own warm heart love fell like God's sunshine, on the just and the unjust. She never spoke or thought evil of any one and was ever ready to lift the burden of others, but never imposed her own. The hectic pulse of the world beat more quietly in her presence. She was never a "knocker", but the best in every one she met "rode in majesty" to meet the purity of her soul that was symbolized by the white lilies laid lovingly on the mound beneath which rested her earthly remains awaiting "a sweet sea change" to enter into other service. The kindred earth above, to the lowly floral tribute that rested on it, was blind; the flowers smiling upward were unconscious of the sorrowing friends around, who with bowed heads and tear-dimmed eyes glimpsed all too faintly the spiritual kingdom that lies just outside the curtained window and closed door of our dull understanding. It may be that our own who have passed into the great just beyond can and do minister to our spiritual needs in a way not possible in the flesh. The Holy Comforter that was to "bring all things to the remembrance of the beloved disciples did not come to them until Christ had passed.

If the life of Ella Fontaine Sneed were written in one word, that word would be love. In this she, like her Master, met the great need of all the centuries.

"God's goodness is taught by His world's loving and the children doubt of each."

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

conducted at Calvary Episcopal Church, Twenty-first Street and Fourth Avenue, New York City, the last two weeks of July, what the rector, the Rev. Samuel M. Shoemaker, Jr., calls a "School of Life". The first week there were thirty people, the second about fifty, who came to the three daily meetings. At these all sorts of people told the stories of their own lives and of the change that had come in them through conversion.

The second week was specially for clergymen. One came from Minnesota, one was from Africa. The rest were mostly from New York, Connecticut, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Maryland. All ages were represented in the big groups, from boys and girls not yet in college to middle aged men and women. Mr. Shoemaker believes that the only answer to the problems of our complicated life today is the same that Christ gave nearly two thousand years ago. He believes that it is as possible to lead a life that is literally guided by God today, as it was then. Through this School of Life, men and women are finding an experience of God, are deepening their own experience, and are learning how to help other people as concretely and as vividly as they have been helped themselves. Through the courtesy of a member of Calvary parish who lives at 52 Gramercy Park, and of the management there, the sessions were held in the pent house on the roof at ten o'clock in the morning and eight o'clock in the evening. At five o'clock in the afternoon, the group split, the clergy and laymen meeting with Mr. Shoemaker in his temporary rectory, 126 East Twenty-fourth Street, and the women meeting together at 52 Gramercy Park.

Next year the School of Life will meet in the new parish house, which is in the process of completion on the site of the old rectory on Gramercy Park. In addition to living quarters for the clergy, the choirmaster and the staff, there are to be rooms where it will be possible for the parish to receive as guests, people who come from a distance to group meetings of this kind, and in the auditorium it will be possible to hold large meetings, while there will be pleasant rooms upstairs that can be used for smaller ones. Mr. Shoemaker, who has just returned from a seven weeks' trip abroad, brought with him as his gifts to Calvary House, a beautiful fifteenth century carving of St. Peter, about four feet high, and a Madonna of a little later period, painted on wood, which will hang in the great living room out of which his study opens. There will center much of the social life of parish. He also brought with him a Madonna cut in stone, which will probably be set into the brick walls of the building, and a number of other pictures which will add atmosphere to the rooms in which they are placed. It is hoped that there will be nothing institutional about the building, but in it will truly center the life of the parish. While all necessary organizations will be carried on, the main purpose of the work at Calvary is to bring people to a definite experience of what God can do in each man's life. Through the fellowship that will be possible in the building, where the staff will all live together, it is believed that the work will go forward with a new impetus.

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., Coadjutor

The Blue Mountain Conference at Hood College, Frederick, had the most successful year of its history for two weeks this July. The attendance passed the two hundred and fifty mark; the lecture courses could hardly be surpassed; and the devotional atmosphere, as always, was on a high note. The Early Celebration each morning was well attended, also the Personal Religion classes by Fr. Huntington; and practically the whole School was present at the Sunset Services conducted by Bishop Strider.

Very quietly throughout the past year a notable work of restoration has been going on in one of the historic old churches of Maryland. Old St. John's Church, in the Worthington Valley, has been restored and beautified until it can be ranked as in the forefront of the beautiful churches of Maryland, if not indeed of the whole country. The interior is a veritable gem of architecture and craftsmanship. This restoration has been made under the auspices of the present rector, the Rev. Theodore N. Barth, and has been made possible by the generosity of friends of the church. The work was planned and designed by Mr. James R. Edmunds, Jr., of Baltimore, assisted by Mr. John Ahlers. Mr. Walter Tobell, of Reisterstown, was the builder, and the exquisite wood-carving was done by the C. R. Meislehm Company of Baltimore.

St. John's is usually spoken of as "St. John's in the Valley" to distinguish it from St. John's at Kingsville. The first church on the present site was built in 1816 and its history is bound up with the old families of the Worthington Valley. In 1829 it was admitted as a mission in union with the Diocese of Maryland, and in 1854 became a parish church. The first church was destroyed on Christmas day, 1867, by fire, and the present little semi-Gothic building was erected soon after. Not only has this material monument been restored and beautified, but a group of people have pledged themselves that the spirit of Old St. John's shall live on in this modern day.

Fifty years ago two invalids began exchanging letters. Out of this contact there came into being a Shut-in Society which has grown into many thousands, with six strong branches. There are three classes of members: the invalids, the associates who do the active work, and the subscribing members. The object of the Society is to broaden the life of the invalid in as many ways as possible, and the spiritual part always comes first.

The Maryland Branch of the Society, which is headed by Mrs. Wm. D. Morgan, and of which Dr. Morgan is the Chaplain, was organized in 1903 and has 1,000 members. The Branch supports the only Fresh Air Home in the organization. This "Holiday Home", in the country near Pikesville, entertains about twenty-five invalids at a time in its beautifully furnished memorial rooms. It is good to feel that through these trying summer months such splendid, helpful work is going on among the afflicted.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Wythe Leigh Kinsolving, professor last session in Union College, Barboursville, Ky., is spending the summer in Virginia, and has preached at Emmanuel, Henrico; several times at Trinity, Fredericksburg; at Clifton Chapel, near Winchester; at Galilee Church, Virginia Beach, and St. Paul's, Richmond, Va.

The Rev. Warren A. Seager, for the past two years rector of St. Paul's Church, Haymarket, Va., has accepted a call to become rector of Ascension Church, W. New Brighton, Staten Island, New York City, and will enter upon his new duties the latter part of September. From 1921 to 1926 Mr. Seager was at St. Paul's Church, Nanking, China, in the Missionary District of Shanghai.

The Rev. Hazen F. Rigby is officiating at the Church of St. Mark, Brooklyn, in the absence of the Rev. Dr. Charles. At St. Stephen's, Brooklyn, vacant through the recent death of the Rev. George S. Grange, the Rev. C. de L. Harris has been in charge during July, and the Rev. C. C. Kelsey will be in charge in August.

ORDINATIONS.

Mr. Henry Irving Louttit was ordained to the Diaconate in Trinity Church, Miami, on the Sixth Sunday after Trinity, July 15, by the Bishop Coadjutor of South Florida. The candidate was presented by the Rev. J. M. Taylor, rector of St. Andrew's Church, Fort Pierce; the sermon was preached by the Rev. Robert T. Phillips, rector of Trinity Church, Miami; and the Litany was said by the Rev. C. R. Palmer, rector of the Church of the Holy Cross, Miami. The Rev. Mr. Louttit is a graduate in arts of Hobart College, and is at present a student at the Virginia Theological Seminary, from which institution he expects to graduate next year. During the summer he will assist the Rev. Mr. Phillips in Trinity Church, and will also serve as minister-in-charge of the Church of the Holy Comforter, Miami.

DEATHS.

In the sudden death of the Rev. Jacob Probst, D. D., the Diocese of Long Island has suffered a serious loss. Dr. Probst was among the senior clergy of the diocese, having spent more than twenty-seven years in continuous service in the diocese. He was born in New York City in 1867, was educated at St. Stephen's College and the Philadelphia Divinity School. He was ordained Deacon by Bishop H. C. Potter in 1895 and spent a year in Idaho with Bishop Talbot, who ordained him priest there. He was a missionary for three years in Springfield Diocese, and then for two years in the Diocese of New York. His connection with the Diocese of Long Island began when he became rector of St. Paul's Church, Patchogue, in 1901. After sixteen years there, he became rector of Trinity Church, Arlington Avenue, Brooklyn, which position he had held for eleven years when he died.

Dr. Probst had been since 1922 a deputy from this diocese to the Synod of the Province of New York and New Jersey. He was also President of the Brooklyn Clerical League and a Trustee of St. Stephen's College, and was prominent in Masonic circles. He held the degree of M. A. from St. Stephen's College, and D. D. from Philadelphia Divinity School. His funeral took place in his church on Wednesday (St. James' Day). The Rev. St. Clair Hester, D. D., President of the Standing Committee, conducted the service, assisted by the Rev. Joseph H. Ivie, and the Rev. Chas. A. Brown. A large number of the clergy attended, and parishioners filled the church. Interment was in Maple Grove Cemetery. He leaves a widow and a married daughter.

Do not too many believe no zeal to be spiritual, but what is censorious and vindictive? Whereas no zeal is spiritual that is not also charitable.—Thomas Spratt.

"THE REAL LINCOLN"

From the Testimony of His Contemporaries
By Dr. Charles L. C. Minor
Fourth Edition, Revised and Enlarged
(M. D. Carter, Editor)

A composite analysis and startling but little known facts of the Life, Character and work of the Civil War President made from data gathered from his many biographers, most of them his contemporaries.
Highly recommended to students of history by such men as Dr. P. G. Auchampaugh, head of the history department of State Teachers College, Duluth, Minn., Dr. F. L. Riley, of the history department of Washington and Lee University; Gen. Morris Schaff, of the Union Army and many others.
An invaluable book for students of the Life of Lincoln and of the Causes that led to "The Irrepressible Conflict".
Retail book dealers can secure "The Real Lincoln" from the American News Co., 131 Varick Street, New York, N. Y.
Sent postpaid by the publishers, $2.50.

Cost of Old Time Schools

From Advertisement in Southern Churchman of October 11, 1839.

FEMALE SCHOOL
At the Parsonage

Near Loretto, Essex County, Va.

The duties of this institution will be resumed on Tuesday, the first day of October next. The scholastic year consists of ten months, and is divided into two sessions of five months each. Pupils may enlist at any time, but none for a less term than one full session. No deduction will be made on account of absence, except in cases of protracted sickness.

The situation of this school, experience has amply proved to be entirely healthy. It is very retired and free from temptations to pleasure and extravagance. It is at the same time easy of access. The steamboat, running between Baltimore and Fredericksburg, passes twice a week by Port Micou, which is but a short distance from the Parsonage, and where a carriage will always be ready to receive those who may give due notice of the time of their arrival. The Bowling Green, near which the cars between Richmond and Fredericksburg pass daily, is distant about 18 or 20 miles.

It will be seen below that the course of instruction has been enlarged. This, with expenses incurred to render the institution more useful makes a small addition to the amount heretofore charged, necessary.

The teacher of Music and Modern Languages resides with his family a few miles from the Parsonage, and will give to his classes regular and efficient instruction.

The department of morals embraces Moral Philosophy, Natural Theology, Evidences of Christianity and the Study of the Bible.

The other branches taught are Orthography, Reading, Writing, Arithmetic, Algebra, Grammar and Geography, with the use of maps and globes; History, Logic, Rhetoric and Composition, Botany, Geology, Chemistry and Natural Philosophy. Also the French, Spanish and Italian languages; Music, Drawing and Painting, and lessons in Mezzotinto. Plain Needle work. Embroidery, fine and worsted.

TERMS
Per session of five months, payable in advance:

|---|---|
| For Board, Washing, Lights, &c. | $70.00 |
| Tuition in the English branches | 15.00 |
| Bed and Bedding, if not provided by the pupil | 5.00 |
| Use of Piano per month | 1.00 |

The Languages, Music, Drawing and Painting and Embroidery at the usual

Those who intend to send their children will please to enter them immediately and let them be at the Parsonage by the first day of the session. It is highly important that the school at that time go fully into operation, and greatly to the advantage of the scholars that the members of the different classes should commence their studies together. It is hoped, therefore, that parents and guardians will not fail to attend to this request.

DANIEL WEBSTER'S BIBLE CONFESSION

The following is a confession of faith written by Daniel Webster to his pastor in 1807. It rings true to those fundamentals which if believed in more widely today, would settle the grave problems of Church and State that are confronting us.

I believe in the existence of Almighty God, who created and governs the whole world. I am taught this by the works of nature and the word of Revelation.

I believe that God exists in three persons: this I learn from Revelation alone. Nor is it any objection to this belief that I cannot comprehend how one can be three, or three, one. I hold it my duty to believe, not what I can comprehend, or account for, but what my Maker teaches me.

I believe the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments to be the will and word of God.

I believe Jesus Christ to be the Son of God. The miracles which He wrought establish, in my mind, His personal authority, and render it proper for me to believe whatever He asserts. I believe, therefore, all His declarations, as well when He declares himself to be the Son of God, as when He declares any other proposition. And I believe there is no other way of salvation than through the merits of His atonement.

I believe that things past, present and to come are all equally present in the mind of Deity; that with Him there is no succession of time, nor of ideas; that, therefore, the relative terms past, present and future, as used among men, cannot, with strict propriety, be applied to Deity. I believe in the doctrines of foreknowledge and pre-destination, as thus expounded. I do not believe in those doctrines, as imposing any fatality or necessity on men's action, or any way infringing free agency.

I believe in the utter inability of any human being to work out his own salvation, without he constant aids of the Spirit of all grace.

I believe in those great peculiarities of the Christian Religion, a resurrection from the dead and a day of Judgement.

I believe in the Universal Province of God; and leave to Epicurus, and his more unreasonable followers in modern times, the inconsistancy of believing that God made a a world which He does not take the trouble of governing.

I believe Religion to be a matter, NOT OF DEMONSTRATION, BUT OF FAITH. GOD REQUIRES US TO GIVE CREDIT TO THE TRUTHS WHICH HE REAVEALS NOT BECAUSE WE CAN PROVE THEM, BUT BECAUSE HE DECLARES THEM. WHEN THE MIND IS REASONABLY CONVINCED THAT THE BIBLE IS THE WORD OF GOD, THE ONLY REMAINING DUTY IS TO RECEIVE ITS DOCTRINES, WITH FULL CONFIDENCE OF THEIR TRUTH, AND PRACTICE THEM WITH A PURE HEART.

I believe that the Bible is to be understood and received in the plain and obvious meaning of its passages; since I cannot persuade myself that a Book intended for the instruction and conversion of the whole world should cover its true meaning in any such mystery and doubt that none BUT CRITICS AND PHILOSOPHERS CAN DISCOVER IT.

I BELIEVE THAT THE REFINEMENTS AND SUBTLETIES OF HUMAN WISDOM ARE MORE LIKELY TO OBSCURE THAN TO ENLIGHTEN THE REVEALED WILL OF GOD; and that he is the most accomplished Christian scholar who hath been educated at the feet of Jesus and in the College of Fishermen.

He is not far away.
Why do we sometimes seem to be alone,
And miss the hands outstretched to meet our own?
He is the same today,
As when of old He dwelt
In human form with His disciples—when
He knew the needs of all His fellowmen,
And all their sorrows felt.
Only our faith is dim,
So that our eyes are holden, and we go
All day, and until dusk, before we know
That we have walked with Him.

Many are too self-centered to care:
The sun shines bright with radiance rare:
None are thankful, and many complain,
When dark clouds loom and bright storms of rain.

Three Years Ago Rectors Welcomed This Suggestion

Therefore it is repeated now, in the interest of wider understanding of the Church's activities.

Every Rector is asked to call to the attention of his people the advisability of subscribing NOW for The Spirit of Missions.

A notice from the Chancel and to parish organizations, a note in the Parish Paper—a statement of your own wish that people shall read The Spirit of Missions, will be of the utmost usefulness.

Such notices could refer to the Parish Representative who cares for subscriptions, and if a Representative has not yet been named, this is the time to make the appointment.

Rector's co-operation in the manner suggested will assure a substantial gain in reader strength between now and General Convention.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

He that has once yielded thoroughly to God will yield to nothing but God.—John Ruskin.

Sympathy for the lower animals is one of the noblest virtues with which man is endowed.—Darwin.

"Matter immortal! And shall spirit die?
Above the nobler, shall the less noble rise?
Shall man alone, for whom all things revive,
No resurrection know?"

When a man shall own within his soul that a sinful thing is sinful, in that act he has confessed his sin to God.—J. Campbell Morgan.

You have cramped your life, you have made it small and narrow. But never dare to think that this was God's plan for your life. He drew its architecture on a lordly scale. . . . He built you to be "temples of the Holy Ghost".—Phillips Brooks.

Help me to hate that wounds my God and King;
Transform this barren life that it may bring To Thee Thy hundredfold.
—Rev. Sidney Metcalfe.

"What is left for us, save to rise
From the gift looking to the Giver,
And from the cistern to the river,
And from the finite to infinity,
And from man's dust to God's divinity."

Faith is not shutting the eyes to believe something that is not true. It is opening them—opening eye and ear and heart and the whole nature, and submitting them to that for which they were made. It is to have the ear of the learner, the heart of a child, to listen to the Father's voice.—Hugh Black.

"The man who, though his fights be all defeats,
Still fights
Enters at last
The heavenly Jerusalem's rejoicing streets."

Egotism is a sign that a man has never been in vital union with God. No man can look into the face of God and boast of himself. The moment a man faces God he begins to talk about his sin. Isaiah in the temple saw God and began to bemoan his sin, and Peter, when he beheld the miracles of Jesus, said, "Depart from me, for I am a sinful man."—Selected.

Horton's Youth's History of the WAR OF 1861

(Revised Edition Just Published.)

A "Copperhead's" History of the War of 1861, written primarily for youthful readers, but helpful to readers and students of all ages. The earlier editions appeared about 1866-8; this revised edition of 1927 (Mary D. Carter and Lloyd T. Everett, editors) omits certain heated passages natural to the times in which Rushmore G. Horton wrote; moreover, it adds new material here and there, called forth by the developments, American and World-wide, of the past sixty years—a book valuable to those interested in data on all the leading Americans of those times, and on the deep, underlying issues, economic, institutional, and racial, involved in the great crisis of the Sixties.

WOULD JAZZ THE LITURGY

Parasites feeding on and weakening animals or birds usually try to hide. They know themselves to be harmful and unwelcome. Parasites clinging to the Protestant Episcopal Church and doing all they can to take its life and ruin its beauty are noisy, obtrusive, ceaseless seekers of publicity. They continue to cling to their prey and, doubtless, will cling while the Church represents so much as it does of the country's social and financial power. And they are not ashamed.

The Rev. Herbert Parrish, in a recent issue of the New York Churchman, attacked the liturgy of the Church. Naturally, and of course, the Rev. Guy E. Shipley, editor of The Churchman, supports this assault with what vigor he has. The language used in presenting their objections to the present liturgy and demands for abandonment of it are characteristic. Young people of the present, Mr. Parrish tell us, "cannot be particularly thrilled by our verbose and redundant liturgy of the Reformation period", which, however, may "still suit those middle-aged ladies whose long hair and long dresses derive from the period of Dickens and Thackeray".

The coarse sneer and snigger of Mr. Parrish and Mr. Shipler at dignified churchwomen and gentlewomen who have declined to follow to extremes the modern fashion and the obvious belief that the literature of the time of Dickens and Thackeray is obsolete define for us, quite distinctly, the cultural status and standards of the zealous reformers. Their notion of revision of the liturgy is to adapt it to those who give us jazz for music, the flapper with skirts above her knees as ideal womanhood, frantic following of the newest fad as the chief purpose of life; the Church to follow the fads in eager pursuit of popularity and newspaper headlines.

We may venture to imagine a morning service in an Episcopal Church according to the modernistic ideas of Mr. Parrsh and Mr. Shpler—

The church building, of course, would be entirely new. Gothic architecture is old-fashioned and suggestions of the venerable and any aspect of solemnity would fail to thrill the young. The congregation would assemble in something like a movie palace or dance hall, with illustrations from recent magazines and newspapers pasted on the walls, instead of the uninteresting stained glass windows. The chancel rail would be abolished as the administration of the Elements of the Holy Communion would be adapted to convenience, or the Communion relinquished entirely as an unnecessary relic of the Reformation period. The surplice also would be discarded as antagonistic to modern views. After half an hour or so of jazz, for attraction and entertainment of the young, the officiating clergyman would advance, in shirt sleeves, if weather suggested, airily toss aside his cigarette and, while vigorously chewing gum, open the service with something snappy and cheerful, including a touch of the comic for the amusement of the young, something like, "Hello, Everybody! Here we are again. Suppose we do some praying if any of you have anything to pray for or can think of anybody to pray to." Then might follow one of those declamatory, argumentative conversations, in the vernacular, supposed to be addressed to the Almighty, which some of us sometimes have heard from "popular" preachers.

This picture seems very horrible and hideous and approaching sacrilege to old-fashioned Episcopalians to whom the teachers, the laws, the liturgy and the traditions of the Church are sacred. Yet it seems to be an accurate portrayal of what Parrish and Shipler and their associate modernists would give us. The policy they urge for the Church is that of the milliner who, because she must, cuts her own garments to accord with the fashions, or whim, or fad, of the moment and seeks customers by giving them shapes, styles, colors, chatter they demand, regardless of requirements of good taste or even decency. It is the policy, also, of the ballyhoo man at the side show who shrieks for patronage, promising novelties, excitements and fun for all. Fortunately, or unfortunately, there are various kind of young, middle-aged and old people. Our estimations of the appeal the liturgies of the Church may make to persons are influenced, doubtless, by the kinds of persons with whom we are familiar. In this country we have many hundreds of thousands of men and women, of all ages and positions and avocations in life, who love the liturgies, understand them, can be and are thrilled and uplifted, spiritually illuminated and beautified by them.

The language of our liturgies is not that of the barber shop, the street corner nor places of popular amusement. The Protestant Episcopal Church is not intended to be an institution following the day's sensation and anxiously intent on being up-to-date in manners, dress and slang. It is founded firmly on faith in the Holy Trinity, the mercy of an Omnipotent Creator, salvation and regeneration of mankind through Jesus Christ, Lord and Saviour, as revealed through the Holy Scriptures. Its doctrines and teachings are hallowed by the blood of magnificent men and women who for them went joyfully to martyrdom; are given us by saints whose lives and work glorified humanity. Its liturgies, rituals, methods, forms were established by devoutly pious, deeply learned, deep thinking, strong men. Through this liturgy kings and peasants alike, people of all stations and different countries, generation after generation, have sought and found consolation in distress, comfort and hope, peace and strength, serene joy in life, triumphant assurance at the hour of death.

The vociferous and persistent self-advertising of these modernists will get nothing for them beyond a few casual lines of newspaper notice. If they know anything of history back of the World War, or of literature beyond the already forgotten best seller of last year, they know that their suggestions lack even the poor merit of novelty. Efforts to vulgarize the Church on pretext of making it "popular" and, in the opposite direction, to make it exclusive and aristocratic, have been removed from time to time.

They have failed always. They will fail always. Our decorous, stately, dignified liturgy and forms will be retained, will not be surrendered or deformed to suit the vulgarities and frivolities of today, which will be abhorred tomorrow. The Church will continue to invite and beseech, with increasing success, all the erring and wandering and all who desire righteousness and salvation to enter her fold. She will not follow the ways of the anxious showman and lower her standards of conduct, of good taste, dignity and good English with the hope of drawing a crowd.

This outcry for modernization of the Church, for desertion of its articles of faith and its ancient, time-honored, time-hallowed liturgies and forms, comes, probably, from coarse and sordid conception of the Church as a commercial enterprise. In shop or office the parasites and aggressive critics of establishment and management usually are disposed of promptly. The church is not so fortunately situated. Yet some of us who have different conceptions of the Church, very high and loving ideals of its character and mission, are moved to some bewilderment that the loud exponents of revolution and renovation continue to cling to an organization they labor so diligently to disfigure, debase and destroy it and its forms of worshipping God Almighty, who is the same yesterday, today and forever. Amen.

YOUR JOY OF FAITH

By Kenneth Mackenzie

A PRISON is the last place from which we should expect strong notes of gladness and gratitude. A gloomy silence, an oppressive atmosphere accompany that environment. Yet the words above are from a man aflame with the fire of an invisible kindling, and from a prison cell writing to his friends at Philippi (Phil. 1:12-26) to remind them, no doubt, that they have not forgotten that other prison triumph through which they were made trophies of the Cross (Acts 16:19-34).

Christianity is the only religion that directs every exigency of life into the stream of thanksgiving. No matter what comes, they of the faith may ever praise their Lord; and comfort themselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs (Eph. 5:19). True, that was the Old Testament ideal. (Ps. 34:1); but an awe of God which could not be dissipated by any warm rays of the sum of confidence, has ever held the Jewish people in the dank air of spiritual depression. Hence, their songs are always in a minor chord. Exultant, all-conquering, irrepressibly joyous, the New Testament Christian views all things as contributory to the pleasure of the Lord and his consequent good (Rom. 8:28). Truly, his heart is fixed on things unseen and he can trust where he cannot trace (Ps. 57:7; II Cor. 4:16-18).

While the Mohammedan is sleepily droning over his meaningless Koran, the Buddhist dreamily introspecting in set rhythm with his vibrating aspirations, both of them resigned to a dead fatalism, the Christian believer, unctioned by the Holy Spirit, promised by the resurrected Lord Jesus, sings his way through life, learning even now the "new song" of eternal praise, which is to express his undying gratitude to the Redeemer of the world (Rev. 5:9, 10). He counts it all joy when he falls into manifold trials (James 1:2, 3); he endures as seeing Him who is invisible (Heb. 11:27); he accepts the universality of the divine bequest all things are his, since he is Christ's and Christ is God's (I Cor. 3:21-23).

Now, this is not, and cannot be the effect of a fanatical enthusiasm. There must be a ground of confidence upon which this estate of perpetual ebullition can be sustained. A mere vagary would evaporate; a determined philosophy would like Epicurianism of the past, atrophy for want of vital sustenance. We may understand this spiritual ecstasy only in the light of its conferment from the living God, who is the source of its mysterious power.

And the comprehension of the fact lies in the evident truth that to give this triumphant joy, God must first possess it. We know that one cannot give what he does not have. And herein lives the sweet secret of our Christian faith. On all hands, the world about us, lives next door to the dark recesses of spiritual gloom. Men may and do invent schemes for pleasure; but in the end, the laugh has a hollow sound; the purposeful joke its suggestive solemnity. Satiety of carnal enjoyments, the emptiness of the pride of wealth, the vanity of every invention to forget the seriousness of living, calamity, disease, bereavement, failure, loss, loneliness, solitariness, desperation and the temptation to end it all, engulf the unbelieving in a whirlpool of uncertainty. The Christian beholds that the Lord over all has a designing plan for every soul voluntarily committed to Him; and that nothing can by any means fail to evoke from Him the purpose to put gladness into his willing heart. Since God Himself is the very embodiment of wholesome cheer and inextinguishable joy. As a father finds himself smothered with love and joy in the presence of his children, because he has enveloped them with his own radiance, so our God in the fellowship of His spiritual children delights over them, since He is the author of their repoicing. How significantly did Zephaniah catch this vision in the imparted prophecy, "He will rejoice over thee with joy; he will rest in his love; he will joy over thee with singing" (Zeph. 3:17, 18)!

We need, therefore, to return to first principles as we contemplate this sovereign truth. Our dear Lord, because He was anointed with the oil of joy (Heb. 1:8, 9), bestows joy to those who acknowledge His supremacy, because the springs of joy in Himself are bubbling with zest for an outlet through us. As we close this series of studies on the Holy Spirit, it were well to crystallize all the qualities of the Spirit, in this one essential of Deity prerogative. The fruit of the Spirit is joy, because the love and the peace and all the rest of the supreme characteristics of His indwelling are bound together by the sympathetic tendrils of this great provision, the joy of the Lord. For to be joyful is inherent in the Spirit. And he who is filled with the Spirit partakes of the Spirit's characteristics and supply. Have we ever felt the winsomeness of this challenge to our faith and dedication? Or are we obsessed with the dull dread that God is too far beyond us, too far from us to care to unite us to Himself Do we deem as a baseless ideality the assurance of His concern for the minutest details of our lives? Courage then befits us as we grasp the glorious truth that He not only knows and cares, loves and plans; but is exultant inthe hope of inspiring us with the like confidence which He possesses that in all the complex problems of this distracted world He has His benign plan and will see it through.

The New Testament rings with this affirmation. The night of our Lord's nativity, praise broke the silence of the starlit heavens, for the joy that a new way was to be prepared for mankind. Drawing aside the veil, He disclosed to His critics the marvelous depths of the compassion of His Father in the declaration of the joy which stirs the hosts above over the penitence of one sinner (Luke 15:7, 10). On the eve of His passion, He comforted the hearts of His bewildered disciples by saying, "These things have I spoken unto you that my joy might remain in you and that your joy might be full" (John 15:11). It was for the joy set before Him that He endured the Cross (Heb. 12:1-3). To the Roman Christians, St. Paul sends his glad notes of confidence in the benediction, "The God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing" (Rom. 15:13). The saints in Philippi were to rejoice in the Lord always (Phil. 4:4). The Colossian Christians, with the abiding of the Word of Christ in their hearts, were to sing with grace to the Lord (Col. 3:16). The Apostle Peter was so transfigured with this joy that he stimulates his friends with the jubilant call, "Whom having not seen ye love; in whom tho seeing him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory" (1 Peter 1:8). Full measure of joy was the quest of St. John to those to whom he wrote his First Epistle (1 John 1:4).

In the light of these disclosures, are we glad when things try our hearts? Do we accept the testings of life with the jubilant expectation of seeing what He can and will do? In spite of every depressing influence that forces us to the wall, can we cry out, "In all these things we are more than conquerors" (Rom. 8:37)? Then, shall we indeed have the witness that the Holy Spirit is working out in us the precious fruitage of His indwelling; for when joy succeeding love, has triumphed, the peace which passes all understanding (Phil. 4:7) shall keep us; long suffering will be normal to our estate (Col. 1:11); the meekness and the gentleness of Christ (2 Cor. 10:1), the goodness and the faith and the self-control, embodied in the fruit of the Spirit (Gal. 5:22, 23), will crown the life with the chaplet of divine dignity; and men will read in us the message of God's attractiveness.

Shall we look at this matter with sincere longing? Shall we live to fulfil this blessed mission? We may be misunderstood by those who do not behold our vision.

We shall undoubtedly find occasion for wondering why some things are permitted to be. But to give pleasure to our heavenly Father by showing forth the divine nature (2 Peter 1:4) and in some degree to sense His commendation, "My dear child" (Eph. 5:1), makes life potent and worth while.

NOTES ON THE PRAYER BOOK

The Reverend W. F. Bumsted

How the Order for Morning and Evening Prayer Came Down to Us.

THE average member of the Church has very little idea that between the covers of our Book of Common Prayer are packed something like 1,700 years of Church History and worship.

To get an adequate idea of what Morning and Evening Prayer are, for instance, and how we have arrived at the present form, let us look back about the same 1,700 years and see what we can find.

The earliest description of Sunday worship which we have is to be found in Justin Martyr writing about 150 A. D.

The service was as follows:

1. A lesson from the apostles or prophets.
2. A homily upon it by the minister.
3. Prayers in which all the congregation joined.
4. The Kiss of Peace.
5. Presentation of the Holy Elements—Water being mixed with the wine.
6. Prayer and Thanksgiving by the President.
7. Reception of the Elements by the congregation, a portion being reserved to be taken to absent members by the deacons.
8. Almsgiving for the relief of the sick, the poor, widows, orphans and prisoners.

Here is the first outline of a liturgy. The word liturgy means any kind of service, and as the Holy Communion was the chief service of the early Church it came eventually to signify that service.

Services like this must have been common, that is to say, in use in several parts of the Christian world, for Origen talks of appointed prayers. Cyprian mentions customary prayers—"Preces Solenes".

Liturgies are still extant which have been used about this time. (i. e.) Sub. apostolic times.

That ascribed to St. James was the Liturgy of Jerusalem, and was used in the third century, for St. Cyril wrote a comment on it in the fourth century.

The Liturgy of St. Mark used in church of Alexandria.

St. Chrysostom's used in church of Constantinople.

St. Basil's used in churches of Cappadocia.

Nazarabic and others used in Spain.

Again a strong point in liturgical worship favor is the fact that at the Council of Laodicea, 372 A. D., a decree states that the same liturgy or form of prayer should be always used, both at the ninth hour and in the evening.

Sext or Midday sang 12 o'clock.

Nones or Noon sang 3 o'clock.

Vespus or Even sang in evening.

Comphue or Night sang bedtime.

Pontifical—Offices administered by a Bishop only—Confirmation, Ordination, Consecration of Churches, Dedications, &c.

All of these were in Latin. Services by the priest and for the priest, with just an occasional word for the people, for instance, a Canon of Egbert, Archbishop of York in 740 A. D., said that "Every priest do with exactness instil the Lord's Prayer and the Creed into the people committed to him". Similar injunctions were made in the eleventh century and in the thirteenth.

In January, 1549, an act of uniformity directed that this book be used on and after Whitsunday, June 9.

This book was the patent of our Book of Common Prayer.

Cramner took the old service books and from them condensed the seven-hour services into two, our Morning and Evening Prayer.

Now, having them all in English instead of Latin so that they were services that the people could enjoy and take part in, a revision was made in 1552, and in 1559, in 1604, and lastly in 1662; from this and the Scottish books of 1637 and 1764 we get our American book of 1789. As we use our Prayer Book at Morning Prayer then let us realize something of the wonderful work done by the men of the Reformation, and pause as we say the Te Deum, and think that for over 1,500 years has it been used in our churches.

This Canon was made obligatory on the whole Church by the Council of Chalcedon in 451 A. D.

Now, whilst this outline was probably the same throughout the Christian world, there would be undoubtedly variations due to local custom and practice. Hence in time there grew up several different and distinct types of liturgies.

The circumstances surrounding Augustine's mission to England in 596 bear out these facts. He expected to find an extinct Church, but instead found numbers of Christians driven out by the invading West Saxons into Wales. With them were seven Bishops with their attendant priests and deacons.

These men even in this early day had very strong and distinct news as to the independence of the Church in England, and were not prepared to receive the Roman missionary except on terms of equality.

The chief difficulty being the difference as above between their own liturgy and that of Rome.

Augustine, very much worried by this, referred to Gregory the Great, and asked his advice by a series of questions, one of which was:

"Whereas the faith is one, why are the customs of the churches different?"

Another:

"Why is one manner of celebrating the Holy Communion used in the Holy Roman Church and another in that of the Gauls?"

The reply of Gregory was very wise and Catholic, and to it we owe the fact that today we have an independent form of worship.

It was as follows:

"You, my brother, are acquainted with the customs of the Roman Church in which you were brought up. But it is my pleasure that if you have found anything either in the Roman or the Gallican or any other Church which may be more acceptable to Almigthy God, you carefully make choice of the same, and sedulously teach the Church of the English, which is at present new in the faith, whatsoever you can gather from the several churches, for things are not to be loved for the sake of places, but places for the sake of good things. Select, therefore, from each church those things that are pious, religious and correct, and when you have made these up into one body, instil it into the English for their use."

The liturgy spoken of as the Roman is the Sacramentary of St. Gregory, that of the Gallican Church being derived from the liturgy of the Church of Ephesus.

Augustine endeavored to make up a common liturgy, and being prejudiced by his own Roman use naturally favored it, but his efforts failed at the Council of Cloveshoo 747 A. D.

About the time of the Conquest another attempt was made by Osmund, Bishop of Salisbury, and he left behind him the several books that made up the Sarum use, adopted in 1085 A. D., and later introduced into other parts of England, and as a writer of 1256 A. D. said:

"The Church of Salisbury being conspicuous above all other churches like the sun in the heavens, diffusing its light everywhere, and supplying their defects."

This use then, combined with the uses of Hereford, Bangor, Lincoln, were the background for the compilers of our Prayer Book.

These uses were a collection of service books as follows:

The Legenda—Containing lessons read at Matins from Holy Scripture or Homilies or lives of the Saints.

The Psalterium—Book of Psalms divided into portions, so that whole might be sung in the course of a week.

The Troparium—Containing the verses or Tropi, suug before and after the Introit in Holy Communion.

The Ordinale—Also called Pica or Pie, a table of reference to find the proper office for every Holy Day in the year.

The Missal—Which was in four volumes.

The Antiphover—Choir instructions for High Mass.

The Lectionary—The Epistles.

The Evangelistarium—The Gospels.

The Sacramentary—The prayers of the mass for the priest.

The Manual—Occasional offices—Baptism, Marriage, Burial, &c.

The Processional—Forms to be used in processions on certain days.

Breviary—So called because these last were shortened by Gregory VII. This was the hour book, and contained the offices to be said at the seven canonical hours, which were:

Matins, or Uhtsang, in old English, with Nocturns and hands said at break of day.

Prime or Primesang, 6 o'clock.

Tierce or Undersang, 9 o'clock.

Then in the fourteenth century the light of day began to shine in what was an unenlightened and dark England.

John Wycliffe translated the Bible into English.

In 1525 appeared the first printed Bible—William Tyndal's. Then the first Version by Authority, the great Bible of 1539.

Improved editions of the Sarum Breviary were made in 1516 and 1531, and a last in 1541. This was commanded to be used throughout the Province of Canterbury, and at the same time every curate was directed to read to the people each Sunday and Holy Day one chapter of the New Testament in English.

In 1543 Cramner proposed a revision of the service books.

In 1544 a new English liturgy was published.

In 1548 an order for Holy Communion in English was compiled.

In the same year, 1548, King Edward VI appointed the Archbishop of Canterbury and others to "Make one convenient and meet order of Common and Open Prayer and administration of the Sacraments for use in the realm, 'having as well eye and respect to the most sincere and pure Christian religion taught by the Scripture as to the usages in the primitive Church'."

Let us realize again that:

The Collect for Peace goes back to Gilasius, Bishop of Rome, 492 A. D.

The Collect for Grace, from Gregory 590.

The Prayer for the Clergy from Gilasius, 492.

The Prayer for St. Chrysostom from.

The early liturgies of St. Basil and St. Chrysostom.

And let us realize also something of the heritage that has been passed to us from the martyrs and saints of old and in realizing it endeavor once more; let us build up a reverence for this book that is second only to the Bible in the heart of every member of the Anglican Communion.

RAYS OF LIGHT FROM GOD'S LAMP

By W. W. Rugh

Founder and Associate of the Bible Institute of Pennsylvania 1418 North Sixteenth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Note: These simple studies in God's Word are intended for home and class use by those who wish to know our blessed Lord and to make Him known.

VIII. What is the Purpose for which the Bible was written?

"All Scripture is given by inspiration of God and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works" (2 Tim. 3:16, 17).

1. His Word was written for doctrine, or teaching, to teach us to know the facts concerning sin and salvation (Matt. 28:19, 20; John 14:26; Isa. 55:11; 1 Cor. 1:19-21).

Before we could know our need of a Saviour we needed first to be taught the facts concerning our lost condition out of Christ. Our unrighteous condition before God was made manifest by the revelation of His righteousness on the cross, in judging sin and the sinner in the death of His Son (Rom. 1:16 to 3:20).

The same revelation of God's righteousness which revealed the exceeding sinfulness of sin at the same time reveals the marvelous salvation provided for all who will believe in Jesus Christ and His finished work (Rom. 3:21-26; Heb. 10:1-18).

God's Word, and not man's theories, is the only reliable and absolutely correct source of information concerning the facts of redemption accomplished through Christ and His work (Heb. 2:3).

2. His Word was written to reprove, or convince, both of sin and salvation. The Holy Spirit uses the Word of God, written, or living, as incarnate in the lives of believers, to convict men of sin, and also to convince them of salvation when they believe the gospel (John 16:8; Heb. 4:12, 13; Acts 2:14-37; 13:33-43; John 3:36; 5:24; 6:37; Eph. 2:8, 9; Titus 3:5).

3. His Word was written to correct, or set in a right or upright position. In order to be corrected, or come into a right position before God, the sinner must repent, acknowledging that he is a sinner, deserving of God's wrath (Luke 7:29, 30; Acts 2:38; 3:19; Jer. 17:9; Isa. 1:18).

Confession is also a step necessary for correction on the part of a believer. The sinner can but confess that he is a sinner, dead in trespasses and in sins, while the believer confesses his sins and is restored to the right attitude in fellowship with God (1 John 1:9; Ps. 32:5; 2 Sam. 12:13; Isa. 55:7).

4. His Word was written to instruct in righteousness those who are corrected (Ps. 119:11, 105; 32:8; Isa. 45:2; 58:11; Eph. 5:17; Col. 1:9; Rom. 12:1, 2; Prov. 3:5, 6).

5. The ultimate purpose for which God's Word was written is to perfectly equip the man of God for God's appointed service (1 Tim. 3:17; 2 Cor. 9:8; John 15:16; Eph. 2:10).

AN ANNIVERSARY.

1888-1928.

Frederick W. Neve.

Life has its sacred times and days,
When from the long and tedious ways
Of every day, we come at last
To days of gold linked with the past,
When we look backward on the scene
And thankful are for what has been,
And in the spirit of true praise
We live on heights for many days,
And would live on until the end,
If one were not forced to descend
Unto the plain and level way,
Where thoughts of gold are turned to gray.

And so the thought has come to me:
Why should we not strive to be free,
And rise upon the wings of praise,
And on the heights live all our days
With all the glamour and the glow,
While still we tread the plain below?
If one could reach that second birth,
Then heaven would have come to earth,
And one would wear a diadem
And dwell in New Jerusalem.

---

Said the robin to the sparrow:
"I should really like to know
Why these anxious human beings
Rush about and worry so."
Said the sparrow to the robin:
"Friend, I think it must really be
That they have no heavenly Father
Such as cares for you and me."

PETER.

Now he walked on the angry wave,
Now he sank in the watery grave;
Now he rose in triumphant faith,
Now he fell toward threatening death,
Peter, the wave man.

Now he firmly stood for the Lord,
Based his life on the living Word,
Saw in Jesus the Godhead shine,
Dared to call Him the Christ divine,
Peter, the rock man.

Now he rebukes Christ in his pride,
Now he has even his Lord denied;
Now he uses a silly sword,
Now he shrinks at a maiden's word,
Peter, the wave man.

Now he weeps in his agony;
Now he listens: "Lovest thou me?"
Now and for aye, as at Pentecost,
He stands for the Saviour that once he lost,
Peter, the rock man.

Rough old fisherman, brotherly dear,
Near to my weakness, very near,
Far from your folly I would flee.
Brave with your boldness I would be,
Peter, a rock man!

—Amos R. Wells, D. D.

DEGENERATION DISAPPROVES DARWINISM

(Arthur I. Brown, M. D., C. M., Fellow Royal College of Surgeons, Edinburgh.)

IT is possible to marshal such an array of incontrovertible proof of the complete abandonment by Reason and Science of Darwin's concept of evolution, that every logical and illogical prop will be ruthlessly torn from beneath the evolutionary dream-structure, and nothing left but a mass of irreparable ruins.

Authorities, living and dead, agree on this. The bodies of the men who today deliver so vociferously their evolutionary fiats will soon be crumbling to their primordial dust, but even then they expect their present views to be considered the authoritative utterances of scientific leaders. So, no one can legitimately challenge the dead witnesses who shall give evidence for the prosecution in the case of "Creation vs. Evolution".

Evolutionists usually affirm that they are not advocating Darwinism, because, since Darwin's day, there has been discovered a mass of facts not available to him, compelling many changes in his argument; without, however, affecting the "truth of the great fundamental doctrine of organic evolution". This expression is in constant use, but, no matter how vigorous the protest, the entire argument rests primarily and ultimately on the Darwinian postulate of gradual, minute, prolonged and transmissible changes, due to adaptational responses to altered environment, and supplemented occasionally by "mutation" or sudden leaps.

Whatever has since been grafted on, in an unsuccessful attempt to minimize its inherent and obvious inconsistencies and impossibilities, every one knows that Darwin's theory, as defined by himself, involves the idea of the constant selection by Nature—acting over interminable periods of time, stretching into countless millions of years—of minute favorable variations in the physical form and constitution of living things, and the sloughing off of other unfavorable or hindering accretions. The lucky and conscious possessor of these chance acquisitions was thus given a considerable advantage over his less fortunate contemporaneous rivals in the ceaseless life struggle, an advantage which he was quick to appreciate, and because of which was able to out-strip, conquer and annihilate his weaker associates, who consequently disappeared.

According to this view, various conditions such as climate, food and sexual selection, assisted this hereditary endowment, and accounted for the "survival of the fittest", even if it did not account for the "arrival of the fittest".

In time—and the hypothesis demands almost an eternity of time—these changes, inherited, acquired and transmitted from one generation to another, brought about such an alteration in one or more descendants of the original protoplasmic germ cell, that a vastly different or wholly new type is said to have resulted, the simple and undifferentiated cell becoming more complex and highly differentiated, until after passing through the various species of plant and animal, homo sapiens—modern man—arrived, about half a million years ago, triumphant and kingly, the crowned and perfected developmental achievement of the organic world.

It was a terrific struggle, courageously undertaken, laboriously and skillfully fought against great odds, but eventually victoriously culminated, when most of the physical defects, the vicious instincts, and degrading animal tendencies had been overcome and discarded.

The story recites how man gradually and wearily emerged from the miasmatic depths of the lowly sea-slimy stage to the dizzy heights of his present physical and intellectual attainment.

According to this conception, the fall of man becomes a myth, and if the human race, individually or collectively, occasionally or habitually, shows disappointing traces of animal ancestry, that is unavoidable and to be expected. Sin, in fact, is a necessity, and man ought not to be held responsible for his evil proclivities, seeing that the interval since our emergence from the brute stage is comparatively brief and all too short to allow of that perfection of mind and spirit which will ultimately be ours. Man is still struggling bravely towards the ideals.

Yet, we are given to understand, the body has long ago reached its peak of perfected development and cannot be expected to show further progress. Why this should be so, we are not told. This observation, of course, makes unnecessary an explanation of the absence of even the slightest change in the bodily organism, during the several thousands of years man has been subjected to more or less intensive observation.

Our mental, moral and spiritual condition will continue to progress and evolve, until eventually—so the comforting tale unfolds—we may develop to the point of absolute perfection where we shall lose our identity in the "Absolute", or the "Universal Consciousness", whatever these terms connote, and then having become gods in very truth, we shall be absorbed in the most glorious Nirvana ever conjectured by the wildest flight of an erotic imagination.

This brief resume reveals the essential features of the theory—natural selection in the struggle for existence, survival of the fittest, transmission of acquired characteristics and mutation. These processes are said to result in the production of widely changed or wholly new forms or species, the latter term being understood to mean, a class of living things possessing distinct identity of form and structure, sterile with other species, but capable of indefinite interbreeding, with members of the same species, the progeny also capable of reproducing other similar individuals.

An endeavor is made to minimize the significance of this distinction between species and variety. Indefinite terminology makes it easy to speak grandiloquently and indulge in impressive but meaningless generalizations as to the "universal law of progress and development in all departments of life", as of development or progress induced by extraneous forces such as the patient labor and acquired skill of man, were identical with the process of evolution resulting from the action of inherent resident forces.

Organic evolution in its proper sense must be independent of influence from without, other than environmental conditions.

We hear little of the well-known fact that all plants and animals, no matter how highly developed and improved by artificial care, invariably revert to their original type if the hand of man is removed. The finest breed of race horses will speedily degenerate to the scrubby wild animal of the plains. The luscious seedless orange, the cultivated plum, peach, apricot or apple, the beautiful and fragrant Marechal Neil rose, if left to themselves, all return to their primary simple forms. Degeneration, not evolution, is the fixed law of nature and this applies to all departments of life.

Savage races are not examples of backward people struggling upwards to civilization—they are degenerate nations which have fallen from a higher state.

Dr. James G. Walsh, Professor of Psychology at Cathedral College, New York, makes this statement:

"The cave man of 20,000 years ago was more civilized and farther advanced than we are today. Man has not progressed. The unhappiest age of the world is right now. The happiest age was the thirteenth century. The most advanced age recorded of man, with respect to his civilization, his happiness, and his inventiveness, was that of the cave dweller. Man thinks he is progressing, but I want to puncture this complacency of his. There has not been a new thing in architecture for 400 years. The greatest novel ever written was 300 years ago, Cervantes' "Don Quixote". The greatest play ever written was Aeschylus' "Prometheus". Homer, the wandering Greek poet, wrote the greatest epic poem centuries before Christ. The Maya Indians of Yucatan, about 600 A. D., had the finest civilization America has ever known in sculpture, art and humanity.

"The pre-Inca Indians made the most beautiful and finest fabric man has ever woven or seen. The Maya Indians were the first even in smoking. Their women were the first to chew gum and paint their faces and bodies."

These facts should somewhat curb our complacency and conceit.

Modern music has no Beethoven, nor Mendelssohn, Mozart, no Chopin, no Wagner. Where can we find a Raphael, a Velasquez, a Rembrandt, or a Michael Angelo? Who today could build the Taj Mahal? Where have vanished the wonderful lost arts of the ancient Egyptians, our superiors in works of superlative skill?

What modern genius with the same facilities would attempt the colossal task of raising the Great Pyramid of Cheops to the blue dome of heaven? What scientists know the secret of orientation possessed by the builder of this great stone monument on the burning sands of the Egyptian desert? How did he acquire his knowledge of the earth's rotundity so that he was able to conform his foundation to the exact curve of the globe?

What are the equals of Socrates and Sappho, of Plato and Pythagoras? Think of the complex of civilizations of Indian, Egypt, Assyria, Persia, Phoenica of Carthage, Greece and Rome, their pomp and power, ordinances of justice, architecture, horticulture, palaces, temples, theatres, baths, swift, iron-headed galleys, magnificently equipped phalanxes and legions the treasures of Croesus, the magnificence of Nero, and the banquets of Lucullus.

Recall the wonderful breastplates fashioned by Demetrius Polocetes, so hard that they could scarcely be scratched by missiles hurled from an engine at fifty paces.

Remember that gigantic ship of Ptolemaus Philopator, manned by 4,000 sailors and the dexterous weaving of an Egyptian lady's wrap, large enough to enfold her as a shawl, and so fine that it could be drawn through her finger ring; the colors so brilliant and fast that they are perfect after the lapse of 4,000 years.

Think of their handiwork in gold, of the ornaments for the Jewish Tabernacle, of the jewelry of the Princesses, Hathor Sut and Sent Senbet of the twelfth Dynasty, found in the pyramid of Dokshur and now 4,000 years of age. Think of their necklets of gold, amethysts and turquoises, bewitching shells of gold, miniature pieces of furniture, and breast ornaments, wrought in enamels of unsurpassed beauty.

In China and Egypt, thousands of years ago, the art of breeding fish was in full swing. In the same countries the monarchs caused their enormous blocks of porphry and granite to be sawn through with the utmost precision, by means of diamond and sapphire saws, 3,000 years before modern engineers had accomplished what was called a wonderful "scientific triumph" in working on the St. Gothard tunnel.

Who has not heard of the luxuriance of Solomon's court, to which the beautiful Queen of Sheba paid admiring tribute? What city can compare with ancient Babylon and its Tower of Belus 600 feet high, surmounted by golden statues of the Sun-god and girded by twelve temples?

Where shall we find the equal of the hanging gardens of Babylon watered by powerful hydraulic engines, and embracing all kinds of exotic trees and plants, with ornate palaces bordering the river for miles? What a city it was, covering an area twice as great as Paris, encircled by a wall 400 feet high and 100 feet broad!

In the New World it is the same. Ancient Mexico boasted of its wealth and luxuriance, the golden vessels of the Emperor, his mantles bordered with humming-bird feathers, each worth 10,000 golden ducats, the city itself resplendent with temples and palaces, lined with gold and silver plate.

It surely requires a large degree of effrontery or ignorance to hold as cheap these mighty civilizations which swayed the course of history for hundreds of years. True, we dispatch telegrams, travel by automobile and aeroplane, and have harnessed the ethereal waves, but the ancients were our equals and superiors in wealth, physique, skill, sagacity and wisdom. They feared their parents, we our spouses. Their women's hair was coiffured, ours is bobbed and shingled. Which displays more art and civilization?

But where are these affluent and powerful nations today? Where Tyre, Queen of the Sea, once stood, is now but a group of beggarly fisher cabins. The site of the palaces of Nebuchadnezzar provides lairs for lion and jackal. It is the haunt of the Bedouin, and lies buried in fever-infested swamps amidst the reeds of the Euphrates.

Tourists saunter among the ruins of Palmyra, while Mesopotamia and Persia are for the most wilderness.

Woe begone fellaheen crouch in forlorn clay huts throughout the land of the Pharaohs. The cities of Carthage, once metropolis and mart, lie deserted and tenantless, little reminding us that in bygone days they glistened in peerless magnificence. If the haughty merchants of Phoenicia, or the Princess of Carthage, or Nebuchadnezzar, Cyrus or Alexander the Great can look down, they see nothing but departed glories.

Mexico has declined to a third-rate country, overrun with poverty, rapine and rebellion.

But one ancient glory remains. In splendid and magnificent isolation above and beyond all human literary productions stands the Bible—serene, majestic, impregnable, indifferent alike to ridicule, hatred and bitter assault, supreme in its history, its ethics, and its spiritual concepts. By all known standards and viewed from any angle, it proves itself to be the perfect and infallible Book, every page showing the imprint of the omnipotent finger of God, and the divine illumination of an Omniscient Deity .

By any of its laws or processes can evolution explain the Bible or the Christ of the Bible—the Christ who stands apart from all other beings who ever trod this earth, the God-man infinitely removed in character, power, wisdom and knowledge, from all who went before or who have followed since? If evolution is a fact, let it explain Him or produce another such as He!

FAMILY PRAYERS

Collected by the Right Reverend William Meade, D. D.
From the Scriptures—Morning or evening.

O Thou King, eternal, immortal and invisible; clouds and darkness are round about Thee, judgment and justice are the habitation of Thy throne. Thou art the high and lofty one who inhabitest eternity, whose name is holy; and yet we bless Thee that Thou art not far from every one of us, being ever more ready to hear than we to pray.

With humble boldness we would approach unto Thee by that new and living way which Thou hast consecrated by the blood of Jesus. With angels and archangels, and all the company of heaven, we would laud and magnify Thy glorious name. Thou art our God, and we will praise Thee; our fathers' God, and we will exalt Thee. Thou art God alone. All nations before Thee are as nothing, less than nothing and vanity. In Thy hand is the soul of every living thing, and the breath of all mankind. The eyes of all wait upon Thee, and Thou givest them meat in due season; Thou openest Thine hand and satisfiest the desires of every living thing. Thou art good and doest good, and Thy mercy is to the sons of men.

Therefore, O Lord, we, who are but dust and ashes, will take it upon us to speak unto Thee. We are not worthy, O Lord, of the very least of all Thy mercies. It is of Thy mercy that we are not consumed. We would humble ourselves under our mighty hand. Make us to know our transgression and sin. Grant us that godly sorrow that knoweth repentance not to be repented of. Wash us thoroughly from our iniquity, and cleanse us from our sin. Give us wise and understanding hearts. Increase our faith, and perfect that which is lacking in us, that we may be able to overcome the world. As we have received Christ Jesus our Lord, so enable us to walk in Him, and be rooted and grounded in Him. May Thy love, O God, be shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost, and may we love one another with a pure heart fervently, so that we may know that we are the disciples of Christ.

Lord, give us grace to deny ourselves, and take up our cross daily, that we may keep under our bodies and bring them into subjection. Set a watch, O Lord, before our mouths, and keep the door of our lips, that we may not offend in words. Make us wise as serpents, and harmless as doves. In everything may we give thanks unto Thee, O Lord; but especially may we be joyful in Thy great salvation. When there yas no eye to pity. and no arm to save, even Thou didst say unto us, Live. While we live, therefore, we will praise the Lord, and sing praises unto our God while we have any being. May all the people that now sit in darkness see this great light and rejoice in it. O Lord, arise, and have mercy upon Zion, and let the time to favor her come. Let Thy Word have free course and be glorified in all places; and soon may its knowledge cover the earth, as the waters do the great deep. These, our prayers, we offer up, hoping to be heard, not for our righteousness of Him in whom Thou art well pleased, calling Him Thy beloved Son, in whom is our only hope, and in whose comprehensive words we would further pray for ourselves and all mankind: Our Father, who art in heaven, etc.

FAVORITE SCRIPTURE VERSES

(In this space each week will appear a favorite passage of Scripture as sent in by a different reader. Every one is, therefore, invited to send us their favorite verse. It is suggested that all who can, join with the rest of us in committing to memory the verse which so appears here each week, including its location in the Holy Book; and in due time your memory chets will be laden with choice eternal treasures, indeed—"Thy word have I hid in my heart" (Ps. 119:11).

This week the following verse was submitted by F. L. M., Chatham, N. J.:

"The name of the Lord is as a strong tower,
The righteous runneth into it and is safe!"

—Prov. 18:10.

Who will send one from the far-away places, as well as very near us?

Only one life to live,
It will soon be past.
What's done for Jesus
Is sure to last.

What does it profit a bank to advertise friendly, helpful, courteous service if a corps of sour pessimists is behind the windows?

"Grace! 'tis a charming sound, Harmonious to the ear. . ."
—Philip Doddridge.

"If any man hath not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of His" (Rom. 8:9).

TENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY

By Berkeley Minor

These lectures were prepared by the writer, who taught in the Virginia Female Institute, now Stuart Hall, for about thirty-five years, during the latter part of his work there, and those for the Sundays in the school year were used in his Bible class instruction. The others were prepared later in order to make the series complete.. We are glad to publish them in a somewhat shortened form because we believe they will be of interest to many of our readers in Virginia and elsewhere, who attended this old school during those years, and for the deeply spiritual view of the writer.

Collect. Let Thy merciful ears, O Lord, be open to the prayers of Thy humble servants; and that they may obtain their petitions, make them to ask such things as shall please Thee; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THIS appeal to God's mercy makes it well for us to dwell a little on that attribute of heavenly Father. It is strongly set forth in the Old Testament in God's dealings with His chosen people, and to some extent as it was shown to the rest of mankind, though the limitations of that mercy in those days, as compared with the all-abounding mercy of the Christian dispensation, is one of the great mysteries of God's dealings with mankind. One must just fall back and rest on Him and His infinite goodness and power; who said to Moses (Ex. 33, 19): "I will be gracious to whom I will be gracious and will show mercy on whom I will show mercy," with a full assurance that some day, in some way, we shall find out that His will is not arbitrary and unreasonable. Even now in this dispensation of the Holy Spirit God's favor seems very unequally dispensed to mankind, though far more widely given than before Christ came. Our perverse wills so often thwart His blessed will, "who willeth that all men should be saved, and come to the knowledge of the truth" (1 Tim. 2, 4) R. V. We are tempted to say, why did the Almighty Maker make them so; endow them with a liberty to be used apparently by most of their eternal ruin? No answer can be given save Isaiah's (chap. 45, 9, R. V.): "Woe unto him that striveth with his Maker. A potsherd among the potsherds of the earth. Shall the clay say to Him that fashioneth it; What makest Thou? or the work, He hath no hands?" And St. Paul's (Rom. 9, 20); "Nay, but O man, who art thou that repliest against God? Shall the thing formed say to him that formed it, Why hast thou made me thus? Hath not the potter power over the clay, of the same lump to make one vessel unto honor, and another unto dishonor?" Those who know this attribute of Deity in Christ, God manifest in the flesh, must acknowledge its wonderful abundance and fulness.

THE Epistle for this tenth Sunday after Trinity is 1 Cor. 12, 1-11, and teaches us of "spiritual gifts". Such spiritual gifts as the Epistle mentions, and all such, are what the Collect tells us we should ask; for they must be pleasing to God, and we shall surely receive them in such measure as He thinks best for us, and He knows. Nine gifts of the Spirit are given here by the Apostle: 1. Wisdom; 2. knowledge; 3. faith; 4. healing; 5. miracles; 6. prophecy; 7. discerning of spirits; 8. tongues; 9. interpretation of tongues. The last verse of the twelfth chapter of 1 Cor., from which our Epistle is taken, is, "Desire earnestly the greater gifts". All these nine gifts of the Spirit are clearly in the class of "greater gifts" to be earnestly desired, and sought of God; but they are not all equally great. The first three and the sixth are not limited, as the rest, to the apostolic age, viz: wisdom, knowledge, faith and prophecy (taken in the sense of teaching, or preaching, "speaking for God"). Of the four, wisdom is the first, for the Apostle evidently means the wisdom of Prov. 3rd, 19 et seq.: "Happy is the man that findeth wisdom, and the man that getteth understanding, for the merchandise of it is better than the merchandise of silver, and the gain thereof than fine gold. She is more precious than rubies, and none of the things thou canst desire are to be compared to her. Length of days is in her right hand, in her left hand riches and honor. Her ways are ways of pleasantness and all her paths are peace."

The possessor of such wisdom is clearly richly gifted with all Christian graces and virtues, with knowledge, faith, and above all charity, so beautifully sung by St. Paul in the next chapter (13th of 1 Cor.).

As this heavenly wisdom must include charity, it is not specifically mentioned here among the gifts of the Spirit; and then, too, Paul gives the whole of the next chapter (the thirteenth), to the praise of this greatest of God's gifts, introducing the subject in the last verse of this twelfth chapter, thus (having enumerated these most excellent gifts of the Spirit, he says-: "But covet earnestly the best gifts; and yet I give a more excellent way," and shows that charity is even greater than faith and honor.

Let us find full comfort in His reply to one of its most faithful servants, who needed bodily health so much, who offered one of the most earnest prayers ever made for this boon, and would doubtless have made good use of it; for who ever, since worked more earnestly and successfully than Paul, the Apostles to the Gentiles? His prayer "thrice" besought of the Lord was not answered as the petitioner wished and hoped; for the "stake in the flesh" did not depart from him. Yet observe, for our great comfort, that Paul was perfectly satisfied with this answer, and had grace given him so sufficient to enable him even to glory in the infirmity, as proof of God's goodness and kindness, who saw that His gifted servant was in danger of being exalted above measure by the abundance of the revelations; and so let the messenger of Satan buffet Him (2 Cor. 12, 7-9). How little Satan knew that he was only helping in building up that kingdom of God in this world, by this persecution of the great Apostle, whom he regarded, no doubt, and justly, as one of the greatest factors in spreading that kingdom over the world, and whom he would gladly have crippled by this bodily infirmity. Paradise has been lost through him, and had not been regained through Christ, but for God's great love for His lost people. Satan had not been able to send a messenger to buffet Jesus so. No fear of His being "exalted above measure" ,the God-man; but the imperfect mortal had to be so disciplined. Nay, rather let us meditate on verses 67 and 75 of Ps. 119: "Before I was troubled I went wrong," "I know, O Lord, that Thy judgments are right, that Thou of Thy faithfulness hast caused me to be troubled. Then let me welcome trouble, O God, and accept it thankfully, with grace to use it aright."

THE Gospel for the tenth Sunday after Trinity is St. Luke 19, 41-47, Jesus' second lament over Jerusalem, placed by Dr. Edward Robinson (in his Harmony) on Palm Sunday just after the triumphant entry. Dr. Robinson places the first lament in Perea, soon after the raising of Lazarus. The third he places at Jerusalem on the Tuesday or Wednesday before Good Friday; it is so much like the first as to make me wonder if some mistake as to time has not been made.

This lament of our Gospel for the tenth Sunday after Trinity gives details of the awful fate impending over the doomed city, which are not in the other two, but lacks the beautiful simile of the hen gathering her brood under her wings, which makes the other two so pathetic. But on the other hand, the first and third accounts lack the "Jesus wept", tears drawn from Him by what "might have been" had Jerusalem known the time of her visitation, those saddest words "of tongue or pen".

All Christians of mature age, or nearly all, must look back sadly at "visitations" neglected, not recognized at the time as the wooing of the Holy Spirit, and be thankful that all were not neglected, as by this favored city; and each one may be the last; who can say that the one accepted was not the last that would be vouchsafed? Looking back, what numberless such visitations memory brings back! I refer not only to great Pentecostal occasions, when the outpourings of the Holy Ghost are showers of blessing, scattered full and free (No. 589 and Ezek. 34, 26), almost seeming to "compel the wandered to come in" (No. 584 and Luke 14, 23), but whisperings of the same gentle Spirit.

I suppose that the guilt and punishment of the lost, whether city or individual sinner, is proportioned to the visitations offered and rejected. Certainly the guilt and punishment of Jerusalem was very great, and her visitations were very many, much more than were Capernaum's, and Chorazin's and Bethsaida's, on whom will fall more severe punishment in the Day of Judgment, than on Tyre and Sidon and the land of Sodom (Matt. 2:20-24), as Jesus declared, when He upbraided the cities, wherein most of His mighty works were done, because they repented not. I cannot leave this Gospel without quoting Keble's verses on v. 41: "And when He was come near He beheld the city and wept over it."

(Note. He refers to Xerxes' weeping over the missions he was leading over to Europe.)

Or doth He feel the Cross
Already in His heart,
The pain, the shame, the scorn, the loss?
Feel even His God depart?
No! though He knew full well
The grief that angels cannot tell—
Our God in agony.
It is not this; He mourns;

Such might be martyr's tears,
When his last lingering look he turns
On human hopes and fears;
But here ne'er or saint
The secret load might know,
With which His spirit waxeth faint;
His is a Saviour's woe.
"If thou hadst known, even thou,
At least in this thy day,
The message of thy peace; but now
'Tis passed for aye away;
Now foes shall trench thee round,
And lay thee even with earth,
And dash thy children to the ground,
Thy glory and thy mirth."
And doth the Saviour weep
Over His people's sin,
Because we will not let Him keep
The soul He died to win
Ye hearts that love the Lord,
If at this sight ye burn,
See that in thought, in deed, in word,
Ye hate what made Him mourn."

Book Reviews

OLD FAITH AND NEW KNOWLEDGE. By Dr. James H. Snowden. Cloth, pp. 270. Harper & Brothers, New York City. Price $2.50.

This is the latest note for Modernism, fresh from the press. With Dr. Snowden's large perspective of this theme; his profound scholarship and evident sincerity, we find a winsome strain in this volume. Only occasionally does the acrimonious break out in contempt of the so-called "Fundamentalists". But we may forgive him that. It runs in the blood of the school he defends. Strange to say, the term was given to the believers in the old faith by a Modernist; and they have had to wear the lable. But they can stand it. The case is somewhat analagous to the invasion of a thief, who, when the distracted father attempts to defend his home and family, impudently asks, "What's the matter with you, anyway"? Because, sincere Christians, happy in their possession of the ancient faith, express unwillingness to accept this novel interpretation of truth, they are put in the class of disturbers of the peace, malcontents and moss-grown fossils. Indeed, one of the company is bold enough to say that the real heretics today are the old-school Christians.

Now, let it be known that Modernism is an intellectual attitude towards revealed religion. And the only revealed religion is Christianity. If it is revealed, what has "the new knowledge" to contribute to it? Dr. Snowden says that religion needs science. If Christianity is only a religion, the assumption holds; but if it is a faith, as the Word of God terms it, we cannot see how science may be required to clarify and energize it. For the Christian faith is a passion for a Person. And the love that is embraced in that union is totally beyond the realm of scientific achievement. We agree with Dr. Snowden that "theology is not dead and dessicated science, an ancient mummy in its coffin". But that is what Dr. Snowden thinks it is. But we know it is not. When he insists that "it is still full of new blood, fresh life", we fully agree with him. But we do not see that his science makes any contribution to this ideality.

And this leads us to comment upon his definition of truth: "Truth is a subjective state of mind in which one part of our experience of reality is brought into working relations with other parts of our experience, and in general, truth is harmonized experience." Now, we must submit that any one can make his experience dove-tail with what he may deem is truth. The Christian Scientist, Theosophist, atheist and what not have experience. In contrast, we hear again the divine words, "I am the Way, the Truth and the Life". In the name of consistency, what would Dr. Snowden do in a mission hall before the downs and outs, who silently ask, "What must I do to be saved"? Or with that most numerous of men, the man on the street? We do not know. Does he?

No Christian believer, cherishing "the faith once for all delivered unto the saints", will deny himself the light and inspiration that comes from science. But he stoutly refuses to inject into his faith the skepticism which the champions of the new knowledge gratuitously insist as imperative to the right comprehension of that faith. We fail to see how the thought of God, the sense of the need of forgiveness of sin, the regeneration of the Holy Spirit, the joy of fellowship with the risen and exalted Lord Jesus, can in any way be enriched by an arbitrary science to the exclusion of the wealth of truth revealed in the Word of God.

But we do not disparage this book. It is a fuller exposition of the subject than that of Professor Nash, some time since. It deserves a careful reading by those who feel the need of being informed of the tendency to which Modernism is drifting. And the discriminating reader will know just where to depart from the author; and he will reach the end of the volume to repeat, with Dr. Snowden, the Apostles' Creed, which from the whole tendency of the book is his ultimate belief. All of us will find here a thesaurus of information valuable for reference (the index is most helpful) and will come to see that while we may not accept all that is here presented, the sincerity of the author and his compeers is not to be slightingly regarded. For in the air about us is the increasing cry, "We do not need intellectual but spiritual enlightenment. Show us how to find God." Unquestionably, Modernism will have its part in "the return (as Harnack has stated) to positions that have been forsaken".

THE MARRIAGE SERVICE AND AFTER. By Rev. Harvey C. Parke; with an introduction by Rt. Rev. W. Bertrand Stevens, D. D., Ph. D., LL. D. Cloth, pp. 41. The Morehouse Publishing Co., Milwaukee, Wis. Price 75 cents (paper 35 cents).

The writer has made a bold invasion into a field in which real thinking is quite unexpected. The trousseau and the endless preparations, the rehearsal, the excitement of the marriage day, the wedding breakfast, the gifts, the heathenish departure with showers of rice, confetti, rags and tinware tagged on to the car are hardly conducive to sincere consideration. Even the service is made a necessary accession, because it cannot be eliminated. No one really "thinks" what it all means.

But our author has sounded a note of remonstrance, kindly and appealing. The service is analyzed in simple exposition; the new prayers are explained; and the responsibilities of the married life are set forth in winsomeness. The need of a condescension, each to the other, the cultivation of a love that shall make the honeymoon perpetual, the claim of the Church for attendance at services and the right appreciation of the sacraments, the use of family prayer and grace at table are not urged with dogmatism, but an earnest olnging to help establish the ideal Christian family. If any suggestion were in order, we might say that perhaps it would suit some brides if the certificate of marriage were amplified and the marriage service incorporated.

"BISHOP CANDLER ON POLITICS."

Mr. Editor:

Much ado is being made over Bishop Candler's recent utterance on preachers taking a hand in politics. Politics is a term of many definitions, but they all center in this. "The science and art of government." Are preachers subjects of government, and yet are they forbidden by God or man to open their mouths as to what kind of government they are to live under and who shall administer it? There are three institutions in this world—all of divine origin—the family, the Church and the State. To two of these—if not the third—every one belongs by birth. If he is not born a member of the "household of faith" it is his birthright; yea, it is his duty; he cannot escape condemnation if he neglects it. It is entirely optional with him as to whether he belongs to any other organization or not. He must belong to these three. The acme of human happiness and human prosperity is to be acquired through these three organizations. Two of them belong solely to this world—they seek man's happiness and well being through obedience to God in this life. The third contributes to his well being here and hereafter. Since we are necessarily a part of the State and our happiness and prosperity are in no small measure dependent upon the policies and management of the State, it follows that we are most vitally interested in its rulers. A man's becoming a member of the invisible kingdom does not void his citizenship in the visible. His duties to the visible kingdom are as peremptory and as positive as those he owes to the invisible. "Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers, * * * for they are ministers of God to thee for good." This is just as positive and comes from the same source as "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and Him only shalt thou serve". Are preachers, then, to have no interest and no voice as to the human powers that rule him —whether a Mohammedan, a Mormon, a heathen or a Christian, black or white, infidel or atheist rules over the kingdom in which he is to live? Does the Bishop mean to say that it should make no difference with a peracher whether Caesar or Nero reigns, Ingersoll or Gladstone— that he transcends his rights to raise his hand or cast his vote to promote the election of the one or prevent that of the other? Is a preacher to be silent when he sees atheism about to get possession of the State and turn God's own institution against Him—when he sees the forces of sin and Satan about to get possession of the ship of State and steer it off into foreign and rebellious seas—is the preacher to stand silently by and not even raise a cry of alarm? As a matter of fact, is not human government as much a divine institution as the Church? Is not the officer of the law God's minister, too? Is not Christianity interwoven through all the machinery of the State? The President and all the judges of ourcourts are inducted into office by an oath taken on the Bible. The State recognizes the Christian Sabbath and the Christian religion as instituted by the God of the Bible.

So it would seem, nominally at least, we live in a Christian government. Does any one suppose that Jesus Christ is indifferent as to what kind of civil rulers we have— and are his ministers to be indifferent? St. Paul exhorts Timothy to "pray for kings and all that are in authority that we may lead quiet and peaceable lives in all godliness and honesty"—and since so much depends on "kings and all who are in authority", is it not reasonable and right that we should have some voice and vote as to who these kings and rulers should be? Are we to believe that when Jesus said, "My kingdom is not of this world", He meant to express His supreme indifference, unconcern and irresponsibility as to the character of our civil rulers? This is the way the newspapers and a certain class are interpreting the Bishop. They are making him say that it is no concern of mine whether a thief or an honest man, a capable or incapable—infidel or atheist, heathen or Christian, black or white wields the civil scepter. The newspapers and little top waters all over the land are attributing with much satisfaction and glee this position to our Senior Bishop Candler. I can never believe that Jesus meant that because one is a Christian minister he should sit on the fence with perfect indifference as to what kind of an earthly government he lives under. If that be so, there can be no such virtue as patriotism for a minister. When war breaks out he sits off as a silent spectator, indifferent as to which side wins. When two parties are contending for dominion—one for saloons, liberty and license —the other for curbing human liberty and enacting wholesome laws for the protection of human life and the promotion of happiness—because he is a minister he must hands off and play the indifferent.

It is agreed that partisan politics has no place in the pulpit—and I am sure that is all the Bishop meant. But the pulpit has a right—yea, a duty—to inculcate moral truth. The temperance question is moral and prohibition runs all through the Bible. "Thou shalt not" is on almost every page. Nothing could please the godless more than for preachers to let up on prohibition. Good government is as essential to the peace and prosperity of the Church as the water is to the life of the fish. The author of Acts tells us when persecution ceased—"Then had the churches rest throughout all Judea * * * and were edified and * * * multiplied." "When the righteous are in authority the people rejoice—but when the wicked beareth rule the people mourn." "Happy is that people whose God is the Lord." Does it then make no difference with a Christian minister whether the righteous or wicked reign? Would Bishop Candler sit down and fold his hands and not turn his hand or cast his vote to promote the election of the one nor to prevent that of the other? To do so would put him in the category of the Laodiceans, to whom the Lord said: "I have somewhat against thee." I don't believe a man so great and good as Bishop Candler meant to take any such an illogical position.

"BACK TO THE PRAYER BOOK."

Mr. Editor:

It was intimated in a late letter that something more would be said, with your permission, touching the prevalent disposition among the clergy and officers generally of the Protestant Episcopal Church to omit parts of the service of the Prayer Book and in many ways to neglect its use, and that thus many of them (and most of them unwittingly) were hastening the time when the Anglo-Catholics— the Thirty-Nine Articles being then put out of the way, as is their hope and effort—would boldly begin their campaign to substitute the Holy Eucharist or Mass for the Lord's Supper or Holy Communion—to use the Prayer Book names—and then the American Missal to square in every way, except in language, with the Roman Missal.

If there be any doubt of the intent and purpose of this party in the Church, suppose we let them tell it. Read the following, a sstated in The Chronicle, from which we quote: "On Maunday Thursday the Bishop-Coadjutor blessed the oils at the solemn mass. The watch before the Blessed Sacrament was kept until the mass of the Pre-Sanctified on Good Friday, &c. The services mentioned are nowhere authorized by the Book of Common Prayer." (This from the service during Holy Week in the Milwaukee Cathedral.- Sound Beach, St. Saviour's Mission. Among other things, it is stated "a new awakening to the beauty of prayer is evident. This last directly traceable to Father Joseph's emphasis upon the rosary as a method of prayer." This from the Church of St. Hilary (in England): "The service had been pretty well reconstructed until there were in it but reminders of the Prayer Book." From the Diocese of Central New York: "The Bishop's personal paper in its leading editorial affronts the dignity of the Book of Common Prayer as it ridicules the Thirty-Nine Articles." And this from the Diocese of New York: "Everywhere there is a tendency to more frequent Communion; the mass is gradually supplanting morning prayer as the chief Sunday act of worship in many cathedrals and parish churches." Every disuse or misuse of the Prayer Book so far countenances if it does not further this effort on the part of the Anglo-Catholics to supplant as they boldly proclaim is their purpose the Morning Service and Prayer Book by the Holy Eucharist or Mass.

If it be true that the mutilation or misuse, or even the neglect of the Prayer Book, is fraught with such danger to continuance of the protest nature of this Church, we may well pause long enough to ask ourselves is the Prayer Book being neglected, its services shortened or omitted entirely to the detriment of the spiritual growth and uplift of the people as well as to the furtherance of the purpose of its enemies? The question may be so easily answered and in the affirmative, it is feared, by attendance upon any of our services in the Episcopal Church that we will not tarry to verify the statement. But it may be wise to stop long enough to call attention to the fact that in attendance upon the meetings of the auxiliaries and societies of like nature one but rarely meets with the use of the Prayer Book or any part of it. The officers of these societies are busy with the little leaflets furnished by the National Council. It is not asserted here that the purpose is sinister, but the effect is that the Prayer Book is being eliminated, lost sight of and so neglected and the opposition aided in their effort to destroy it.

Look at some of these omissions and their evil effect.

Following the Bible, as always, the Prayer Book loses no opportunity to stress the great fact of the gospel that sin prevails in the human heart—"all have sinned and come short of the glory of God", and that "the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin". Hence in the morning and evening service of the Prayer Book the exhortation, in reminding the people why they come to church, twice over they are told that it is, among other things, for the acknowledgment and confession of sin. Hence, also, in the virile, soul-searching exhortation in the Communion Service, he who communes is reminded that sin is to be repented of and reparation made or he communes unworthily.

But of late this last mentioned exhortation is omitted altogether; we rarely hear the General Confession at the evening service; and the Litany is well-nigh remanded to the past of things forgotten. Great harm comes here generally, as well as that especially to be mentioned, as it shows a tendency to minimize, if not cultivate, the thought and sometimes teaching, now all too prevalent, that there is no sin any more—indeed, that there never was any: and that the doctrine of the Bloody Sacrifice was and is a great mistake and is no longer to be taught.

These omissions, and others which might be mentioned, do not necessarily leave those so doing them open to the charge of denial of these vital truths which go to establish the integrity of the gospel message, but their omission seems to show a want of interest in the subject and a due appreciation of the danger this Episcopal Church of ours is in.

Hear this: The Anglo-Catholics boldly asserted in their prospectus or announcement of the Milwaukee Eucharistic (note the word used) Congress "that the seven sacraments are able to cure any ill that flesh is to hear". Or this from the Living Church, as it assures the Christian Century upon its enquiry about a certain Senator who was being flayed by secular press for his participation in certain political rascality in his native State "that the sacraments of the Church or the Mass (with no apparent need of repentance and reparation) were ordained to bring peace to such burdened souls". And above all this from the Dean of Nashotah Seminary in the Living Church as he ends an earnest article published therein exhorting young men to come into the ministry of the Church that they might bring souls to the cross? no! to Jesus? No! "but many souls to the sacraments"!

A strong and determined effort on the part of those who value the Prayer Book for what it has done for them and the Church will restore it to its proper place in the public worvhip of the Church. This will do much to stop the tendency to its neglect and help greatly to stem the tide of Romish practices which are setting in toward the Church. Back to the Prayer Book.

JOSIAH R. ELLIS.

Church Intelligence

Episcopalians Lead in Gains.

According to the returns being published by the Census Bureau of the United States, the Protestant Episcopal Church shows a much larger percentage of gains in membership than any other religious organization thus reported. The figures given are 1,092,821 members in 1916 and 1,859,966 in 1926, the gain being 767,145 in the ten years, more than 70 per cent. The Roman Catholic Church reports membership of 18,604,850, a gain for the ten years of 20 per cent.

Presbyterians reported 1,894,630 members in 1926, compared with 1,611,251 ten years before; Northern Methodists, 4,080,777, compared with 3,717,785; Southern Methodists, 2,487,-694 and 2,114,479; Northern Baptists, 1,390,438 and 1,232,135; Congregationalists, 901,846 and 791,274. The negro Baptists show 3,196,823 members in 1926, compared with 2,938,579 in 1916.

All the larger denominations show gains in membership, but losses in number of churches except the Roman Catholic, which gained 1,385 churches. The decrease in number of Protestant churches is supposed to have been caused by increase in use of the automobile and the generally better roads in the rural districts, enabling people to go longer distances to church and resulting in the extinction of many small congregations which had monthly services.

The Jews report in the country 2,948 congregations, with membership of 4,-087,357. No figures of their membership or synagogues for 1916 are given.

Jews Becoming Christions.

In a recent number of the Church of England newspaper a writer sends strong protest against criticisms of missionary work among the Jews. He says in the last century no less than 250,-000 Jews have become Christians, according to the Missionary Council of the Church of England, and between 250 and 300 clergy of the Church are of Jewish origin. He gives a long and impressive list of converts and says the head offices of the society for missions to the Jews in Lincoln's Inn Fields, London, are covered with pictures of Christianized Jews who have won distinction in church work and various professions and avocations.

The Bishop of London to His Diocese.

Let no one have his holiday spoilt by the fact that the Prayer Book did not pass the House of Commons. It is just an annoying "set back", nothing more.

Perhaps the Church was not really sufficiently united to have deserved or used a new Prayer Book. It was no doubt the disunion in the Church which caused the loss of the Prayer Book.

Misinformed.

If I had been a Labor Member and had believed the 2,000 Anglo-Catholics had said they would not obey its directions (which they never really said in so many words), and that 4,000 Evangelicals said they would walk out of the Church if it ever became compulsory, I think I should probably have voted against it myself.

What we have to do is to produce unity (not uniformity) among ourselves. We must make up our minds that there always have been and always will be both Evangelicals and Anglo-Catholics in the Church of England, and we must learn to live together and respect one another. Indeed, we should all learn from one another.

I have been preaching lately on the text, "One Lord, one Faith, one Baptism, one God and Father of all, Who is above all and through all and in all", and it is a profound truth.

A dear odl Evangelical clergyman died in my house during a meeting of Continental chaplains, and as he was dying I said to him the same things as I had said to Father Russell, of St. Alban's, Holborn, and Father Wilson, of St. Augustine's, Stepney, and I buried him with the same prayers.

Catholicity of the Church.

The Church of England is at once both Catholic and Evangelical. If the Cross is the great message of the Evangelicals, so is it the heart and meaning of the great Choral Eucharist of the Anglo-Catholic.

"Look, Father, look on His astonished face,
And only look on us as found in Him!"

No Real Difference.

If "Jesus only" is the motto of the Evangelical, so again is it also the motto of the Anglo-Catholic. "As I kneel in the church and say my prayers to the Living Jesus, I am saying to myself what the Salvation Army lass says to herself, 'Safe in the arms of Jesus' "—so said once to me a young Anglo-Catholic priest, who is now a Bishop. We are, including the orthodox Modernists, serving one Lord; we die in one Faith; we have one Baptism, which includes also one Confirmation, for Confirmation is a supplement of Baptism; and one God and Father to whom we all pray. Our essential unity far outweighs our external differences.

The Bishops will meet again the last week in September and will mature their plans, and you will all settle down under me as your Bishop for the autumn work. I shall probably hold a Synod of the clergy of the Diocese on October 24 or 25 and shall lay my plans before them with absolute confidence that all my directions will be obeyed.

The Church has been thrown back upon itself by the State, and relying upon the inherent spiritual authority of its Episcopate, it will go forward to its fresh task undismayed.

Missionary to the Philippines.

Miss Chevillette Branford, of Charleston, S. C., left that city last week for Manila, Philippine Islands, going as a missionary from the Diocese of Lower California. She has aspired from childhood to be a missionary and has taken a special course of studies with that purpose, being a graduate of Memminger High School, Charleston, and of Winthrop College. The Young People's Service League of Christ Church, Charleston, gave a farewell entertainment in her honor, the entire membership of the League and many of the congregation of the church attending.

In China.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs, Dr. C. T. Wang, and the Minister of Finance, Mr. C. V. Soomg, of the Chinese Nationalist government have been elected to the newly organized Board of Directors of St. John's University, Shanghai. These two and one other Chinese were elected by the Alumni. Other directors are elected by the Shanghai Diocesan Synod, the University Council in China, and the Trustees in America.

Missionaries Needed.

Forty-seven missionaries were appointed in 1927 for foreign and extra-continental fields. In every instance these recruits filled vacancies caused by death or retirement. All our distant mission fields are under-staffed to such an extent as to make the opening of any new areas practically impossible. —Department of Missions Report.

Creeds Appeal to Young Men.

Bishop Manning, in the space of six or seven weeks early in the summer, received sixteen applications from young men to be admitted as postulants for Holy Orders. Their applications were received directly after the Diocesan Convention, at which the Bishop had emphasized the obligation of the clergy to preach the religion of the Church's creeds.

St. Agnes Hospital.

Bouquets: The director of the Duke Endowment Fund, which makes some contribution to St. Agnes Hospital, Raleigh, N. C., writes to Bishop Cheshire, "The work of St. Agnes Hospital is an encouragement and inspiration as to what may be done on the basis of limited means in the hospital care of negroes. I cannot too strongly commend its management", and more to the same effect.

Find Strayed Sheep!

West Missouri Diocese is hunting for isolated church people by publishing in the rural newspapers a request that they send their names to the Diocesan Department of Missions.

Faithful.

One of the long-distance travel records must surely belong to Archdeacon Geiger of East Tennessee. A Knoxville parish paper reports that he traveled 25,000 miles in his missionary work between January and June, 1928. Twice a month his schedule calls for four services and 164 miles of driving; 8:30, Kingsport; 11, Greenville; afternoon, Tate; night, Alcoa, and home to Cleveland. His achievements are credited to "devotion, a fine constitution and good roads".

Industrious.

The Presbyterian Magazine for July says that the foreign missionaries are again at work in twenty-eight of the thirty-five Presbyterian stations in China, and work had not been wholly discontinued in any of the stations.

Health in Egypt.

Eight English missionaries went out to Egypt and the Sudan in 1899, and in the more than twenty-eight years since then, not one of them died or even had a serious illness until this summer, when there occurred the death of Canon Gairdner, of Cairo. He was not only outstanding as a missionary to Moslems, but was one of the greatest living Arabic and Islamic scholars. Bishop MacInnes, of Jerusalem, and Bishop Gwynne, of Egypt, are two others of the eight.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop.

In the Diocese of Washington and under its direct authority, may be found several institutions which are doing splendid, worth-while work, but which are practically unknown, except to a small minority, whose hands and hearts are charged with their care. One of the older of these is the "Episcopal Home for Children", located now in Anacostia, but looking forward in the near future to an entirely new set of buildings, a beautiful new site, recently acquired for the Home. At the present time a visitor to the Anacostia buildings would find a deserted place, for all of its occupants, large and small, have moved temporarily to the Bell Home at Colonial Beach, where, with some other children in need of a swim, good air, wholesome food and a good bed, they are enjoying a real vacation. The Bell Home at Colonial Beach started in 1895 by the late Dr. Willard G. Davenport, and made possible by the generosity of Professor and Mrs. Melville Bell, was instituted as a place for summer outings for children below par physically and unable otherwise to get such an outing, but it was soon apparent that this must be only the beginning of a larger work for the needy children of the District of Columbia all the year round. Out of this need grew the nucleus of the present home at Anacostia, kindly administered in the beginning by Mrs. Davenport. The present buildings were the generous gift of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Ewing as a memorial to Mrs. Ewing's mother, Mrs. William F. Cochran.

The administrative policy of the Home has been as far as possible to avoid the bugbear of "red tape", and an institutional atmosphere has been replaced, in a remarkable degree, by a real home feeling. Practical home training, wholesome recreation, and Christian education have been outstanding features of its program. For a number of years the present facilities of the Home have been entirely inadequate to the needs and the present location has outgrown its entire usefulness. To meet this need of a change, a splendid gift was made a few years ago by an anoymous donor, not a Washington man, and not an Episcopalian, which has made possible the purchase of nine acres of land, ideally situated on Nebraska Avenue and Rock Creek Ford Road, a little southeast of Chevy Chase Circle. With this splendid tract of land for its new site, the Episcopal Home for Children has an inspiring objective in the speedy erection of buildings, which will represent the highest standards of child welfare work. There must be light, airy buildings, outdoor playgrounds, adequate provision for indoor recreation, special facilities for the care of infants and very young children, an infirmary and an administrative building.

Through the generous gift of $50,000 by Dr. William C. Rives, the cost of one of the new buildings is provided for. From other gifts and funds earned in various ways by the Women's Board an additional $50,000 is also available and will be used in some suitable way to replace the memorial building, given twenty years ago by Mr. and Mrs. Ewing. In addition to these available funds, a total of $250,000 is still needed for buildings and equipment.

It is hoped now that every member of the diocese will feel a particular interest and responsibility in the raising of this fund, so that the building may go forward without delay.

The government of the Home is taken care of by a board of incorporators, of which the Bishop of Washington is chairman, and a Board of Lady Managers, of which Mrs. David Meade Lea is President. There are also a House Committee, honorary members, auxiliary members, and monthly committees. The latter are composed of members of the several parishes who take one of the months of the year to be directly responsible for work for the Home.

The Home has always been directly dependent for its maintenance upon the generosity and interest of the Church people of Washington, and because of their splendid support, has been able to do a piece of constructive work which will broaden and cover a larger field of service with the ever increasing love and generosity of the people.

The Episcopal Home for Children is endorsed by the Charity Endorsement Committee of the District of Columbia and the Diocesan Board of Social Service. The Treasurer of the Building Fund is Mr. Carl B. Keferstein, Stoneleigh Court, Washington, D. C.

"Motor Corps."

The General Convention of 1928, to be held in Washington in October, will be a far cry from one of those of the early days. This will be of modern times, with all the "modern" features which have crowded in upon us so thick and fast in the last decade or two. One of these features will be the Convention Motor Corp. This committee's work is already well lined up. Hundreds of automobiles will be at the service of the Convention. Delegates will be met at the train, transported from building to building, given sight-seeing trips and any other rides which are needed. Women chauffeurs will be just as plentiful as men, too, for women who drive their own cars are offering their cars for the Convention, as well as their time and their service.

Mr. Merritt O. Chance is in charge of the Motor Corp and is glad to have the offer of more cars. He may be reached at Convention Business Headquarters, 917 Fifteenth Street, N. W., Washington, D. C. The Convention is a splendid opportunity for Washington Church people and, being host on so memorable an occasion, is just great.
